Whenever any licensed vessel is transferred, in whole or in part, to any person who is not at the time of such transfer a citizen of and resident within the United States, or is employed in any other trade than that for which she is licensed, or is found with a forged or altered license or one granted for any other vessel, such vessel, with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the cargo found on board her, shall be forfeited. But vessels which may be licensed for the mackerel fishery shall not incur such forfeiture by engaging in catching cod or fish of any other description whatever.

275. FORFEITURE OF VESSEL AND MERCHANDISE.

Any merchandise on board any vessel which belongs, in good faith, to any person other than the master, owner, or mariners of such vessel, and upon which the duties have been paid or secured according to law, shall be exempted from any forfeiture under this title. (R. S., 4311–4390.)

[R. S., 4379.]

In every case where a forfeiture of any vessel or merchandise shall accrue, it shall be the duty of the collector or other proper officer, who shall give notice of the seizure of such vessel or of such merchandise, to insert in the same advertisement the name and the place of residence of the person to whom any such vessel and merchandise belonged or were consigned at the time of such seizure, if the same be known to him.

[R. S., 4380.]

All penalties and forfeitures which shall be incurred by virtue of this title (R. S., 4311–4390) may be sued for, prosecuted, and recovered as penalties and forfeitures incurred by virtue of the laws relating to the collection of duties, and shall be appropriated in like manner, except when otherwise expressly prescribed.

179. ENROLLED AND LICENSED VESSELS IN FOREIGN TRADE.

If any vessel, enrolled or licensed, shall proceed on a foreign voyage without first giving up her enrollment and license to the collector of the district comprehending the port from which she is about to proceed on such voyage, and being duly registered by such collector, every such vessel, together with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the merchandise so imported therein, shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture.

For fishing vessels there is a special permit to touch and trade, authorized as follows:

[R. S., 4364.]

Whenever any vessel licensed for carrying on the fishery is intended to touch and trade at any foreign port, it shall be the duty of the master or owner to obtain permission for that purpose from the collector of the district where such vessel may be, previous to her departure, and the master of every such vessel shall deliver like manifests and make like entries, both of the vessel and of the merchandise on board, within the same time and under the same penalty as are by law provided for vessels of the United States arriving from a foreign port.

[R. S., 4365.]

Whenever a vessel licensed for carrying on the fisheries is found within 3 leagues of the coast, with merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture exceeding the value of $500, without having such permission as is directed by the preceding section, such vessel, together with the merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture imported therein, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on the 30th day of last March I introduced a bill, which is somewhat lengthy, but the purpose of which is expressed in two lines, and these I will read:

No tolls shall be levied by the Government of the United States for the use of the Panama Canal.

I am vain enough to believe that the purpose sought to be subserved by this measure will prove, if it should be accepted, a solution of the unhappy controversy which now engages our attention and is distracting that of the entire Nation. I should not speak so confidently if this proposition were original with me, or one which had not received the exhaustive consideration of a man whose education and experiences qualified him to speak as one with authority. Long ago, and before the present controversy could even have been anticipated, the free use of the canal for the world's commerce had become the subject of very serious consideration.

The Panama Canal was primarily designed for the benefit not only of the people of the United States, but for the benefit and welfare of all the world. It was, as the eloquent Senator from Massachusetts has just declared, a project which had been contemplated ever since the discovery of the Isthmus, which had been the dreams of statesmen, the ambitions of engineers, and the hopes of captains of commerce and industry from generation to generation. It has finally become a great achievement, and in the course of a few short months it will be open to the commerce of the world.

In 1910 Robley D. Evans, one of America's greatest admirals, most accomplished seamen, and purest citizens, capable by reason of his long familiarity with marine affairs, both naval and commercial, of passing judgment upon this question, asserted in a series of articles published in Hampton's Magazine that the canal could not be made to accomplish its purposes and be to the United States all that was expected of it unless it was made free to the commerce of the world.

My attention was then attracted to these articles. My own views were then entirely opposed to those which Admiral Evans elaborated with such exhaustive ability, but after reading and reflecting upon them I became convinced that his contention was abundantly sustained by the reasons which he gave to support it. If the Members of the Senate will transport themselves to the quiet of the admiral's library in the year 1910, before passion had been aroused by the appeals which are now unfortunately rife, which proceed alike from the lips of Members of both Houses of Congress and from the columns of the press, and consider the subject in that tranquil atmosphere, I believe they will reach the conclusion for which he then contended, and, acting upon his suggestion, throw the canal open to the world as America's contribution to the development of the commerce not only of our own people but of all the nations of the earth.

I assume this to be the attitude of the Senate and read as my address in behalf of this measure the arguments to which I have referred, to the end that the Senate and the country may be informed of them, and make their judgment accordingly. I do not approve of everything which the admiral asserts in his discussion, but I shall not interrupt its presentation either to comment upon or to discuss them. Neither, Mr. President, do I expect to add much to what seems to be a complete and unanswerable demonstration of the proposition concerning which the articles were prepared and published.

The first appeared in the month of January, 1910, and is entitled "The Panama Canal: Its Effect, when Completed, on the Commerce of the United States."

[Hampton's Magazine, January, 1910.]

"THE PANAMA CANAL.

"ITS EFFECT WHEN COMPLETED ON THE COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES.

(Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans.)

"In discussing the question of the Panama Canal, which has been so long before the people of the United, and which is of keen interest to the world at large, certain things must be taken for granted in the absence of actual facts. It is unfortunate that this is so; but in a work of such magnitude, undertaken, as it was, without positive data as to the physical conditions that would be met at certain points in its progress, this becomes necessary.

"Let us assume, then, that the canal will be finished and ready for business at the date proclaimed by those in charge of its construction, viz., during the summer of 1916. And, further, let us assume that the completed work will have cost the people of the United States the sum of $400,000,000. What will be its immediate effect on the commerce of this country?"

This, Mr. President, it will be noted, is the main proposition which runs all through this discussion—the effect of the completion of the canal upon the commerce of the United States.

"During the discussion of the question of an interoceanic canal its advocates and friends have held that a waterway through the Isthmus of Panama would extend our coasting trade from the Atlantic to include the entire coast of the United States from Los Angeles, Cal., to Sitka, Alaska. It was said that our schooner trade, which is undoubtedly the greatest of its kind in the world, would be enormously increased in volume and that sailing craft passing through the canal would dot the Pacific with their white wings, as they now do the Atlantic.

"Many people believed this pleasing story and felt that our shipbuilders would reap a rich harvest from the great number of vessels that would have to be constructed to meet the demands of this new condition. It may not be inaccurate to say that this prospect brought many to support the proposal for a canal who would otherwise have opposed it.

"At the present time our sailing coasting vessels carry an enormous amount of freight, and if it were possible to pass them through the canal and send them on their way on the Pacific economically they would perform the same work on the Pacific side of the continent. But can this be done? And will the character of the goods to be supplied warrant the assumption, even if the passage can be economically made?

"Let us assume that a four or five masted schooner loads at New York with 3,000 tons of freight bound for San Francisco. She can, of course, carry this cargo more cheaply than a vessel under steam could perform the same service, if the element of time be discarded. If the prospective consumer of the freight has no fixed date when he will require it, does not care whether it comes to him at the end of 3 months or 12, then the sailing vessel can do the work more cheaply than the one under steam. The question of time, however, is the important one in the problem; and when we consider other freight than coal, et cetera, time becomes, obviously, of the utmost importance.

"When this schooner, which we have seen loaded in New York, reaches a point five or six hundred miles from the eastern entrance to the canal she will encounter first light and baffling winds and then a considerable period of calms, during which she will drift with the currents, some days nearer and some days farther from her first port of destination. Many cases are known of sailing vessels which have spent two months drifting about in this way before reaching an anchorage off what some day may be the entrance to the canal. While this may not be the case always, still this probable condition must be taken into account in shipping goods to arrive at their destination on or before a certain fixed date. Promptness of delivery will be the ruling factor in shipping all freight through the canal, except coal and ores of various kinds.

"The damaging effect on sails and rigging of thrashing about in calms and light weather is well known to all who have followed the sea, and this must be taken into account when making rates for such a voyage as our schooner has started on. This cost will constitute a considerable item and form a serious handicap when the cheaply run tramp steamer enters the contest; and this tramp is not the worst enemy of the sailing coaster, as we shall see later on.

"It may be assumed that towing companies will be organized to have tugs cruise in this calm belt and pick up sailing vessels and tow them two or three or even four hundred miles to the entrance to the canal, but this will add largely to the expenses of the trip. Even if this be done, the towing must be continued through the entire length of the canal and well out to sea on the Pacific side, where another belt of calms and doubtful winds will be encountered. Add to this towing bill the canal charges, and I think it must be evident to the student of such matters that a sailing vessel, of any kind of a commercial character, will be a rare sight in the Panama Canal. A few sailing yachts may use it, but they are not considered in this writing.

"The effect of the Panama Canal on sailing craft trading between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans will be precisely the same as was the effect of the Suez Canal on the same class of vessels trading between Atlantic ports and the East Indies—they will all disappear from the water and their places will be taken by steam vessels of some kind. The completion of the canal will be the death sentence to the last line of sailing ships which have held out until now only because the distances were too long to be covered economically by steam vessels requiring convenient coaling ports. In other words, this great waterway, instead of proving, as has been promised, a boon and an upbuilder of the American sailing craft, will prove their worst enemy, and will kill the few remaining sailing ships under our flag as well as under that of other nations. The cargo now carried by them will find its way in the bottoms of tramp steamers or barges, or cross the continent by one of the many transcontinental railroads."

It will be seen, Mr. President, that it is here assumed for the best of reasons that the completion of this canal will result in the disappearance of sailing craft from the merchant marine of the world and that the supposed benefit to that class of transportation is not only nonexistent, but that its effect will be disastrous and destructive.

The admiral proceeds:

"The only possible remedy for this injury to one of the greatest of our industries is the free passage of the canal by such vessels. Unless this can be secured we must give up all hope or thought of sending goods from one ocean to the other by means of vessels propelled by sails. The schooner fleet which now carries so much freight on the Atlantic coast can never use the canal to advantage, but must confine its business to present limits. It is a well-known fact that this is diminishing from year to year.

"Let us now consider the effect of the completed canal on our steam coasting trade. Here the prospect is in some ways very much brighter. If the supply of steam vessels is found to be sufficient to carry the vast quantity of goods of all kinds that must pass from ocean to ocean, then the future is indeed bright for those who own and control them, but it is a fact beyond question that such is not the case and that we have barely enough such ships on our Atlantic coast to do the work between the ports on that seaboard, and on the Pacific coast barely enough to do the work there. They could not, with any show of success, be sent through the canal without neglecting the work on which they are now engaged. Where, then, is this new fleet to come from?

"The first cost of iron or steel ships in this country is greater than that of those built in England or Germany, and the cost of running them once in service is also greater. The additional cost of our home-built ships is due to the cheapness of labor in foreign countries, particularly in Germany, where strikes are practically unknown and where the wages paid workmen are from 25 to 30 per cent less than here. As this cheap labor affects all the material that goes into the ship, or rather the cost of producing the material of which the ship is made, it must control the price of the finished article.

"It costs more to run an American ship because of our archaic navigation laws. A foreign merchant captain in command of a ship puts to sea, and if he finds incompetent or undesirable men among his crew he discharges them at the first port he enters and ships others to fill their places. He simply pays them what is due them and the undesirable men are landed on the dock to look after themselves. An American captain in the same circumstances must act very differently. If he wishes to ship new men, he must either continue the undesirable ones among his crew or pay their way back to the port where they were first shipped. The expense thus incurred is much more than appears at first sight, and to avoid it our captains sometimes resort to illtreatment of their men, which causes desertion. Deserters are cared for by the American consul and by him returned to their home ports.

"The wages of officers and men of the American merchant marine are higher than those paid by either England or Germany, and the food supplied the men is more expensive. The law regulates this, fortunately, and there is no evading it. As foreign ships can not trade from one of our ports to another we do not come in competition with them in our domestic trade.

"We may therefore take it for granted that we shall be confined to the commerce of our own coast on the future as we are at present and leave what other trade may seek the canal to the ships of other nations. Without going outside this domestic sphere of action our steam coasting trade would be vastly benefited by the canal, provided always the great waterway may be economically used, but unless this can be done the transcontinental railroads will continue to carry the freight as they do at present.

"Long before the canal is ready for use there will come a demand in such ports as Galveston, New Orleans, and Mobile on the Atlantic side, and San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Francisco on the Pacific for ships to meet the demands of commerce—to be ready, in other words, for the business that will be ready for them when the canal has its opening day. Shipholders will no doubt meet this demand when made, but how can it ever be made unless the canal rates to be charged for transit are such as can be paid and still leave transportation rates less than those charged by the railroads for similar service?

"Obviously it can not be done, and, as in the case of our sailing craft, the steamers can gain no advantage in trade between the two oceans unless that advantage is conferred by a free canal. The first cost of the ships will be so great when added to the cost of running them, plus the canal rates, that water transportation will not attract capital when opposed to the present completed transcontinental railroads.

"It would seem, therefore, that any benefit to our domestic commerce from the Panama Canal will depend upon the rates to be charged for passing vessels through it. Unless these can be made satisfactory it is futile and misleading to hold that there will be any such benefit.

"The only remedy in sight is to make the canal free to American commerce, and if this can be done to rely for its benefits on the advantages to follow to the various industries that will naturally be affected."

This statement is perhaps of interest, as the opinion of this eminent citizen as to the construction of the clause in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which is now the subject of so much controversy:

"The objection to a canal free for American commerce only is found in the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, one clause of the which is as follows: 'The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such coniditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.'

"If this provision of the treaty is to be observed, and surely it must, then no exception can be made in favor of American vessels—they must pay the same traffic rates as vessels of other nations or stay out of the canal. In other words, the Government of the United States must maintain a waterway between the two oceans purely for the benefit of foreign commerce, without benefit to our domestic interests, because of conditions which were not known or not understood when the building of the canal was authorized. This will not appear to the American people, or to fair-minded people the world over, as a good business proposition, and they will look for means of relief. The same powers that made the treaty can make another which will correct the faults of the present one.

"It can not for a moment be fairly assumed that the Congress of the United States will tax the people of this country for the building and maintenance of a canal or other public work which will not only not be of any value to them, but will actually operate to their disadvantage by conferring benefits on foreign commerce which is competing with their own.

"That such will be the case no one can deny, in view of the more cheaply built and more cheaply operated foreign ships. If we create a great demand for freight carriers, which we certainly will do by building or digging the canal, and are unable to supply such carriers, we encourage others not only to build them; but, in addition, we will have to pay them to carry our products through our canal for us. In effect, this condition means that we will have given the foreign shipowner an advantage over the American shipowner.

"If conditions are as herein stated, the money for the Panama Canal could never have been voted without some treaty provision by which our commerce would have at least been placed on an equal footing with that of other countries. Therefore let the treaty be changed and so worded that the commerce of all foreign countries shall pay the same traffic rates and enjoy the same privileges while domestic commerce of the United States shall pass from ocean to ocean free, or at such nominal traffic rates as the Congress of the United States shall establish. If this can be done, it may be possible at some future date, when commercial lines have been established and business warrants it, to impose traffic rates which will in part pay the cost of maintaining and operating the canal without injury to such lines.

"Assuming that the present treaty must remain in force, let the Congress of the United States declare the canal free to the commerce of the world. This would mean that the people of the United States would pay the interest on the canal bonds and in addition the sum necessary to keep it in order and meet its operating expenses and thus secure the advantages and reap the profits, whatever they may be, of the commerce passing through it.

"We have established and now maintain the finest system of coast lights and buoys of any country in the world, without charging one cent to the vast commerce benefited by them. Our aids to navigation are known and appreciated the world over, and we maintain them for several reasons, which are not understood by those who pay the bills—the taxpayers of the country. In former years port and light duties were imposed on all vessels entering our harbors to meet these expenses, and such is, unfortunately, still the practice of some Governments. But most of them have followed the example of the United States—at her urgent solicitation, let it be noted—and have abolished port dues as applied to lights and buoys.

"From one end of our coast line to the other, from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico, from San Diego to Sitka, from one end of the Great Lakes to the other, and around the Hawaiian Islands and Porto Rico, the protecting circles of our coast lights touch one another, so that vessels may always take advantage of their assistance. There is not a river or harbor in all our vast territory that is not so buoyed as to be safe for any commerce that may seek it. The vast sums of money spent for the construction of all these aids to navigation and the millions that are annually appropriated for their care and operation are a free gift from the people of the United States to the commerce of the world. Not one cent is received directly in return for this great expenditure, though the benefits are distributed equally to the ships of all nations. But who can doubt the wisdom of those who have made our coasts and our harbors the safest in the world, thus tempting to our shores the commerce of all nations, with its final financial results?

"It may be, and doubtless will be, held by many that our coast lights are established and operated to prevent shipwrecks and avoid the loss of life and property. This is undoubtedly one of the reasons for their present efficient condition, and the safety of our coasting trade is another; but a very much more practical and businesslike reason will be apparent from a glance at the long lines of foreign vessels that daily pass to and from our seacoast cities, bringing to us the raw material from which we produce everything, from immigrants who are to become Senators and Representatives to the shoes worn by half the population of some foreign countries. It is in this sale of manufactured goods made possible and profitable by the importation of the finished products of our mills that our expenditure of so much money to aid the commerce of the world is justified. That this has been one of the factors in giving us our present position among the leading nations can not be doubted.

"This once admitted, what stands in the way of conferring another great benefit on those who follow the sea by declaring a dividend on the good will and charity of the United States by making the Panama Canal a free waterway to the commerce of the world and depending on the results to follow to our citizens for our compensation?"

Mr. President, I may digress here for a moment to add that we obtain not one cent of direct profit or return upon the millions which are expended, presumably at least, for the improvement of our great waterways which penetrate the interior from every coast. The benefit which we derive consists of that enlarged commerce and cheaper rates of transportation, to obtain and to stimulate which the tremendous annual appropriations are constantly made. When we add these to the vast appropriations both for construction and for maintenance that are made for that class of improvements to which the admiral refers, there certainly can be no reason why the question of interest upon bonds or of expenses of operation should be considered for a moment in the light of the larger benefit that will come by making this indeed a great international highway of commerce for all time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator as to the great benefits coming from commerce and as to the desirability of cheap water rates between our two coasts; but if these great benefits come from commerce, why should we not permit the vessels of other nations going through the canal to carry goods from one American port to the other?

Mr. THOMAS. There is no reason in the world which appeals to my judgment.

Mr. REED. I introduced a proposition of that kind. I simply wanted to get the Senator's opinion upon it. I think by letting all vessels engage in our coastwise trade, fixing a minimum charge, a small charge, we can solve this difficulty.

Mr. THOMAS. The policy for which I am contending, Mr. President, is entirely consistent with the purpose to be subserved by the bill which the Senator has introduced and which I believe would result in an enormous benefit to the consumers of this country so vast as to make the supposed benefit resulting from the present restriction of this coast trade to American-made and American-owned vessels wholly insignificant.

"Consider as a section of the Panama Canal, for a moment, the splendid new Ambrose Channel into the harbor of New York, now ready for use, constructed on the plea that it was necessary for our battleships, but, in fact, for the benefit of the ocean grayhounds and great freight ships of the Atlantic trade; consider the channel into Boston from the sea another such section; and the Delaware River, which has been deepened most of its length at enormous expense for the benefit of foreign trade, as a third. When you have done this, add to them the channels leading to Savannah, Charleston, New Orleans, and Galveston, and you will have a canal which does not compare unfavorably either in length or cost with your new waterway between the two oceans. The comparison may be carried much further by adding to our sum the Government work in the Great Lakes and at the falls of the St. Marys River, which are used by Canadian vessels as well as our own.

"The opposition to this plan of a free canal must come from those who claim that the commerce to pass through from ocean to ocean can and will pay traffic rates sufficient to declare a dividend on the cost of construction plus the cost of operating.

"From what has been said, it seems probable that our coasting trade or domestic commerce can only use the canal without traffic rates—at least for a term of years. It must be a free canal or no domestic commerce will pass through it. Therefore the dividends on bonds and the money for operating expenses must come from the traffic charges on these two classes: American foreign commerce, of which at present there is none, and the commerce of foreign countries which must use this route.

"Leaving American commerce out of the discussion for the moment, let us consider what revenue will come to the canal from the other source, viz, foreign commerce. This must be derived from two sources, and only two: First, from the ships that must use the canal because it is cheaper, no matter what the traffic rates may be, and, second, the ships that may be diverted from other routes because the new one is cheaper. Later on a third source of revenue may be considered; that is to say, the trade that will come because of the canal, but not now existing.

"It is a well-known fact to those who have given much study to the subject that trade once settled in a particular route or groove adheres to that route with great tenacity and resists all efforts to change its course. Why this should be so it is impossible to explain, but the fact remains and will have a direct bearing on the subject under discussion.

"The present traffic through the Suez Canal, which will be the great competitor of the Panama when completed, consists of two kinds: The first, that which uses it because it must do so no matter what the fees charged may be; and the second, that which uses it because it is cheaper to do so, and will continue to use it, unless the rates by the new canal are such as to make that the cheaper route.

"With the first, which comprises all the traffic from Europe to points beyond the Suez Canal as far as Hongkong, and probably to Shanghai and Yokohama, we have little interest in at this writing because there is no possibility of diverting it to Panama, unless we pay it to go that way. The distance is greatly in favor of the present route, and there are other advantages which weigh heavily against a change. Among these may be mentioned convenient coaling ports and important trading points along the entire route, two things which can never, in the nature of things, be supplied for the Panama route. All this traffic is compelled to use the Suez Canal because of the vast saving of distance over the passage by the way of the Cape of Good Hope and the better weather and sea conditions encountered. It may be doubted if this condition would change, even if the expense of the Suez Canal route were greater than that via the cape, because of the convenient coaling stations now in use and the fact that trade connections of a most profitable character have been made at the various ports of call. We may, therefore, omit all this traffic from any consideration in connection with Panama, for it can not possibly be diverted to that route.

"Let us now consider the traffic from Europe to Australia via the Suez Canal and see if there may be a chance to divert this to the new route. The distance from Europe to Melbourne by the present route is about 2,000 miles less than by Panama, with convenient coal and repair stations at various points and trading ports of great importance within reach. The distance alone would mean the saving of 250 tons of coal, which for the round trip would be 500 tons. Coal must always be cheaper when supplied in large quantities and where the stations have the advantage of the shorter haul from the source of supply; both of these are now, and must remain, in favor of the Suez route.

"Suez now declares a dividend of 20 per cent and, if Panama should compete for this Australian traffic, rates could be cut until this dividend would be materially reduced before Suez would give up the trade. It is evident, therefore, that we must not expect that Panama can reasonably hope to secure even a portion of that trade.

"The distance from Europe to Sydney is over 1,000 miles less by Suez than by Panama and, if the reasoning is sound in the case of Melbourne, the same will apply with equal force to Sydney. In other words, the trade of Europe with Australia must remain as it is, and no inducement can change it to Panama.

"From Europe to New Zealand the distance is about 1,500 miles less by Panama than by Suez, and here would seem to be a chance for the former to score for the first time in this discussion; but before it does so, we must consider certain important things besides the question of distance. Vessels leaving the Mediterranean or the north of Europe bound to New Zealand ports would not have to coal before reaching the Panama, but would be compelled to do so either at Colon or Panama, at one end of the canal or the other. They would find no repair station on this part of the journey and no trading port of importance. Therefore all cargo would have to be consigned to New Zealand ports, unless some were taken for ports in southern California, the Sandwich Islands, or Tahiti. In other words, all freight would have to pay traffic rates through the canal. By the Suez route much trading could be done before reaching the canal.

"On leaving the Pacific end of the new waterway these New Zealand-bound ships would have to reach some coaling station and recoal in order to arrive at their destination. It is generally agreed that such a station will be established at Tahiti, where a safe harbor can be found; but here again is a long run with no convenient coaling or repair stations and no trading ports of importance.

"Whether this traffic can be induced to leave the Suez and use the Panama route will depend on the comparative price of the coal supplied on the two routes and the rates charged for passing the ships through the canals. Suez will undoubtedly make a strong fight to retain the business, and as it is only a fraction of that handled the rates can be greatly reduced before the 20 per cent dividends now declared are seriously affected. If Panama can overcome the difficulties pointed out, we must place to her credit the first revenue yet found with which to meet the interest on bonds and furnish a working capital.

"The coal now consumed via Suez in making the 1,500 knots, the difference in favor of Panama, amounting to 188 tons, costs an average of $5 per ton. The value of fuel consumed is therefore $940. This item is the largest in the account against the Suez Canal.

"Now let us see how the coal bill will figure out via Panama. The coaling stations at the canal will probably contain Pocahontas coal of equal steaming quality with that furnished in England, but the price will be about $7 per ton instead of $4, so that every 8 miles steamed with this coal will cost nearly twice as much as the same distance made with that bought either in an English or Mediterranean port. On reaching Tahiti, where the ship must again take on coal, the price will be from $12 to $16 per ton, so every mile made with this fuel will cost twice or more than twice as much as the same distance made with the coal purchased on the Suez route. The average cost of fuel per ton after the home supply has been exhausted will be $11.50 per ton. This is $6.50 in excess of the price per ton via Suez.

"For the Panama route it is, therefore, merely a question of how many miles the vessel is to steam with this twice as expensive fuel before the cost—188 tons at $5 per ton—of the extra distance by way of Suez is wiped out. If we call the distance for the round trip from Liverpool, England, to New Zealand via Tahiti 20,000 miles, we are forced to the conclusion that enough of the higher-priced fuel must of necessity be used to more than square the account and even leave a balance in favor of Suez.

"How, then, can Panama hope to win this traffic? The answer seems to me plain—she must either provide cheaper fuel or make up the difference by the cheapness of canal charges. It is not clear how those operating the canal can control the price of coal unless they go into the coal business, and that we know they can not do; so the only thing left is to overcome their handicap by the cheapness of canal rates. There seems to be no other possible way.

"The traffic rates of the Suez Canal now amount to $2 per net ton United States measurement. If we suppose that the ship we are considering carries 5,000 net tons of freight, she would have to pay on freight alone $20,000 in canal fees for the round trip to New Zealand. The revenue from passengers is not here considered, and it may be properly left out of the account with Panama, where it will of necessity be much less.

"The cost of the Suez Canal as it stands to-day may be placed at $120,000,000. The first cost was $95,000,000 and the improvements since made amount to about $25,000,000. On this capitalization the revenue from all sources is sufficient to pay dividends of 20 per cent. The freight traffic pays, of course, the larger part, though the passenger traffic is valuable.

"The probable cost of the Panama Canal"—

We must remember, Mr. President, that this was written in 1910—

"as given by the able commission which recommended it as the best location for such a work, is $144,000,000 plus the price paid the French company for its franchise, or $40,000,000 more, making a total of $184,000,000.

"Add to this the $10,000,000 paid Panama for the Canal Zone and we have the sum of $194,000,000 as the estimated cost of the canal ready for use. Including that for 1909, the appropriations so far made by Congress amount to $204,602,468.58.

"Deduct from this $50,000,000, the sum paid for the French company's rights and to Panama, and we have the sum of nearly $155,000,000 expended up to date for making the dirt fly on this great work.

"As far as we can judge from the reports, less than one-half the work of a completed canal has been done. Are we not thus conservative in our estimate when we place the actual cost of the waterway, ready for traffic, at $400,000,000? Is it not probable that it will exceed that figure?"

Of course we now know that it does exceed that figure very materially, Mr. President.

"If we conclude that the commission estimated the cost of the canal at less than half of what will be the real cost, and I do not see how we are going to avoid that conclusion, may we not assume that they did the same about the operating expenses? May we not fairly assume that they likewise overestimated the traffic which will be ready for the canal when completed?

"The estimated cost of operating the canal is given at $2,000,000 per year; but as no details of any kind accompany the estimate, we must either blindly accept it as correct or treat it as we have had to do the estimate for the construction of the work—that is, double it—which seems the safest thing to do. Even when this is done and we assume $4,000,000 as the correct figure, I think we are still below the amount that will be found necessary.

"In making the estimate for traffic the New Zealand commerce is given as 500,000 net tons, on the authority of the New Panama Canal Co., a French corporation, which we may be sure did not underestimate the business in sight. If we accept, however, this estimate as correct, how can Panama hope to divert it from its present route? If the canal dues are placed at half those at Suez, we can put only $500,000 to the credit of Panama.

"Assume, for the sake of argument, that this tonnage is equally divided; that 250,000 tons pass the canal each way and that 50 ships, each carrying 5,000 tons of freight, are employed in the trade, the saving to each one of them via Panama will depend on the coal consumed, as before stated in this article, and the canal rates to be charged. The coal account will favor the Suez route, and the total saving will clearly be the sum saved by one ship multiplied by the number of ships employed.

"Having completed the coal account, we must now add the amount that Panama must charge to raise revenue with which to pay her operating expenses. To make this equal to the traffic rates at Suez—say, $2 per net ton—each of the ships would pay on this account alone $20,000 for a round trip, and in the end the benefit derived would come back again to the coal question.

"It has been clearly shown, I think, that the advantages of convenient coaling and repair stations and opportunities for trade en route would in this case cause a decision in favor of Suez. If Panama charges half Suez rates, or $1 per net ton, each ship will pay $10,000 per round trip, and under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty this would fix the rate per net ton for all commerce passing through the canal. Suez could by meeting this cut in rates still control the trade without seriously reducing her 20 per cent dividends, and it is only using common business sense to admit that she will do so.

"However, to place Panama in the most favorable light possible, let us for the sake of argument accept the estimate of the New Panama Canal Co. (the French company), increased by the problematical calculations of the experts for our Panama Canal Commission, and place the annual business for the canal when completed at 6,000,000 net tons. The revenue derived from this traffic would pay operating expenses and leave a surplus of $2,000,000 with which to pay in part the interest on $400,000,000. If we treat the estimates under consideration as we have been forced to treat those for construction, we will find that the canal for the first year of its operation will return a revenue insufficient to pay even the working expenses.

"The estimate of the New Panama Canal Co. includes not only the New Zealand trade but also four-fifths of the tonnage employed in the trade to the west coast of South America. When this has been examined—the trade with the west coast of South America—we will find that this claim of the New Panama Canal Co. can not be allowed, and that if we credit Panama with even one-half of it it will be all she is entitled to. I hope to make this clear.

"WHY THE PANAMA CANAL MAY BE A BAD BUSINESS VENTURE.

"I have assumed, in estimating the revenues of the Panama Canal when completed, or 'the business in sight' on the opening day, that the estimate of the New Panama Canal Co. (a French corporation) was correct. This amounted to 6,000,000 net tons, and the price for passing vessels through the canal was fixed at $1 per net ton, or a total of $6,000,000. This was arrived at by allowing, in the first place, that all the European commerce of New Zealand would be diverted from Suez to the new route. This constitutes only a small part of the total. Where will the remainder come from?

"The present commerce of Europe with Atlantic South American ports will not be affected in any way by the opening of the new route, but the same commerce with the Pacific South American ports will be. Let us see to what extent. Practically all this commerce now passes either through the Straits of Magellan in steamers, or around Cape Horn in sailing ships. The latter is so small—viz, the amount carried around the Horn in sailing ships—that we may safely leave it out of consideration. The opening of the new canal will be the end of sailing ships on the Pacific coast of South America, and North America as well.

"We will, therefore, consider only the commerce by steam-propelled vessels. The amount carried by the Panama Railroad is small, and will necessarily go to the new canal when completed. This is credited to that route in making up the estimate of 6,000,000 net tons of business.

"At first glance it would seem but fair to assume a point on the Pacific coast of South America, where the distance from Europe by the Straits of Magellan and that via Panama are equal, and say that this is the dividing point for commerce by the two routes, the ports nearer Magellan to continue to use the Magellan route and those nearer Panama to use the canal route. This point would be found south of the city of Valparaiso, about at Valdivia, and the natural inference would be that the trade of all ports north of this point would seek the new route. Such, in fact, has been the conclusion in making up this estimate of 6,000,000 of net tons of business for the canal on its opening day. Likewise, it has been assumed that all trade south of the point selected will continue to use the Magellan route. Neither assumption is correct or warranted.

"Steamers from Europe to the Pacific coast of South America fill to their utmost bunker capacity with Welsh coal of excellent quality before leaving home ports, at a cost of $2.50 per ton, and with this fuel they reach their destination. The distance they can steam without recoaling will be one of the determining factors in the question of which route will be the cheapest for them to use, and the point we have selected as the dividing line will shift up or down the coast accordingly. Good steaming coal is worth in the Straits of Magellan $16 per ton. The same price is demanded and paid in the harbor of Valparaiso. It is plain that the amount of this high-priced fuel to be used on the round trip will determine the route of the vessel, unless other important considerations interfere.

"From the starting point the cost for propulsion per mile of these ships will be about 31 miles per ton of coal. This cost of propulsion will be doubled when they have recoaled for the return trip, but they will naturally take only enough coal to reach a cheaper supply, which will be at Rio de Janeiro. The cost for fuel will be the same by either route, or let us assume that it will be, for the sake of argument. The point we have established on the coast will then move north just as many miles as the canal charges will amount to in tons of coal, and the route via Magellan will be the gainer by so much.

"Take as a sample ship in this trade one of 8,000 tons net freight capacity. If she is fully loaded, the canal dues for the round trip will be $16,000. We have supposed the rates to be fixed at $1 per net ton in order to divert the New Zealand trade from Suez, and that, under the present treaty, fixes the rate for all commerce.

"Sixteen thousand dollars converted into Welsh coal at Valparaiso means 1,000 tons, and if we allow half of this, or 500 tons, for the trip each way, we find that the ship can pass through the Straits of Magellan, steam up the coast nearly to the canal, and then retrace her course to her home port as she came more cheaply than by passing through the new waterway.

"In other words, the point on the west coast of South America where we supposed the traffic for the canal to begin must be shifted north about 4,000 miles, because of the rates to be charged for transit.

"That this may be changed by the amount of American coal that will be shipped to the west coast of South America is probable, but the change will be unimportant, because the trouble still remains that there are canal charges on one route and no such charges on the other.

"The point at which the trade of the Pacific coast of South America would divide between the two routes because of distance has been fixed as just south of Valdivia in Chile; but by reason of canal rates it must be shifted north about 4,000 miles, which will give the Magellan route all the commerce at least as far north as Callao in Peru. If we say that four-fifths of the trade of this coast, which has heretofore gone to the credit of Panama, will remain where it is, we shall not be far wrong. Nothing but a free canal can change this condition. We must therefore deduct from the 6,000,000 net tons given to Panama at least 500,000 net tons for this trade. The revenue is thus decreased by $500,000, which leaves only $1,500,000 above the operating expenses—which I estimated in my article last month as $4,000,000—with which to pay the interest on four hundred million of bonds.

"The commerce of the Pacific coast of South America is growing rapidly, and we may look for a steady increase for many years to come. But the conditions governing this will not change, as far as routes are concerned, because the route used will depend on the transit charges in the canal. As practically all the commercial ports are south of the point where commerce for the canal route originates or is received the increase of traffic will benefit the Magellan route as compared with that of Panama.

"The additional wages of crews and the wear of machinery and ship on account of the longer route by Magellan are left out of consideration, as they are more than offset by the chances for profitable trade on this route and the greater convenience of repair stations as compared with Panama.

"To the commerce of New Zealand which has, in this writing, been given to the Panama route, we must add that of all the Pacific islands north and east of New Zealand. This is not a large amount from any one island, but in the aggregate, because of the total population of all the islands, it may in a measure offset the loss before noted in the South American trade. Here, again, however, comes the question of canal charges, and unless these can be kept below the cost of coal for the extra distance to be steamed by the Suez route, Suez will still enjoy her present advantage.

"We now come to the commerce of Europe, north of the Mediterranean, with the Pacific coast of America, from the point where the Magellan route ceases to have the advantage, to the northward. This includes the trade with a portion of Central America, all of Mexico, and the parts of the United States as far north as Puget Sound. All this must necessarily be given to Panama, which for this section has the same advantage that Suez has in the matter of distance saved over any competing route. But the advantage thus given to Panama is not a real one for the reason that Suez can exact differential rates, while Panama can not do so; she must, by treaty obligation, exact the same rate from all vessels.

"Suez, being an incorporated company without treaty stipulation as to charges for transit, can establish such rates as the directors wish, and these rates may be changed at any time. The rates to a New Zealand port could be cut down to 1 cent on a ton of merchandise and the rates to all other countries left unchanged. No nation could object to this action on the part of the Suez company. In other words, a different rate could be given New Zealand from that given any other country and nobody could object—there is no ground on which to base an objection. The Panama Canal could not do this, because we are bound to the same rate for all nations by treaty obligation."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that there are now no obligations upon the part of the Suez Canal Co. compelling it to charge equal and just rates to the different nations of the earth?

Mr. THOMAS. I assume, Mr. President, that may have been so in 1910, when this article was written, because the author of the article was supposedly familiar with the facts which he was then discussing. I can not personally answer that question with any degree of satisfaction either to myself or to the Senator. I confess that the statement aroused my surprise, because I had understood that by convention or by agreement, particularly that of Constantinople some years before, a different arrangement was established, and that rates would, however changed, whether up or down, be uniform in their application to the traffic; but it is a fact, whether this statement be correct or not, that the Suez Canal Co. may make a general reduction of all their charges so as to meet any destructive or threatened destructive competitive conditions which may be developed in the use of the Panama Canal; so that to that extent the argument is good, even if the admiral were mistaken in his statement which I have just read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator is he of the opinion that the nation controlling the Suez Canal would be disposed thus to reduce rates in order to attract traffic in that direction?

Mr. THOMAS. The canal is an incorporated company. The nation controlling it is Great Britain, through an ownership of a very considerable majority of the stock.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I understand that; but is it the opinion of the Senator that that nation would be disposed thus to reduce the tolls in order to attract traffic in that direction?

Mr. THOMAS. I think that it would, because, being a private concern operated for profit and paying a dividend of 20 per cent, very naturally it would be operated as would any other private concern whose business was threatened.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I understand the Senator to indicate that the Suez Canal is operated by the Kingdom of Great Britain for pecuniary profit?

Mr. THOMAS. It is operated for pecuniary profit by a company which owns it, of which Great Britain is a stockholder; yes, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that Great Britain is operating it, there is no question that it is operated for pecuniary benefit; but I was going to say that if it should transpire that the construction of the treaty which we are now considering should be in favor of the contention which Great Britain makes, as Great Britain is in charge of the Suez Canal and can raise and lower rates to meet the situation, that would put Great Britain practically in control of both the Panama and the Suez Canals. It would be a singular situation and a most valuable advantage.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I do not think that follows at all. But I shall not digress from the general purpose that I have in now addressing the Senate to discuss that question, although I think it is a most interesting one, and one upon which at some time before the final vote is taken I may have something to say.

"Therefore, when we reach the point in the north where the distances by the two routes are nearly equal, the coal question again becomes an important one, and the probability that Suez will cut rates to secure or hold this traffic looms up.

"In its estimate of business for Panama on its opening day, the New Panama Canal Co. (a French company) puts the entire trade to the Pacific coast of America at three millions and a half net tons. It has been clearly shown that this must be reduced by at least half a million tons for the traffic on the Pacific coast of South America; and unless cheap fuel can be supplied for vessels trading to ports north of the mouth of the Columbia River, another reduction will have to be made, and the revenues of the canal will fall so low that even the income to meet operating expenses will be threatened.

"If vessels trading north of the mouth of the Columbia River find that they can procure cheap fuel from the newly discovered mines in Alaska, or from other sources, they may find it less costly to cross the Pacific to Japan and then return to Europe via the Suez Canal than to pay the rates of the Panama Canal. There will always be plenty of cargo from our north Pacific coast for Japan and the Orient, and once on the Japanese coast, say, at Yokohama, the distance to an English port is the same by either route.

"In other words, if Panama Canal rates are high and vessels can procure cheap fuel, the commerce of ports north of the Columbia River will seek a European market via the Suez Canal.

"Another thing must be considered in this connection which has a direct bearing on the revenues of the Panama Canal, and that is the probable action of the Canadian transcontinental railroads. They will certainly cut rates to a point that will cause keen competition, and unless the canal rates are low the railroads will get the business and the revenues of Panama suffer accordingly.

"The question of coal supply for the ports on the Pacific coast of South America has a direct bearing on the prospects of the new canal, and a few words here may be of interest to the general reader. It goes without saying that when the canal is in operation large quantities of coal from the United States will pass through it for South American ports, and that the price of coal in such ports will thus be reduced. Much of this fuel will be suitable for use in commerce-carrying steamers, and the price will depend on the competition that exists and the canal charges—always the same vital question of canal charges.

"Let us assume that canal charges are such that the present price of steaming coal can be cut in half, and such fuel, placed in the bunkers at Valparaiso, Chile, will cost $8 per ton instead of $16. By this reduction we find that the Magellan route will gain enormously, as the ship will thus be able to purchase twice as much coal, or, in other words, steam twice the distance, for the same money. Panama can do nothing to counteract this, as her traffic rates are fixed and can not be changed.

"In other words, we find that the supposed benefit to our coal merchants, because of the new route giving them access to a most lucrative market, are secured to the disadvantage of a canal constructed with the money of the people of this country and owned by the Government of the United States.

"We are forced to this conclusion because we must admit that the cheaper the fuel supplied them the greater the distance ships can steam without being compelled to use the canal or lose money on their freights.

"When considering freights from any port in the north of Europe to the north Pacific coast of the United States this condition does not obtain, because, as is the case with most of the traffic through the Suez Canal, this traffic must use the Panama Canal on account of the distance saved, which means economy in coal consumption. The accompanying statements illustrate this:

Liverpool to San Francisco.

Via Magellan	miles	13,503
Via Panama	do	8,038
In favor of Panama	do	5,465
Saving in coal	tons	683

Equivalent to $10,928 at $16 per ton.

New York to San Francisco.

Via Magellan	miles	13,090
Via Panama	do	5,294
In favor of Panama	do	7,796
Saving in coal	tons	925

Equivalent to $11,100 at $12 per ton.

"The cheaper the fuel supplied on this route, therefore, the more surely will traffic follow the Panama route until you reach a price at which the ships can steam through the Straits of Magellan and cover the greater distance entailed without exceeding the cost of passing through the canal.

"This, of course, refers to commerce under foreign flags, and all this commerce is of that nature; there is, at present, no foreign commerce to speak of under the American flag. It may be claimed that, the traffic being foreign, rates could be charged that would insure a large revenue to the canal. This is not true, because we are bound by treaty to uniform rates; there can be no discrimination; all tonnage, foreign and domestic, must pay the same rates.

"If higher rates could be imposed on foreign ships, they would only use the Panama Canal until those rates reached a certain point, when they would seek another route; but in any case the consumers of this country, or the country in which the cargo is used or consumed, will have to pay the bill.

"No one can doubt that the object in view, in constructing this expensive waterway, was benefit in some shape to the people of the United States. This can not follow from high rates of traffic through the canal. It may come from a free canal, but certain influences, not yet considered, may render even this doubtful.

"The Panama Canal will benefit the commerce of the United States and the people of this country to a degree not yet thought of, provided it can be used to advantage financially by those who are to use the things that pass through it. If we can receive the raw materials that we need from other countries, and send to those countries in return our manufactured products which they require at prices satisfactory to us and to them, it needs no argument to show that our business will vastly increase. Nor does it require an argument to show that we shall not benefit one dollar by the transportation of all these things. We have no ships in which to carry them. As our trade with foreign countries increases the benefit to foreign commerce will increase, and we must content ourselves with the profit that will come from the greatly increased output of our mills and factories and the export of larger quantities of raw material. In this way we shall give more employment to our laboring classes and greatly enlarge the present use of American-made machinery.

"The southern section of the country will, as far as can now be foretold, reap the greatest benefit from the canal, because it brings it nearer a market for the things it produces. Its cotton goods, manufactured at home out of raw material grown on its own soil, in mills run by unrivaled water power, managed by labor that has no 'labor unions' and is in all respects cheaper than that of any other section of the country, will be eagerly sought by the people of South American countries where such goods are used. They can be supplied in enormous quantities and at a price that will make competition difficult, because the raw material is grown in the immediate vicinity of the mill and has no heavy transportation charges to pay; and, further, because the labor employed can work longer hours at cheaper rates than that in other sections where climatic conditions are less favorable. Add to this the fact that the distances to shipping ports—say, Mobile, Pensacola, New Orleans, or other Gulf ports—and thence to ports of delivery are short, compared with others, and we can easily see how bright the future is for this class of goods and those who deal in them.

"If the railroads which have even so short a haul as from these ports to the place where the goods are produced are allowed to establish rates to suit themselves, cheap transportation will not be realized. Rates can be made so high that even with a very cheap water rate the total price of transportation will be the same as if the entire distance had been by rail. And here, again, comes the question of canal rates to spoil our picture and lead us to doubt the realization of our dream. Argue as we may, we come always to this puzzling question; and if we comfort ourselves with the thought of a free canal, another trouble looms up to disturb us, viz, Will the railroad rates be such as to transfer the profit, which was to come to so many, to the treasuries of the railroad companies?

"The lumber, the phosphates, and the coal, as well as numerous other products of the South, will be in great demand on the Pacific coast of South America, and, under present conditions, must find their way there in foreign bottoms. The canal rates will govern the freight rates of these ships to a large extent, but rail rates will determine the question as to whether such products can be shipped at all from points which have not all-water transportation to the point of shipment. The railroad charges can easily be made such that there will be no profit either for the producer or the consumer. If the producer or shipper adds the railroad charges to his price, the total will be so high that we shall lose the benefits we have anticipated. To explain this let me say that I once stood on a dock in Kobe, Japan, and saw 50 tons of peanuts shipped by steamer to San Francisco, where they met with ready sale. I naturally wondered how peanuts grown in Japan, even with the cheap labor found there, could be sent across the Pacific to a port over 6,000 miles away and sold in competition with those grown in Virginia and Georgia, only 3,000 miles or less from the same market. It was simply because the railroads put such a rate on the transportation of the American nuts that they could not be sent to San Francisco and sold at a profit.

"The demand for southern lumber for building purposes in South America is well known, and that country is an important market for our people; but if the charges for passing the lumber through the canal, plus the cost of transportation, makes it too expensive for ordinary use, then the market will be lost to us; and the same reasoning, with the same result, may be applied to every article proposed to be exported through the Panama Canal. The question of canal rates, and the still more important one, in some cases, of railroad rates, meets us at every point of the discussion."

Here I will say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that this discussion is based almost wholly upon the commercial aspects of the problem, stripped of all considerations of policy or of politics, of treaty construction or otherwise, although we may assume that the now much-controverted clause in the treaty is prohibitive of our right to give exemption from tolls to our coastwise traffic.

"The commerce with South and Central American countries may fairly be assumed to constitute one-third the total foreign commerce of our country. This estimate has been given by many able writers on the subject, and I believe it to be a fair one. Because of long railroad hauls and consequent high transportation charges, this commerce has never developed the large proportions to which it seems to be entitled, and our Southern and Pacific States have been the greatest losers, although all sections of the country have been affected. The Panama Canal, it may be hoped, will correct or change the present condition and bring the Pacific States nearer the Atlantic coast of South America, as it does the Southern States to the Pacific coast of the same country, thus securing for us these inviting markets. This trade should increase more rapidly than any other affected by the new waterway, because of the number and value of the raw materials of South and Central America which we must have in order to manufacture the finished products which they demand from us and which will be used by them in rapidly increasing quantities.

"The cotton and tobacco of the South, which are the most important of her exports, are now in great demand in Japan and the Orient generally, but they do not have an undisputed market; they are in competition with the same articles from India and other eastern countries. Southern California has ust harvested her first cotton crop, and no one can tell what will in a few years be the output of this new industry in that wonderful country. Some of the leading manufacturers of the South claim that in a few years the mills of that section will spin more cotton than is now grown there. Is it not a fair presumption that the people of California will follow the example of their southern competitors and turn their cotton into a finished product to be shipped to the countries now supplied from the South? And will not the proximity of the market to the Pacific coast throw the balance in favor of that section, to the injury of the southern mills? This must certainly be the result unless the traffic rates of the Panama Canal are such as to maintain the equilibrium. Can a stronger reason for a free canal be asked for?

"The products of the Pacific States are of great variety, and are demanded in unlimited quantities by the countries of Europe. Here, as in the case of the South with her products, the Panama Canal will wonderfully increase her advantages in reaching her markets. Her foodstuffs, which are her leading export, relieved of the long railroad haul with heavy transportation charges, should be supplied in the rapidly increasing quantities to all the markets of Europe, and they undoubtedly will be when they can be shipped by water to their destination without changing cargo—all-water transportation, in other words. But we must remember that the Pacific States have more serious competitors in the matter of foodstuffs than the South has in cotton and tobacco. Argentina has already made herself felt in this competition and she will undoubtedly grow stronger as time goes on and she fully appreciates her great advantages. The German colonization of a portion of Brazil must, in the near future, be reckoned as one of the factors in this problem. There are no farmers in the world to-day equal to the Germans for scientific methods and successful results. Their efforts will undoubtedly mean serious competition for the Pacific Coast States.

"A still more serious menace to them, however, is the product of the enormous area of cereal-growing land to the north of our boundary line. The wheat fields of British Columbia are of wonderful fertility, and they are not only securing our farmers by the thousands but they are easily outstripping us in the number of bushels of wheat per acre. All this wheat and, I may say, other products come in direct competition with the products of our Pacific States. Fortunately for us, the greater part of this fertile Canadian land is so situated that whatever it produces must submit to heavy railroad transportation charges, for it can not otherwise reach tidewater. Because of this condition the pendulum swings back in favor of our Pacific States if they can use the Panama Canal to advantage. If the canal rates are low enough, the results must be greatly in our favor, otherwise the gain will be for others. In view of the serious menace to the most important trade of our Pacific Coast States, because of all this competition, can anyone ask for a better reason for a free canal? Is that not the one thing, the only thing, that will benefit these States in the commercial struggle that faces them?

"Let us look, now, for a moment at the valuable export trade from the region adjacent to the Mississippi River which may use the Panama Canal when completed and surmise what the effect of the new waterway will be on such trade. Everything manufactured in the great cities situated in this region, such as Baton Rouge, Vicksburg, Memphis, Cairo, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Chicago, and numerous others, may reach shipping points by all-water-route transportation to New Orleans, whence it may reach its destination in foreign bottoms. A thought out and properly executed waterways plan would greatly add to this prospect of cheap transportation. Such a plan would have the effect of holding in check the overcharging by competing railroad lines. If such traffic escapes railroad charges, it will be sure of cheap transportation to all parts of the world unless forced to pass through the new canal. The competition between the cheaply constructed merchant ships of England and Germany is so keen that we may always hope for low rates for freight carried by them from any port they can reach. There is no danger of a combination between these ships to control rates—oil and water will not mix; Englishmen and Germans will never form a pool to control shipping rates—and it is not apparent how the railroads of this country can affect them in the matter of freight charges. All the machinery and other heavy freight from Chicago and other rival cities of the Mississippi Valley are thus secure in the matter of rates on all products shipped to foreign ports when such products do not have to use the Panama Canal.

"But all the heavy produce for the Pacific coast of South America, the Orient, and the Pacific islands other than the Sandwich Islands, Samoa, Guam, and the Philippines must use the canal, and the traffic charges there enforced become the determining factor in the problem of whether or not we are to control to any important extent this inviting market. England and Germany now have a great advantage over this country by reason of geographical situation, but this can be overcome by giving our people the free use of the canal. If a rate of $1 per net ton be imposed for passage through the canal, it will add that much to the cost of our products from the cities mentioned and will permit England and Germany to hold their present advantage on the Pacific coast of South America and in the Orient. In addition to the canal charges, the coal question here again becomes important.

"One more strong plea, I think, has been established for a free canal—free, at least, until our new trade routes are firmly established. The Sandwich Islands, Guam, and the Philippines, being under our flag, can not send their products to our ports except in American bottoms, and our home ports are governed in the same way in their commerce with them. They will always, however, enjoy the low transportation rates for their products resulting from the sharp competition of the foreign bottoms, which carry the produce of our citizens to foreign markets.

"Upon the opening of the Panama Canal there will undoubtedly be a great demand on the Pacific coast from Valparaiso to San Francisco for the coal from the Pennsylvania and other mines which can be handled by all-water transportation. The railroads which work their own coal mines will, of course, compete for this valuable trade, and in this way the price of coal delivered to foreign ships for transportation to South American ports will be the same and the canal charges will affect both alike. The coal supplied to our own ports on the Pacific coast and in the Pacific islands, like all other freight from one home port to another, must be transported in American bottoms, and thus lose the advantage of competition afforded foreign freight by English and German ships. No foreign ship can compete with our own in domestic commerce, as they are by law forbidden to engage in it. Therefore the only competition must be between lines of steamers and transcontinental railroads—all-water transportation versus rail transportation, in other words—and if past experience teaches us anything, it is that the water transportation will fix the rate for both. Such has been the case wherever water-carried freight has come directly in competition with that carried by railroads, and the Panama Canal when completed will, if allowed fair competition, establish absolutely the rate on certain kinds of freight and strongly influence the rates on every kind.

"Up to this point in discussing the prospects of the Panama Canal and the source from which the revenue is to come with which to pay operating expenses and interest on cost of construction, I have not touched on the freight that may pass from one home port to another. It was undoubtedly because of the possibility of shipments of this nature that the great work was ever undertaken. The plea that it would make us stronger from a military and naval stand had some weight and secured some votes; but the real controlling reason for digging the canal was to bring the Atlantic and Pacific markets of the United States into closer relations by means of an all-water route of transportation."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the Senator fully indorses the general proposition that the water route in the end will fix the rate of charge for transportation?

Mr. THOMAS. Provided—always provided—that it does not fall under the control of the great lines of railways.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. We have a provision in this bill which we passed, unless we are compelled to repeal it on the request of Great Britain, that railroad-owned ships shall not pass through the canal.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And that would divorce the railroads and the ships, leaving the principle which the Senator has stated to operate in all its force and effect.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope so; and I may say that I have a profound conviction, as the result of years of experience and information, that the canal must be kept absolutely free at all times from both the direct and the indirect control and influence of the great transcontinental railways of this continent or it will not subserve the primary purpose for which it was built.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not want to divert the Senator from the line of his argument.

Mr. THOMAS. This is not an argument, and consequently I am not diverted; that is, it is not my argument.

Mr. BORAH. It is a good argument, at any rate.

Mr. THOMAS. Indeed it is. I think so.

Mr. BORAH. And I supposed, by reason of its being good, that it was the Senator's argument.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a good argument; but being the argument of another which I am reading, I can not be diverted from it by any question which the Senator desires to ask.

Mr. BORAH. I will not interrupt the Senator at present. I may do so at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing that the Senator should do so now.

"We have seen how the foreign commerce of the country is and must be, for the present, at least, carried in foreign bottoms. It may be suggested that a high rate of canal charges which these foreign ships could not avoid because of the greater expense involved in the use of any other route would produce a sufficient revenue to meet all demands. The first effect of such a policy would be to send the New Zealand commerce, which has been credited to the Panama Canal, to the Suez route, because that route would be cheaper. Then the commerce of the Pacific coast of South America, a large portion of which has been credited to Panama, would seek the Magellan route for the same reason. I have shown that these high rates proposed for the purpose of securing revenue from foreign ships would apply to all traffic, both foreign and domestic, because of our treaty obligations.

"It seems plain, then, that if we enforce such rates we not only decrease the amount the canal will receive by losing the New Zealand and South American trade, but we will at the same time prevent by these high rates the very thing the canal was constructed for, viz, the cheap transportation of American products from one home port to another. High rates for passing through the canal mean high transportation rates for the whole route. In other words, for the consumer and the producer we will kill the goose that was to lay the golden eggs. Such a policy would make of the waterway a route for foreign commerce alone, and our domestic shipments would remain as they are to-day at the mercy of the transcontinental railroads.

"The sum paid by American producers and manufacturers to these foreign bottoms for carrying their wares to market during the past year was in round numbers $500,000,000, a sum sufficient to dig the Panama Canal and operate it for 20 years. Or, for the same sum of money, we could have built and commissioned 50 battleships of the latest type. Remember that all this good American money has gone into the pockets of foreigners, and a similar sum will go every year, without benefit to our people beyond carrying their products to market, unless we can relieve them of the high rates of transportation. This we can do only by shortening the haul; in other words, using the canal when it is completed or sending our goods in our own ships and thus letting the money now paid to foreign carriers remain in this country for those who care to follow the sea as their business.

"The idea that we will continue year after year to pay the sum of $500,000,000 for hauling our products to market, even if we pay it to our own shipowners, is certainly startling, but that we should pay it to foreigners is out of the question. Relief from such a condition must be found somehow, and if it can come through a free canal so much the better. It may come through a free canal; time alone can determine this. We may, however, be perfectly certain that it can never come through high canal charges, for they will surely reduce the tonnage that should use it. A larger number of ships engaged in commerce would reduce the price of transportation by competition among the ships. If we had such a thing as an American merchant marine, it would at least get a share of this good money. Operating and interest charges for a free canal, with the purpose of achieving this result, would be but a drop in the bucket as compared with the present outlay for transportation; and the money would come from exactly the same source—the taxpayers of the United States.

"The question of water transportation between our Atlantic and Pacific ports is the most important in connection with the Panama Canal. The value of this domestic trade will be equal to, or greater than, all other trade using the new waterway and of far greater importance to us in developing the resources of our country. The question of canal charges, therefore, becomes a vital question, and as we look into it we are dismayed at the difficulties that face us. The canal freight rates for foreign commerce either to or from the United States, as has been shown, will always be subject to sharp competition between foreign ships, which must find cargoes somewhere; but our domestic trade using the canal will not enjoy this advantage. We will have to depend entirely for cheap transportation on the competition between our own ships and the transcontinental railroads. These roads, which have practically no influence with the foreign carriers, now come in for their innings, and they will prove the most troublesome factor in the solution of the problem.

"The bitter opposition of the railroads of the country to connecting the two oceans by a canal is well known. For many years it was so effective as to prevent any company from cutting such a canal or even securing a charter to cut one. It was not until the Nicaragua Canal Co., after a long struggle, secured its charter from the Congress of the United States, that there seemed any hope of ever really having a canal. The battle in Congress for the present projected waterway to be dug and owned by the United States showed how strong the railroad interests were, and when the work is completed the action of these same railroads will determine whether we are, as a nation, to benefit by it or not.

"That the railroad interests shall receive fair treatment at the hands of the people goes without saying. They are the great upbuilding force that has made our western country, from the Mississippi to tidewater on the Pacific, what it is; but this is not a good reason why they should now be allowed to throttle the people and by unreasonable rates to prevent or delay further progress.

"While the influence of the railroad has been as a whole opposed to a canal, many wise railroad men have admitted that a waterway through the Isthmus of Panama would be of benefit to such roads rather than an injury, and that there would always be business enough for both. This opinion was based on the broad ground that railroad profits increase in proportion to the population and prosperity of the country through which the road runs. If the Panama Canal leads to increased population and prosperity for the Pacific coast, the railroads to that section will derive great advantage therefrom and the canal can in no way prevent it. But these same roads can, by a certain policy, practically kill the traffic through the canal and thus prevent the development which was the greatest plea for connecting the two oceans.

"WILL THE RAILROADS THROTTLE THE PANAMA CANAL?

"We turn now to the study of the relation of the canal to transcontinental shipping between the eastern and western sections of the United States."

That, Mr. President, is the traffic which is the subject of discussion in this body and which the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is about to consider.

"This is from every point of view, I believe, the most important relationship of the canal to the people of the United States. It is well-nigh impossible to overestimate the importance of the canal's influence upon the tremendous problem of transportation charges, and upon that other problem of regulating our railroads and their rates. If the people insist that the canal shall work for them; if they prevent it falling under the control of the railroads; if they take, early and vigorously, the steps necessary to make certain that it shall give them the full measure of potential benefits of which it is capable, then it will be a paying investment if it never collects a dollar in tolls or carries a ton of international traffic or adds a single shipload to our foreign commerce."

Mr. President, digressing again, I want to emphasize that view of the effect of the canal upon the future of the American people. In it is indissolubly bound the great question of transcontinental and local land transportation. A transportation charge is a tax upon the producing and consuming energies of the Nation, and the power to tax carries with it the power to destroy. In consequence, Mr. President, any corporation or combination of corporations, any individual or combination of individuals, having the power to levy a tax, call it by what name you may, upon the people of the United States controls the destinies of that people. Such a power untrammeled and unlimited does not exist in government, and it should not exist anywhere else. Being an essential attribute of government it is subject to limitations, being less liable to abuse than if the power rests in the hands of private institutions, however public or semipublic in character they may be. Hence this canal had for a primary purpose the regulation and the reduction, as well as the equalization, of those traffic charges which affect the very life and prosperity of the people.

Recurring to this manuscript, I will proceed:

"There is no more important question before the American Nation to-day than this of making very sure that when they have invested their hundreds of millions of dollars in the canal it shall be permitted to give them returns on the investment.

"The Panama Canal will earn the returns, albeit perhaps indirectly, if it is given the chance.

"But it will not be given the chance if the transcontinental railroads can prevent.

"Decade after decade the great east-and-west railroad systems opposed and prevented the building of the canal. They knew what its competition would mean in the reduction of their freight rates.

"The canal, however, is being dug. Not because the public rose to an acute realization of the commercial necessity for it, but because of the Oregon's trip from the Pacific to the Atlantic. That one voyage of one battleship in a time of national crisis served to crystallize a purpose in the national mind that all the powers of railroad finance and railroad politics could not thwart. For a generation the Nation had submitted, meekly enough, to being denied the commercial benefits of cheap transportation by the shortest possible water route. It had known vaguely, but conclusively enough, that railroad influence was the thing which prevented the canal being built. But in the hour of national peril, confronted by the possibilities of a disaster to the Navy which must defend our tremendous coast line, the Nation made a vow whose fulfillment will be written on the day when the first ship passes from ocean to ocean and the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific meet.

"Having thus in a supreme moment dashed aside all sordid opposition and made certain that the canal would be secured, what have the people done?

"They have gone to sleep again, lost interest in the great enterprise, and are letting the railroads once more strengthen the grip which was long potent to prevent the ditch being dug, and will, unless we rouse ourselves, presently be found strong enough to prevent the canal doing the Nation the greatest good of which it is capable.

"True enough, we take a certain pride in the fact that American genius and enterprise are achieving the most wonderful engineering work ever undertaken by man. But we are giving no thought, much less taking any steps, to assure to ourselves as a nation the commercial benefits which that work must bring if it shall not be a disappointment and a failure.

"Do not imagine that I have become afflicted with any populistic antirailroad mania. There is not a transportation authority among all the rulers of the rail who will claim more for the steam railroad as a factor in the development of the country, past, present, or future, than I will concede. But the truth will not be suppressed. The railroads always have been hostile to the canal, and they may be hostile to it in the future. I believe their hostility is based on a narrow conception, a short-sighted view. But, reasonable or unreasonable, it is the fact.

"We are spending $400,000,000 digging at a canal which ought to reduce freight rates across our continent to a fraction of what they are now. The commercial justification of that expenditure will never be found, as I have heretofore tried to show, in the impetus that will be given our foreign trade. It must be found in benefit to our domestic commerce.

"What I am about to say concerning the charges for transportation of freight by rail and by water is not to be construed as indicative of hostility to the railroads. Perhaps they do not overcharge us. Perhaps they are not unduly capitalized. Perhaps they earn no more than is right. Without doubt they are magnificently managed financial and commercial enterprises.

"The basic fact remains that water transportation is the cheapest known to the world. Wherever there is free and fair competition the water highway takes the business from the railroad. Year after year a larger and larger proportion of London's coal comes down from the north of England by the sea. Year after year the importance of the internal water routes—rivers and canals—on the Continent of Europe increases, as they carry a steadily increasing proportion of the freight traffic. Why? Because it is more economical to move traffic by water than by land.

"Before the era of the railroad internal waterways were highly developed in Europe and in this country. The railroads drove almost all the business from them. The iron highways monopolized traffic, and their owners raised their rates so high that protest ensued. That protest had the effect in Europe a generation ago of turning public attention back to the waterways. In this country, tardily realizing conditions, we have only recently recognized the need of restoring the rivers to their place in the transportation scheme, and so far we have accomplished very little in that direction.

"In countries where pressure of population and economic conditions enforce consideration of every opportunity of saving the tendency is more and more to utilize the waterways. Our own country, half developed, rich, thoughtless of the future's necessities, has not reached the point where discriminating attention need be given to these things. So we have allowed the traffic to be driven from our rivers by the unregulated and unrestricted competition of the railroads. For many years we have consented likewise that continental traffic which a canal would have carried at greater speed and vastly less cost. We have developed our continent thus far without thought of the possibilities of the greatest transcontinental trade route—that via the Atlantic, the canal, and the Pacific—and without consideration of the possibilities of our imperial system of rivers.

"The canal is going to force attention to these things, if only the country can be aroused to understand its immense potentialities. But how many people who read this know that it will be possible to ship the oranges of southern California from Los Angeles to New York or Boston in fewer days by steamship through the Panama Canal, when completed, than by fast freight across the country?

"The distance from New York to Los Angeles via the Panama Canal is, in round numbers, 5,000 miles. A 6,000-tons-capacity steamer loaded with oranges or other fresh fruit, steaming at a rate of only 12 knots per hour, would cover this distance in 18 days. If we allow one day for the steamer passing through the canal, her total time from port to port would be 19 days. If the vessel were run specially for the fruit trade, this time could be reduced by several days. A ship of 16 knots speed, such as those now used in the West Indies fruit trade, would make the trip in just 14 days, giving again the allowance of one day for passing through the canal.

"The time for rail freights across the continent varies from 20 to 60 days. It will therefore be seen that the steamer would in all cases land her freight in a shorter time. This means that many kinds of freight would be delivered in better condition and for one-third the price now charged by the railroads.

"If the railroads will permit the proper development of water traffic, this saving can be effected. It is a question for the people of the country to settle.

"The average American is so innocent of understanding water transportation that even railroad men and great merchants have repeatedly assured me that 'there isn't any great traffic for the canal; the California fruits can't be shipped on a long voyage through the Tropics; it would ruin them.'

"The truth is that the California oranges will go in vastly better condition and in shorter time by Panama than by rail. And the fruit traffic, vast as it is, is only a small part of the business in sight, and on account of its perishable nature the only business for which even the most innocent and uninformed person could question the availability of the canal route.

"Think of the cheapening of oranges and lemons and other products in eastern markets, if the cost of their transportation were reduced to one-fourth the present figure. That can be done if the canal is assured its independence, if shipping which uses it is free, and if competition is active. Much the greater part of the cost of an orange or a lemon in New York represents freight charges. Is it worth while to save those charges not only on fruit but on many other things as well?"

Mr. President, this reminds me of one of the conspicuous abuses of the transcontinental traffic in citrus fruits. The rates on citrus fruits, oranges and lemons particularly, from California to the Atlantic coast in carload lots is about 84 cents a box. The same rate prevails between California shipping points and Colorado and in all the intervening country between Colorado and that coast. Of course, if the railroads can ship oranges and lemons at 84 cents a box in carload lots from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast at a profit, and we must assume that it is done at a profit, then the same shipment can be made to the city of Denver for one-half or one-third that amount at a profit. But the people of the interior are compelled to pay the same rate that is exacted from the people of the Atlantic seaboard, with this added burden, that the freight charges from the Atlantic seaboard to Colorado are added to the cost price charged the consumer. In other words, the people of the intermountain region are taxed by an unrestricted, unlimited, and lawless power to the extent of a double charge for freights from the point of shipment to the point of delivery, plus the charges that they would have to pay if the same commodity were obtained from the Atlantic seaboard and shipped to us from that direction.

"At this point I want to take up the relative cost of transcontinental freightage by rail and by the canal, in a general way. I propose to show something of the tremendous saving that water transportation will effect for the American public, if only we will take the necessary steps to assure the preservation of its advantages."

I shall not take up the time of the Senate by going into these detailed statements and figures. Suffice it to say, that the author demonstrates the enormous saving to the people by the application of a fair rate to various lines of traffic which would naturally seek the canal, and which will at the same time pay enormous profits to the shipowners which avail themselves of them. The showing is a startling one, but perhaps not so important as the remainder of the paper to the purpose for which I am reading it.

"The following rates are now in force from Pacific ports to New York: First-class freight, from $3.70 to $3 per 100 pounds; second class, $3.30 to $2.60 per 100 pounds; third class, $2.65 to $2.20 per 100 pounds; and fourth class, $2.10 to $1.90 per 100 pounds; dried fruit, in boxes or barrels, by the carload, $1.10 per 100 pounds; less than a carload, $2.20 per 100 pounds; the same dried fruit in sacks, $1.30 by the carload and $2.20 for less than a carload; Chinese and Japanese matting, $1 per 100 pounds, by the carload, and $1.50 for less than a carload; oranges, lemons, grapefruit, limes, and other citrons, $1.15 per 100 pounds.

"These figures are taken from a long list of rated articles, and may be assumed to represent the average railroad charges on foreign and domestic articles from Pacific ports to their market in New York City. If we allow 50,000 pounds as the capacity for each car, which is a very high estimate, we arrive at the following result: Articles of the first class will pay $3.70 or $3 for every hundred pounds shipped. Let us take the lower price, $3. One short ton of 2,000 pounds will mean $60 in freight rates, and the carload will be 25 times that, or $1,500. In other words, first-class freight will cost $60 per ton, by the carload, for the distance indicated. Other classes of freights will be cheaper. At the published rate, the freight charge on fruit is $23 per ton, so that for 25 tons of oranges the consumers in New York will have paid for hauling them to market $575. If 200 carloads are consumed, at 25,000 pounds to the car, the amount paid by those who eat the oranges will be $57,500. I am informed that over 20,000 carloads crossed the continent last year.

"A ship of 6,000 net tons cargo capacity would take as many tons of freight as 240 freight cars of 25-ton capacity, or 480 freight cars carrying half this load, which is much nearer the average, and allowing the same freight rates for first-class freight, she would have to her credit on each trip from a Pacific port to New York, or some other eastern market, the neat sum of $360,000. Two such trips would pay for the ship. In the case of fresh fruit, the ships to carry it would have to be specially built, and would be therefore more expensive than the ordinary type of merchant ships.

"The ordinary ship, however, can carry dried fruits and other freights without any extra cost in the way of refrigerating rooms. A ship of 6,000 net tons capacity, loaded with dried fruits at a Pacific port, will have earned on her freight when landed at the eastern market, putting the rate of $1 per 100 pounds, the sum of $120,000. A few such trips and the ship will have paid for herself. Refrigerating ships are now in use all over the world. One of them was attached to the United States Asiatic Fleet in 1898 and following years, and supplied fresh meat for the American Army and Navy in the Philippines. Another accompanied the Atlantic Fleet in its cruise around the world. This vessel carried about 1,000,000 pounds of fresh meat. Such vessels are in common use commercially, particularly in the fresh meat and fruit business.

"If a ship of 6,000 net tons be employed to carry freight from Pacific ports to ports on the Atlantic coast via the Panama Canal, and if she loads with the cheapest freight quoted—soaps and soap powder—at 80 cents per 100 pounds—$16 per ton—she will earn for each trip $96,000. Supposing her to be fully loaded on each trip—to carry the contents of 480 freight cars of 25,000 pounds each—she will earn $192,000 on each round trip. If we reduce these rates by one-half she will earn $96,000 each round trip. If the freight rate be reduced to one-fourth that quoted and put at $4 per ton, each round trip will give the owners $48,000, which would pay all interest, charges, expenses, and give the owners a good profit.

"Let us suppose that this 6,000-ton ship makes six round trips only per year, and that she costs when delivered to her owners $600,000. If she carries freight at present railroad rates of $60 per ton, and on each trip takes the load of 480 freight cars, she will earn $360,000 per trip, or $720,000 per round trip, or $4,320,000 per year.

"If the same ship in the same trade carries the same amount of freight at $20 per ton, she will earn for each trip $120,000, for the round trip $240,000, and for the year $1,440,000.

"If the same ship in the same trade carries the same amount of freight of the cheapest class quoted—$16 per ton—she will earn for each trip $96,000, for the round trip $192,000, and for the year $1,152,000.

"These figures as to the profits of transportation by water are, of course, based on the assumption of water haulage getting the same rates that the railroads get. They are startling, it is true, and yet they are fair. They simply show how inexcusably wasteful the nation is which restricts itself to the most expensive transportation and denies itself the cheapest. If my calculations seem extreme, investigate the facts.

"Everybody is worrying about our problem of increasing cost of living. Then let us save a few hundred millions a year in transportation charges. It will make necessaries of life cheaper all over the continent.

"Railroad financiers have long complained of the extreme difficulty in raising money to expand their systems as fast as the business of the country demands. Let us relieve them by taking some of the freight which overburdens them and sending it by water. They will be able to give better service for the rest, and there will be plenty of it, too.

"High as they seem in comparison with water rates, the truth is that the present railroad rates on business across the continent are the lowest rates in the country."

And that is true, Mr. President. The rates from New York to San Francisco are very much less than the rates from New York to Denver, and what is worse, the rates from San Francisco to Denver on some commodities are very much less than the rates from Denver to San Francisco.

"The mere possibility of water competition keeps the ocean-to-ocean rates comparatively low. Potential water competition is the reason the railroads assign for making a rate from New York to Portland, Oreg., that is lower than their rate from New York to Spokane."

That is the reason they give also for robbing the helpless inhabitants of communities in the interior.

"The distance to Spokane is less by some 400 miles. But there is no possibility of water competition at Spokane, an interior town. The railroads say there is the possibility, and in a small degree there is the fact, of water competition at Portland. So they give Portland the low rate.

"People at Denver complain against rates from New York to Denver, that are higher than on the same goods from New York to San Francisco; the same answer is given. San Francisco has the possibility of water competition.

"Water competition from New York to San Francisco to-day, it must be borne in mind, means competition by the long route around South America or else by way of the Isthmus, with a breakage of bulk, shipment over the Panama or the Tehuantepec Railroad, and reloading on shipboard for the last leg of the trip. Breaking of bulk is a highly expensive proceeding as well as a time consumer. Yet, despite this, the Tehuantepec Railroad, crossing Mexico at the narrowest part of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, is already carrying a huge traffic between the east and west coasts of the United States. It is able to take this business from our transcontinental railroads. How much more would the Panama Canal be able to take, presenting, as it would, an all-water route—with no delays, no transshipment, no rail carriage at all.

"Is it not surprising that, with such great economies in favor of the water route, so little business is done that way, and the transcontinental railroads with their high rates are allowed practically to monopolize the business? Let me explain some of the reasons.

"The Panama Railroad once built steamers, how many I do not recall, to run in connection with the road across the Isthmus of Panama. These steamers were to carry freight from New Orleans to Colon. When they were started, railroad rates across the continent were cut down to such a figure that the steamers could not be operated. Merchants were short-sighted enough to accept the low rates and, as a result, the ships went to the scrap heap or were sold for service in other waters, and the railroad rates went back to where they were before the steamship line was projected.

"Take still another case. A steamship line on the Pacific made a contract with a prominent railroad in the same section of the country. By the terms of this contract the railroad was allowed to fix freight rates on the ships, and in return for this extraordinary favor the railroad company was to pay for all empty cargo space on the ships for each trip. Of course the rates were made so high that the business did not amount to anything. But the railroad could well afford to pay the price rather than have water competition develop into the real thing. A line of ships sailing with empty holds was just the object lesson needed to keep others out of the business.

"So much for illustration of how the railroads are able to dictate terms. And they do it; they have done it repeatedly and persistently in the past.

"Perhaps the railroads do not charge more than a reasonable rate for their service. Undeniably, railroad haulage is vastly more expensive than water haulage. The railroads must charge more than waterway rates or they could not exist. Granting this to be true, there is too much evidence that the railroads tend to charge all they can get, rather than what they must have, in order to earn fair returns. There has recently been a complete illustration of this.

"The tariff duty on lemons, from 1897 down to 1909, was 1 cent per pound. It was placed there to protect the lemons of southern California in American markets against Sicilian lemons. California's lemon crop became very large. California lemons sold in Atlantic coast markets in competition with Palermo lemons. Railroad rates were low enough to enable dealers to do this. Presumably the railroads were earning a profit, for the California lemons were handled by the Southern Pacific and the Atchison roads, and those roads never earned so much money as during the 12 years referred to.

"However, the California lemon growers asked the makers of the Payne-Aldrich bill, last year, to increase their protection, so that they could control a larger proportion of the eastern market. Congress acceded to their demand, and raised the duty from 1 to 1½ cents per pound.

"And what happened? That one-quarter cent added duty was intended to help California lemons in eastern markets, where they must meet the Sicily product. But instantly the tariff law had passed and Congress had adjourned the Pacific railroads raised their rates on lemons from California to the eastern markets just one-quarter cent per pound, $5 per ton, $125 per car of 25 tons.

"That is, the railroads appropriated to themselves the entire amount which Congress intended for the lemon growers. Not that the railroads needed the money—their dividends and surplus accounts prove that they did not need it—but they had the power to take it, and they reached for it without delay.

"There is no reason why grain could not be shipped via the canal; there is no reason why such products as boots and shoes, hats, gloves, clothing of all kings, sugar, baking powder, the soap powder used earlier as an illustration, and a thousand other imperishable things could not be shipped at a cheap water rate, and the advantage in the long run would revert to the retail merchant and to the consumer in cheaper prices, provided canal charges do not prevent it.

"The ordinary layman is unable to see the justice of charging equal or greater prices for hauling freight from New York to Omaha or Salt Lake City and to San Francisco. The distance to San Francisco we know to be much greater, and it might be expected that freight rates would be greater; but they seem to be the same, and the only reason we can give for it is the fact that San Francisco may get certain kinds of freight by means of water transportation. Omaha and Salt Lake City are unfortunate in not being on the Pacific coast. The railroad man will reply to this that because of switching and other expenses the haul to the nearer place costs as much as to the other, and he will advance many other arguments to prove his contention that there is no discrimination in favor of one locality over another."

But I have yet to hear an argument, Mr. President, that contains the semblance of probability.

"And, finally, he will make it plain that if the producer in the interior of the country can not make money there, he should move to a location where he can, and we are forced to agree with him."

The interior of the country, in other words, is to be leeched not only of its property, but of its population, and because of the power of the railway companies to fix the rates of transportation so unjustly and upon the pretense that potential water competition justifies it.

"But does this lead to the true development of the country along the best lines? Would it not be better that some way would be found by which all those who choose to settle in the interior and develop the country should be able to get their produce to the consumer? Let the railroads receive their fair share of profits, but leave something for the farmer.

"Because sugar beets grow profusely in Colorado seems a good reason why they should be grown there, but if railroads can make more money in hauling coal, which is also abundant in the same State, and will not transport beets, then the population must give up the cultivation of beets and take to coal mining.

"If the sugar-beet-producing section of Colorado had the advantage of water transportation for its products, this would at once put an end to the problem of transportation, but such is not the case and never can be. That section, like the other great interior areas of our country, having been built up and developed by the railroads, must continue to live with them and by them. In time some remedy for troubles now existing will be found which will be fair and equitable alike to railroads, producers, and consumers.

"Let us now come back for a few moments to the region of country which enjoys water transportation wholly or in part. If the rates now charged for freight from one coast to the other could be secured by ships, it needs no argument to show that there would be a rush to reap this golden harvest. The question of operating expenses for the Panama Canal would be solved at once, for its opening day would see a long line of coastwise ships waiting to pass through it. A considerable proportion of the freight of all classes would go by water, and it is the opinion of many experienced men that this would still leave enough to be carried by the railroads to give them all the business they could properly do. Steamships would rapidly multiply if owners could be sure of one-third or one-fourth of present railroad rates, even if they had to pay $2 per net ton for passing through the canal. There would be no doubt about capital being ready to enter the business if only it were assured that our laws would not allow the railroads, as in the past, to cut rates long enough to ruin the shipowners, and then when the ships had been driven out of the business to put the rates up again. But $2 per ton, as has been pointed out, would have to be charged on all shipping because of our treaty stipulations, and this would divert too much foreign commerce and thus impose on our coastwise trade the payment of most of the money necessary for the operating expenses of the canal.

"A toll-free canal and laws which will subject the railroads to heavy penalties for practices designed to ruin the ocean shipping are the two things necessary, primarily, to assure the canal's usefulness and profitableness to the country."

That is to say, Mr. President, the one is the complement of the other; that the exemption of tolls should be accompanied by such legislation, if further legislation is necessary, as to make it impossible for the great lines of transcontinental traffic to so reduce their own rates as to neutralize the benefits designed to be bestowed upon the American people through the expenditure of such a vast sum of money for its creation.

"Let it be assumed now that we have demonstrated the necessity for absolutely free competition for keeping the steamship lines independent of railroad influence. Are there any further obstacles to establishing and maintaining that free competition?

"The first requisite for a successful steamship line is suitable docking at the two ends of the route. Without this no line can hope to succeed. An examination of this subject may not be without interest.

"Municipal ownership of docks is necessary in order that independent lines of steamships may hope for proper berthing and loading facilities. The Pacific coast from San Diego to Alaska, has many fine ports or harbors where one might expect to find, through municipal ownership of water-front property, docking locations available for new steamship lines; but most of such property is now in the hands of railroad corporations.

"An examination of the ports on this coast"—

Speaking of the Pacific coast—

"last year disclosed the fact that Los Angeles was about the only port that hoped to have a water front that could be advantageously used by an independent line of steamers. The harbor does not exist to-day, but the people seem to have made up their minds to have one. Only a few weeks ago they voted $10,000,000 for its construction, and they are resolved to own it after it is completed. It can be made ready by the time the Panama Canal is completed, but it will cost many millions of dollars, and some of the ablest men of the community feel sure that the railroads will have what they want when the work is completed."

I can not assent to that proposition, Mr. President. I am satisfied that the public spirit of the people of Los Angeles will see to it that their port is made free and that it is kept free, and, therefore, for the use alike of railway terminals and of ocean traffic.

"For all other ports than Los Angeles there seems small chance for municipal ownership. The Supreme Court many years ago decided that the States own all tideland below high-water mark in trust for public uses. Through State harbor boards the railroads have, it is believed, secured all the valuable water-front property of the ports from San Diego north, except in the case of Los Angeles. In some cases the property has first been improved by the State and secured by the railroads. One Pacific Coast State, Washington"—

Which is vitally interested in this question, demanding exemption from tolls for coastwise traffic—

"sold all its tideland at auction for a nominal price, and now the tidelands of the navigable streams in the State belong to railroad corporations."

It might be well to inquire just here how when the canal is opened, whether to free traffic or otherwise, vessels engaged in the coastwise traffic are going to find landing places on the Pacific coast without paying tribute to the very interests that propose to crush all competition, even to the extent of making this great canal useless? I confess I do not know; but I trust that the Pacific States may exercise their power of eminent domain for the purpose of recovering what they seem to have so shamelessly abandoned.

"It is well known that every American ship crossing the Pacific and every coast-line steamer south of Portland is owned or controlled by some one of the transcontinental railroads; and it is believed that the steamship lines north of Portland are controlled in the same way. Having this control, and at the same time owning the water front at most important points, it is not surprising to find that the railroads make freight rates to suit themselves; nor is it clear to the writer how this condition is to be changed.

"If Los Angeles succeeds in her efforts, she will become one of the first shipping ports of the Pacific coast. If San Francisco, San Diego, Portland, and other cities can recover any of their water-front property for the use of independent steamship lines, they may use it to great advantage. If these cities do not control such property, they will suffer severely in the competition with Los Angeles.

"The prospect for independent steamship lines and consequently reasonable freight rates is more promising from our Gulf and Atlantic coasts, because New Orleans, New York, and probably other cities were wise enough to retain control of their docks; and this municipal control will enable newly organized steamship lines to obtain suitable terminal facilities for the receipt and shipment of passengers and freight."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. THOMAS I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may say that the city of Portland, realizing the very great importance of the subject which the distinguished admiral is discussing in the articles which are being read by the Senator from Colorado, a short while ago voted to bond itself to purchase a suitable docking place in the city of Portland. They have done that, and now own it.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator if originally the city of Portland did not own it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Originally the State and the city owned it.

Mr. THOMAS. And sold it to the railroads?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. A large portion of it. The best portion of it was sold to the railroads which now own it. But the city has now bought a docking place for an independent line of steamers.

Mr. THOMAS. So that the melancholy and humiliating fact is that in days gone by the State and city parted with one of their most valuable public properties, and are now compelled, by eminent domain or by contract, to purchase, to buy back, at prices fixed, directly or indirectly, by the railroad company, that which they once owned and disposed of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that one of the most humiliating facts in the commercial history of the continent is that great communities and Commonwealths, presumably peopled by patriotic and wise and farseeing men and women, should have permitted the acquisition of water fronts, so absolutely essential to their commercial life, to say nothing of their general welfare, by great corporations, whose interests all dictate that they shall stifle and, if possible, destroy all water competition.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. I may add that this evil is not confined to the Pacific coast, but it exists, though not to such an extensive degree, on the Atlantic seaboard, where in many places the railway companies have also reached out and acquired practically all the water front of some of the most important commercial centers in the country.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is not that true with reference to a great many opportunities which the people have given away to corporations in the way of granting subsidies and making donations of land? I have known some instances where the sovereign rights of the people have been bartered and given away in order to bring about a little temporary prosperity to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. It is true, Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, that this is not the only manner in which these great concerns have acquired valuable rights and property belonging to all the people, and through their ownership have not only stifled individual opportunity but have made competition practically impossible, thus increasing their power to tax the consuming public through the imposition of rates and also increasing their power to issue added quantities of stock, common and preferred, and of large bonded obligations, which, of course, increase their fixed charges and give fresh excuse for demanding and imposing added rates upon the commerce of the world.

Mr. President, I am not surprised that these abuses have resulted in the creation of a widespread—I may say, almost universal—conviction that our governing powers, executive, legislative, and judicial, have become agencies for the accomplishment of corporate ambitions and no longer represent and care for the interests of the people; and that other conviction, that the Government now exists not for the general welfare but for special interests. This is the fruitful foundation, and to a large extent the excuse, for that widespread disrespect of law and the conviction that the average man has not and can not receive the protection and enjoy the opportunities which a Government like this is supposed to secure to him. I do not wonder when I read of unhappy conditions indicating the unrest everywhere prevalent throughout the country, that justification is found for them in the wholesale spoliation of the public and in the acquisition of the advantages and property thus secured in the continued spoliation of the individual.

"Without this control our entire eastern and southern coast would be in the same hampered condition as the Pacific coast. But a steamship line, like a railroad, must have terminal facilities at both ends in order to conduct its business profitably either for itself or its patrons. How these terminals are to be secured in ports where railroads control the water front is not clear; but when the people interested—producers and consumers—realize their situation, some solution of the problem will undoubtedly be found."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has said that his city, in anticipation of these coming benefits, has already taken action. I trust that all cities may do so and reacquire these valuable properties, not only to the extent that they may deem essential, but all of them, and then let the railroad companies contract with the people for the use of property which never should have been vested in private hands.

"Terminal facilities will not solve our difficulties of securing emancipation from railroad control. Suppose there is a great fruit region 100 miles inland from Los Angeles. The fruit growers desire to ship to New York by water. They must first patronize the railroads, for the railroads must haul the fruit that 100 miles to tidewater at the new harbor of Los Angeles. This again places the water line at the mercy of the railroads. If the railroads are allowed to charge whatever they will for this short haul to the port of shipment, they can make the rate so high as to deprive the water shipper of all benefits; and they may do so, if the laws and their administration permit. There must be rigid control of railroad rates, State and interstate, to prevent just such conditions as this.

"A glance at the present condition of freight hauling to and from the great city of New York will be instructive in this connection. The situation of the city, with its wonderful water front and municipal ownership of docks, is ideal for water transportation in every direction, and yet it is difficult to find a single American freight ship or line of ships sailing from New York that is not controlled in some way by a railroad corporation. The freights west are controlled by one road and those south by another.

"If this is to continue when the Panama Canal is put in use, then there will be no advantage, except to the transcontinental railroads, from digging the big ditch. It will be hard work for independent steamship lines to organize and operate successfully against the powerful forces which control the situation; and if it be difficult in New York, what will it be for other ports on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts?

"A word as to the effect upon our transcontinental railroads of taking away from them the great volume of business which they would lose to the canal route if the latter were given free opportunity to compete honestly and squarely.

"Undeniably the initial showing suggests a fearful and disastrous loss of revenues to these railroads. But the loss would not be imposed all at once; it would come gradually; and, while the railroads would be losing part of their through business, the adjustment of freight charges to the new basis would cause a development of the interior, especially of the great West, from which would grow up a vast volume of local business to take the place of the through traffic which now constitutes the bulk of their tonnage. The more equitable development of the country would make up to the roads in local traffic what they would lose in long-distance business.

"There is no doubt of the correctness of this conclusion. Even with the trans-Missouri West sparsely settled as it is today, the business of the transcontinental railroads is fast outrunning their capacity to handle it. It is only two or three years since the systems connecting Puget Sound with the Great Lakes proved utterly incompetent to handle the traffic forced upon them. When the Dakotas, Minnesota, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington shall have doubled their present population—and that will be comparatively few years hence—the railroads and the people alike will be thankful for the relief which the canal route will give from conditions of congestion, delay, and excessive freight rates.

"Let the great intermountain and Pacific West States have the benefit of more reasonable freight rates and there will come a new era of development which will assure the railroads all the business they can possibly handle, while the canal route will carry a tonnage which, at vastly reduced rates, will signify prosperity and vast economies to the whole Nation. For the economic principle is firmly established that the power to levy freight tolls is a power to tax, and to reduce by a vast sum the burden of such taxation will be to invite a new prosperity and development to the whole country.

"So far we have not considered the effect of the canal when in operation upon the commerce of our island possessions. Under the present laws the commerce from one American port to another such port must be by ships flying the American flag. The scarcity of such ships necessarily produces high freight rates because of lack of competition, but this is felt only when merchandise or produce is shipped from one home port to another. Produce from one of our island possessions to any foreign market may be shipped in foreign bottoms, and as the competition in that case is keen, freight rates are low, and we find much of the sugar and other products of Hawaii and the Philippines, which should naturally seek American markets, diverted to others.

"One more effect of the canal on our widest national interests must be named. A free canal, with free competition, means the instant demand for a great fleet of fast cargo-carrying steamships. These must be built in American shipyards, sailed under the American flag, and held subject to impressment as auxiliaries to the American Navy in time of war. In a large way it may be said that this free canal would assure development of this needed auxiliary force for our Navy.

"In my own view this is one of the most important reasons why the canal must be made free and why it is the duty of Congress to take early steps to make sure that it shall be free both as to tolls and as to the right of honest competition with the railroads.

"The question of the military value of the Panama Canal, when completed, has not yet been touched upon, and for evident reasons must be treated by the writer only in such a general way as to avoid an infraction of the Naval Regulations.

"In times of peace the canal will save to the Government the sum of money that is now required to pay for the coal used in steaming from one ocean to the other through the Strait of Magellan. This is a considerable sum and may fairly be considered as an important economy. The time saved need not be considered as of value; but if war is threatened, time becomes of great value, and in that case the use of the canal might prove of vital importance.

"The value of the canal in time of war is a question on which the officers both of the Army and Navy differ. One opinion holds that unless the canal is strongly fortified at both ends it will be of no practical value in time of war. The other opinion, and I find myself with those who hold it, is that no amount of fortifying will render the canal of real value for the passage of a fleet of war vessels from one ocean to the other after war has been declared or when war is known to be inevitable.

"At the Pacific end of the canal fortifications might be so placed on available sites as to assist a fleet in its passage from the Atlantic by holding the enemy's fleet in check until our own had completed its battle formation on the Pacific side. If we may judge by what forts have been able to do in the past when opposed by ships, we have good grounds for thinking that our fleet would run serious danger of being destroyed in detail despite the assistance of such forts. Much would, of course, depend on the ability and courage of our enemy, and on this point we have good knowledge of the officers and men of the only nation we have any danger of ever meeting in battle in this vicinity."

Mr. President, I shall ask to include without reading that part of this discussion which refers to the military and naval advantages of the canal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"It is granted, however, that forts at the Pacific end of the canal might be of value.

"At the Atlantic end of the canal it is not apparent how forts, no matter how many, could assist a fleet passing through the waterway to secure a battle formation before being attacked. There are no outlying islands as on the Pacific side and no high land on which forts could be advantageously constructed.

"Some authorities think that mortar batteries would be effective for the purpose, and still others suggest airships. Naval opinion generally places about as much value on the one as on the other; we seriously doubt the ability of mortars to prevent an active naval commander inflicting fatal damage on an enemy's fleet emerging, one ship at a time, from the Atlantic entrance to the canal before it could gain a battle formation. The same opinion is held by many with reference to any guns that may be mounted on the islands about the Pacific entrance to the canal. As to airships, we may safely leave them out of consideration.

"The question of our right to fortify at all has also caused a division among the legal lights of the two services. One opinion is that we have no right to defend the canal by the construction of forts or fortifications of any kind, and the other is that we must build forts in order to enforce treaty rights. If money is voted for such forts and the President directs their construction, the question will be finally settled, so far as we are concerned.

"It is admitted on all sides that we could not build, or dig, the Panama Canal until the treaty between this country and England, known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, was modified. In the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which eventually succeeded and took the place of the former, one would expect to find some definite and explicit provision for the fortification of the canal, provided the contracting parties intended that forts should be used for the purpose. An examination of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty shows only the following on the subject:

"Article 3, paragraph 2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any act of hostility be committed within it. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

"Those who claim that we have a right to fortify the canal do so because of what is left out of the treaty rather than what is therein expressed. If we are to prevent acts of hostility in the canal, it may be necessary for us to construct forts in order to do it, and it seems probable that we shall do so. It is inconceivable that the United States will spend four or five hundred millions of dollars for a canal and then protect it only with a treaty. Treaties are too easily broken by any nation strong enough to do so for us to rely on that defense alone. And we must see that our canal is not blockaded, as well as 'no act of hostility committed within it'; it is not clear just what good purpose the forts will serve if they are constructed. Certainly no reasonable person will claim that forts can prevent fleets from blockading either or both entrances to the canal.

"The treaty with Panama, on the other hand, authorized the United States, in plain words, to fortify the canal as she sees fit. It must be remembered, however, that the treaty with England is the one under which we assumed the right to dig the canal, and without it the work would never have been undertaken.

"The solution of the problem is plain. We must increase our Navy until we can be sure that it is strong enough to prevent the canal from being blockaded. If it is never blockaded, then the only acts of hostility that can be committed within it will be such as we can control by military police along its banks. It is quite possible that this was in the minds of those who framed the treaty; but whether it was or not, the only real defense of the canal which will permit its free use in time of war is a strong fleet of battleships in the Atlantic and another in the Pacific. The sooner we have them the sooner the people of the United States will feel secure about the greatest and most costly work they have ever undertaken."

Mr. THOMAS. I give now his summary of conclusions:

"In conclusion, it may be worth while to summarize the points I have tried to make plain. To me it seems plain—

"SUMMARY OF POINTS.

"First. That the amount of international trade for the canal will be disappointingly small and entirely unremunerative.

"Second. That the canal must compete with Suez, which can give differential rates, and can even make free, if the British Government chooses, any given trade, thus affording most effective protection to British shipping.

"Third. That the Panama Canal will give a disappointingly small impetus to our foreign trade.

"Fourth. That its chief benefit to us as a Nation will be in lowering freights and equalizing transportation conditions between different sections of the country.

"Fifth. That the methods and the success of the railroads in the past in suppressing water competition justify the fear that the same procedure will be invoked to prevent the canal doing its true work. Steamships using the canal may be controlled by the railroads and rates kept so high as to protect the rail routes in their high charges.

"Sixth. That this sort of unrestrained and vicious competition can be prevented by rigorous regulative measures.

"Seventh. That in order to assure real competition between the canal and the rail routes, the canal should be toll free.

"Eighth. That if it is made toll-free, and if the necessary regulations are enforced to assure absolutely free and honest competition, there will have to be built, to handle this canal business, a great number of fast cargo-carrying steamships.

"Ninth. These steamships would sail under the American flag, and would be a most valuable auxiliary to our Navy in time of war.

"The question will naturally be asked, How is the Panama Canal to make commercial success for this country, which the people, whose money will have dug it, have a right to demand? The answer seems plain. Either another treaty must be made allowing American bottoms free use of the canal—or such rates as Congress may establish—and imposing uniform rates on all foreign vessels using the canal, or the waterway must be declared free to all comers. In addition, some plan must be devised by which railroads may be prevented from controlling the freight rates charged by steamships. Unless the railroads can be so prevented the canal may, when completed, be only a means of greater profits to them. If made a free waterway, the danger from railroad manipulation will be reduced to a minimum, if not entirely removed.

"The next question that naturally arises is, How are such safeguards to be thrown around this great Government work? And again the answer seems plain: The whole matter is in the hands of the people who vote. We are, fortunately, governed by the majority, and the votes of this majority make the laws for us. The same votes that elect the governors and legislatures of the States elect the Members of the lower House of Congress; and as the State legislatures elected by the votes of the citizens elect the Senators of the United States, it is plain that these votes of the majority can control the canal situation as they may think best. The voters have only to elect the servants who are to carry out their expressed wishes, and it must be done. We are forced to believe that the servants so elected are honest, patriotic men, and that they carry out the wishes of their constituents, otherwise we lose faith in our form of government. The legislatures of the States regulate the railroads of their States and the Congress of the United States regulates interstate commerce. In other words, the servants of the people, elected by the votes of the majority of the people, have full power to enact and enforce such laws as will make the Panama Canal what it should be when completed—a great commercial benefit to all the people of this country.

"The whole question is in the hands of the voters; if those now in office will not carry out the wishes of the voters, let the voters elect others who will do so."

Mr. President, I have now completed the task of reading into the RECORD the views upon canal tolls of one of America's greatest admirals and citizens, written at a time when the passions of the American people had not been aroused by disputed constructions of the treaty, assumed by some and believed by others to be a construction to which this country should not accede. Believing in the wisdom of the proposal when made and believing in it more thoroughly now, I felt impelled to bring it to the attention of Congress in the hope that it might not only prove a satisfactory solution of the present controversy but at the same time appeal to the economic judgment of the Members of both Houses as one essential to the commercial welfare of the country and to the accomplishment of the main purposes for which this vast expenditure has been made.

I quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that this great question should be settled by the calm, dispassionate judgment both of legislators and of the people. In our moments of excitement, when crimination and recrimination crowd upon each other, we are apt to be guided rather by our passions than by our reason, and when men act under such impulses it is only to marvel when they reach a correct conclusion.

This policy of making the canal absolutely free is in entire accord with every line and every letter of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. It is not one which can arouse the opposition of any man familiar with that famous document who exercises his judgment and intelligence in its construction. It is one which seems to me must convince the man who wants to see the canal the great equalizer of transportation rates in this country, because without such a condition it would seem that the canal can not subserve that great purpose.

Mr. President, I am not now going into or even pretending to discuss salient features of the controversy evolved by the bill which has recently passed the House. I may do so later. But I want to say in closing that I am unable to accept the view of many Senators that the canal tolls act exempting American coastwise shipping from its operation confers upon them something in the nature of a subsidy. If I thought so, I would be impelled to give that conviction more preference in the exercise of my judgment as to how I should vote than I am disposed to give to that plank in the Democratic platform which relates directly to the subject.

I shall not enter into definitions of subsidies—and I quite agree that some definitions are sufficiently comprehensive to include this situation. But if it be true that American coastwise vessels are to enjoy a subsidy under this act, then it is equally true that every man whose income is less than $3,000 enjoys a subsidy under our income-tax law, and it is equally true that all commerce enjoying the benefit of the improvement of our rivers and harbors, the benefit of our system of coast protection, the lighthouses and buoys, likewise enjoys a subsidy conferred by law. Surely, Mr. President, that which extends equal privileges to all engaged in the same pursuit is a benefit. It may be a benefit peculiar to a particular pursuit, but it does not conform to my understanding of a subsidy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am interested in the Senator's discussion of that very elastic word "subsidy," which I think never has been defined to the satisfaction of all of us. I will ask the Senator if the exemption of tolls on our coastwise shipping is a subsidy, did not every Democratic Senator when he voted for the Underwood-Simmons tariff law giving 5 per cent differential in favor of goods carried in American ships commit himself to a subsidy? I will say that I do not think that in either case it can properly be called a subsidy.

Mr. THOMAS. I would not, Mr. President, pass judgment upon the acts of my associates on this side of the Chamber. Speaking for myself—and I have no right to speak for anyone else—I think that in voting for that measure with that clause and with the $3,000 exemption clause in the income-tax section I voted for subsidies, if they are subsidies. What other Senators may think is, of course, within their domain and province, and I should hesitate to criticize or to draw any conclusion from their action.

During the delivery of Mr. THOMAS's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The Senator from Colorado will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 156, relative to expenditures for telegrams sent by Senators.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Colorado can finish his remarks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. With the understanding that it does not lose its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside with the understanding that it shall not lose its place as unfinished business. Is there objection? There being no objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. THOMAS's speech,

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to put into the RECORD a letter on the subject of arbitration with respect to the question we are now discussing. It is a letter from ex-President Roosevelt to Dr. Abbott, dated January 7, 1913. I ask that the Secretary read it at the desk. I put this in because it expresses the views I entertain as to this question going to arbitration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From The Outlook for January, 1913.]

ARBITRATION AND PANAMA.

The editor in chief of The Outlook has received the following letter from Mr. Roosevelt:

JANUARY 7, 1913.

MY DEAR DR. ABBOTT: I believe that under the arbitration treaty of 1908 the United States is honorably bound to arbitrate the question raised by Sir Edward Grey on behalf of Great Britain in reference to the canal tolls, provided the question can not be settled in some other way satisfactory to both powers.

I believe that the position of the United States is proper as regards this coastwise traffic. I think that we have the right to free bona fide coastwise traffic from tolls. I think that this does not interfere with the rights of any other nation, because no ships but our own can engage in coastwise traffic, so that there is no discrimination against other ships when we relieve the coastwise traffic from tolls. I believe that the only damage that would be done is the damage to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Moreover, I do not think that it sits well on the representatives of any foreign nation, even upon those of a power with which we are, and I hope and believe will always remain, on such good terms as Great Britain, to make any plea in reference to what we do with our own coastwise traffic, because we are benefiting the whole world by our action at Panama, and are doing this where every dollar of expense is paid by ourselves. In all history I do not believe you can find another instance where as great and expensive a work as the Panama Canal, undertaken not by a private corporation but by a nation, has ever been as generously put at the service of all the nations of mankind.

Moreover, I quite admit that it would be a difficult thing to get an arbitral tribunal which will not have some bias against us. Switzerland is almost the only community which has not some commercial interest in the Panama Canal.

Nevertheless, I hold that these considerations in no way affect our moral obligation to arbitrate the question if Great Britain so insists. It is to be presumed that we made the promise with our eyes open, and were aware that it might not be wholly pleasant to keep it. I was certainly alive to this fact. But the very fact that the promise may not be easy to keep is the reason why we make it with the solemnity attending a treaty. A promise to arbitrate is worthless unless we mean to keep it on the precise occasions when it is unpleasant for us to do so. Moreover, this arbitration must be, if Great Britain so desires, at the permanent court at The Hague, unless we are prepared to violate our solemn arbitration treaty proclaimed by our Government on June 5, 1908. Article 1 of this treaty explicitly states that "differences relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties" shall be referred to The Hague court, "provided that they do not affect the vital interests or the independence or the honor of the two contracting States." It seems to me impossible to argue that the question of tolls on our coastwise traffic is one which affects either the vital interests of America or its independence or its honor. Such being the case, I hold that it is a matter of honorable obligation on our part to live up to that arbitration treaty in spirit and letter, and that therefore, if the question can not be settled in some other way, we must refer it to The Hague court for arbitration.

This whole incident illustrates well the folly of those Americans who a year or two ago endeavored to commit this country to general arbitration treaties under which they would have been bound to arbitrate everything. A general arbitration treaty is nothing whatever but a promise, and surely every man in private life understands that the whole worth of a promise consists in its being kept, and that it is deeply discreditable for any man to make a promise when there is reasonable doubt whether he can keep it. A merchant who loosely promises all kinds of things without serious thought as to whether he will be able to keep his promises is in grave jeopardy of losing both his fortune and his good name. The same thing is true of a nation. We should understand that the time to weigh, and to weigh well and thoroughly, the full import of a promise is the time when it is desired to make that promise, and not the time when it is desired to break that promise.

What is going on in connection with this canal treaty now illustrates well the truth of this position. I have always advocated the arbitration of such questions as the interpretation of this Hay-Pauncefote treaty. When I negotiated the arbitration treaties of 1908, I acted in accordance with what seemed the practically unanimous desire of our people, and with what certainly was the almost unanimous desire of the representatives of the people in the Senate and the lower House of Congress. Now, when I made that treaty I understood entirely that under it we might be obliged to arbitrate questions where we thought that our side was absolutely right, and where, nevertheless, it was always possible that a court might decide against us. This is precisely one of those cases. We are right, and yet the court may decide against us. But, with our eyes open, we have agreed to arbitrate just such cases as this, and we must not now go back on that agreement. I believe in being cautious about making promises. I believe in refusing to make foolish and sweeping general promises which it would be impossible and improper to keep. But when we have deliberately and solemnly made a promise, then I most emphatically believe that this Nation should keep that promise just as an honorable man would do as regards a private promise of the same type. Therefore I believe it to be the bounden duty of this Nation to arbitrate the question of the canal tolls under the provisions of our arbitration treaty.

Faithfully, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The Rev. Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT,
Editor in Chief of The Outlook, New York.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment. I wish to make just a few short remarks in connection with what has just been read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I agree with the utterances of ex-President Roosevelt to the effect that this is a question which might be very well and ought to be submitted to arbitration; but I wish to ask the question now, Do the followers of ex-President Roosevelt upon this floor believe it?

If it had been thought that this question could be submitted to arbitration, that the Senate would submit it to arbitration, the question never would have been here in its present form. When we were discussing this matter when the Panama Canal act was passed, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the colleague of the Senator who has just had this article read, in his place upon the floor of the Senate said that this was not an arbitrable question. He differed from the ex-President. He thought it was a matter that affected the independence and the vital interests and the honor of the United States. We found, or thought we found, that a good many more than a third of the Senate entertained that idea, and they were not willing to submit the question to arbitration.

I am not one of those who say that the exemption of coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls was a violation of the treaty with Great Britain; but I am one of those who say that the position which the Senate or its Members have undoubtedly taken, that they will not submit this question to arbitration, is a violation of another treaty which we have made with about eight or nine powers; a treaty which says that all questions of the interpretation of treaties shall be submitted to arbitration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been a pretty constant attendant upon the sessions of the Senate for a long time, and I do not recall that this question ever was presented to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I did not say it was. There are more ways of finding out what Senators think than by presenting a question to the Senate. Will the Senator say that he believes two-thirds of the Senate would submit this question to arbitration, or will he, on the contrary, frankly tell me that he does not believe it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am always frank when I am dealing with the Senator from Mississippi. He knows that. I will say that I do not think two-thirds of the Senate would.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I know they would not.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the same time, I do not think the matter ought to go out to the world in a form which would indicate that the Senate has committed itself on this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nothing that I said could have meant that. We took the pains to find out to the best of our ability; and we found out that if the proposition were made to this country to submit this question to arbitration, to The Hague or elsewhere, it would not pass the Senate by the requisite vote. Therefore we would stand in the attitude of being believed by others, though not by ourselves, so far as I am concerned, to have violated one treaty, and being known by all the world to have violated nine others, namely, the treaties which say that all questions affecting the interpretation of treaties shall be submitted to arbitration except when they affect the vital interests or the independence or the honor of the United States or the interests of a third party.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word more. In this connection I will say that I have met thus far two Members of the Senate opposed to this repeal who tell me that they are none the less in favor of submitting the question to arbitration. If there are more, I do not know it. One of the Senators is the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]; but I think I have his permission to say so, because he rose a moment ago to interrupt me, as I imagine, for the purpose of making that statement.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator did not read my mind correctly, though I am in favor of arbitration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator told me so, and I thought that was the purpose for which he rose.

Mr. KENYON. I rose to ask the Senator who were the "we" to whom he referred. I know nobody asked me as to my vote with regard to arbitration the last time. Other Senators here were not asked. Who were the "we" who decided that matter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not care about defining who "we" were; but first one man, and then another, and various others, undertook to feel the Senate; and no one man felt all of them, of course.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator allow a question there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We are urged to repeal this section of the statute for certain specific reasons. Does the Senator believe the submission of this question to arbitration would meet those reasons?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely. Now, Mr. President, my situation about that matter is this, and I hope the Senator will bear with me a moment. This was all I had intended to say; but since the Senator has asked the question I will go further.

I do not believe exempting our coastwise vessels from the payment of tolls is a violation of this treaty. It is not necessary for me to enter into the reasons why I do not believe it. On some future occasion I will enter into them. I am in favor of this repeal now, just as I would be in favor of extinguishing a contract with the Senator from Wyoming under certain circumstances.

If I had a written contract with the Senator from Wyoming, and I went to him and said, "In consequence of that contract with you I am going to proceed, upon a certain day, to perform a certain act," and if the Senator from Wyoming were to say to me, "Well, John, I do not construe that contract as you do, and you must admit that I have an equal right to construe it," then, as we would be individuals and not nations, I would have one of several replies to make. I might bridle up like a bully and I might say to him, "Well, I don't care what you think about the contract; I construe my own contract." If I did, that would bring on more than words, I think, with him. Or I might turn around then and say, "Well, old fellow, I am sorry you take a different view of it; and without any harsh feeling between us, we will leave it to the courts of the country."

There comes in the break in the analogy, because in a quarrel between nations there is no court except the high court at The Hague and the provisions made in that treaty for arbitral tribunals.

Taking it for granted that these are international courts, and agreed upon beforehand—either the court at The Hague, or, as is provided in these treaties, another arbitral tribunal to be provided for by the countries at the time—we have not said to our opponent in this case, in a good-natured way, "Of course you have as much right to judge the contract as we, and without loss of mutual respect or friendship we will leave it to this international court." We have said, or we will say, "We will do neither."

There is another course that I think a gentleman might pursue under the circumstances I have outlined. When the Senator from Wyoming told me that he did not construe the contract as I did, and I expressed my regret and said, "We will go to the courts," perhaps one of the Senators from Indiana might come along after a while and say to me, "John, Clark has been talking to me about this matter, and I think you are wrong and Clark is right." Then, later on, the other Senator from Indiana might come and say, "Williams, I understand this matter, and, old fellow, I think you are wrong. I think under all the circumstances accompanying the making of the contract, and under the contract itself, you are wrong. I know you think you are right." Others might come and say the same thing. Then I think, if I know myself, I would go to the Senator from Wyoming and say, "I invited you into court the other day upon this question, but mutual friends of ours, some of them better friends of mine than of yours, say I am wrong, and I will not put you to the expense and the trouble of a lawsuit. Hereafter I will be more careful in drawing my contracts."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the Senator illumines this subject as he does all others, but I think he failed to get the gist of my inquiry.

I suppose that if it had not been for conditions that have been intimated to us nobody would have thought of this legislation at this particular time. I am assuming, and I believe I am justified in assuming, that no Member of the Senate and no Member of the House of Representatives would have introduced at this time a bill for the repeal of that clause of the Panama Canal act, save that the President himself had said that he needed the repeal of this clause in order that he might act with a freer hand and with better results upon some other matters. To my notion that absolutely bars at this time the question of arbitration; so that I do not think the question of arbitration of which the Senator was speaking is really pertinent to the discussion at this time. That was what I meant to imply by my question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate, because I did not rise to make a speech, except to say briefly that I do not think the Senator from Wyoming has correctly paraphrased or abbreviated the message of the President. Of course, the President did refer to that as one of the reasons why we ought to help him to do this; but the President took a broader ground, the ground being that in his opinion—not in mine, but in his—this clause was a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty; and the other things which the President mentioned were mere auxiliary reasons given upon that occasion.

Mr. President, I wish to ask that there be inserted in the RECORD without reading it a letter from Mr. J. C. Hooker, of San Diego, Cal., together with a newspaper clipping accompanying it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SPRECKELS COS.,
San Diego, Cal., March 29, 1914.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to acknowledge receipt, with thanks, of your kind note of the 18th instant, and, as possessing peculiar interest at this period of tense feeling over the "Panama Canal tolls" question, am forwarding you what appears to be a calm and conservative side light on the economic phase of that important subject. This editorial was taken from the Sacramento (Cal.) Union, a strong but not widely known Democratic daily, which has consistently supported President Wilson since the inception of our primary campaign, in 1912.

I trust that when the free-tolls proposition comes up for debate and a vote in the Senate next week your influence—as it has been on practically all the far-reaching measures before your present Congress—will be found on the right side of this mooted question.

With all good wishes and great respect, I beg to be,

Very sincerely, yours, J. C. HOOKER.

[From the Sacramento Union for March 23, 1914.]

FREE TOLLS A BOUNTY.

In the course of an address on canal tolls delivered in New York a short time ago Prof. Emory Johnson, of the University of Pennsylvania, the expert who was chosen by President Taft to prepare a schedule of canal tolls, produced some figures showing the economic effect of permitting American coastwise ships to use the canal free.

The professor's statement shows that the free use of the waterway means the actual gift of $20,000,000 to the shipowners by the American people. He said:

"To enable the canal to carry itself commercially without being a continuing burden upon the taxpayers of the country it will be necessary to secure revenues of about $19,250,000 per annum.

"This revenue must be secured mainly from the tolls collected from the vessels that use the canal. If all vessels paid tolls, the revenue of the canal at the end of 10 years would cover the annual outlay for operating expenses and charges upon capital. To exempt coastwise ships from the payment of tolls means a decrease of at least $20,000,000 in revenue during the first 10 years and means the addition of that amount to the burdens to be carried by the taxpayers of the country."

It is a little difficult to understand on what basis Democrats can vote for the gift of this great sum to the shipowners of the country. While the Californians are belligerently fighting railroad and other corporations, they are throwing their strength in favor of a direct bounty to shipowners.

While the canal law aims to prevent the railroad-owned ships from securing the advantages of using the canal, it is certain that the men who own the railroads will have some of their money in the coastwise ships and that the supporters of the free-tolls scheme are deliberately voting their money to these concerns.

Of course the explanation is that the free tolls will give more competition by encouraging more ships. This is the old protection argument, but it has never worked.

It is not likely that the rebate in tolls will go to the shippers until the shipowner's pocket is full. A shipowner is just as selfish as a railroad magnate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also ask that there be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading, a letter from Mr. H. Rexroth, of the Deutsch-Amerikanische Friedens Gesellschaft of New York, dated April 1, and addressed to me, together with a set of resolutions passed by a mass meeting of German-Americans upon December 11, 1912, both of them advocating the repeal of the clause in the Panama Canal act exempting our coastwise ships from the payment of tolls.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEUTSCH-AMERIKANISCHE FRIEDENS GESELLSCHAFT,
New York, N. Y., April 1, 1914.

Hon. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed resolutions, adopted by a German-American mass meeting held in this city, we recommend to your most careful consideration.

It was the sense of the meeting that they should be forwarded to Congress whenever action on the Panama toll question was pending.

The meeting in which these resolutions were adopted was one of the most representative meetings of German-Americans that could be held in this city; the large hall of the Arion Society, which holds 1,500 persons, was filled to overflowing; many sent away because they did not find admittance.

Before a vote was taken opportunity was given for discussion, and the chairman expressly called for any opponents to express their opinion, but no dissenting voice was heard, no dissenting vote given.

While some German-Americans, moved by an antagonism against Great Britain from out of considerations which have no connection whatever with the welfare and honor of our beloved country, and are willing to oppose any act that accords fair treatment to that nation, there is no doubt that the representative element of the German-American citizens favor the equal treatment of all nations, including our own, as to the payment of tolls and favor any act that will remove from our beloved country any suspicion that tries to evade its solemn treaty obligation.

In correlation of this statement we mention the fact that the leading German-American newspapers—the New York Staats-Zeitung and the New York Herald—editorially uphold this view in the strongest possible way.

Trusting that your vote and influence will help to rescind the unfair discrimination in favor of American shipping in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty,

We are, yours, respectfully,

DR. ERNST RICHARD, President.
Per H. REXROTH, Secretary.

(The officers of the German-American Peace Society of the United States of America.)

Resolutions adopted by German-American mass meeting December 11, 1912.

The meeting of American citizens, held on invitation of the German-American Peace Society on December 11, 1912, protests against the laws recently passed by Congress as to the free passage of American vessels through the Panama Canal as contrary to the language and—as expressly testified by a living negotiator of the treaty, to wit, our own representative, Joseph H. Choate—to the sense of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and as making our Nation guilty of a breach of treaty. By the change in the ownership of the Canal Zone our obligations have not been influenced, especially since, in the treaty with New Granada, later supplanted by treaties with Great Britain, any favoring of the vessels of the owner nation is expressly forbidden. Therefore, we can certainly not claim it to be a matter of course that the vessels of the owner nation now should be free of tolls. Even more obnoxious appears to us the refusal to submit the controversy to The Hague court of arbitration. This will involve a second breach of treaty, since the interpretation of treaties as an object of arbitral justice is just what has been provided for in our arbitration treaty with Great Britain.

We therefore ask the officers of the German-American Peace Society to do, with the help of other organizations, everything in their power to secure practical recognition to the views expressed in the present resolution, so that we may not bring upon us the infamy of breaking solemn international pledges which would deprive us not only of our leading position in the movement for the world's peace as well as of the confidence and respect of the civilized nations, but would also do unspeakable harm to the cause of international justice in general.

TELEGRAMS OF SENATORS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now renew the motion which I made, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair inquires what became of the unfinished business?

Mr. NELSON. The unfinished business was laid aside temporarily at 2 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the unfinished business was not laid aside for the day.

Mr. NELSON. It was laid aside temporarily at the time the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] was speaking.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator can call for it at any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not agree to lay it aside now. There is just one more vote to be taken. When we last had the unfinished business under consideration, an amendment in the nature of a substitute by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] had just passed the Senate. One more vote will pass the resolution. I ask for the regular order and the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. McCUMBER. My motion at least would be in order at any time after 2 o'clock. I am rather inclined to think, even though it would take but a few moments to dispose of the matter which now appears as the unfinished business on the calendar, that it would not hurt the matter if it should go over and have a little longer deliberation; and I ask the Senator from Mississippi not to press it for to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather that the matter be finished now. It will not take long. I think just one more vote will be all that will be required. In fact, the matter has been virtually terminated, because the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Iowa was a substitute, and all that remains is to go through the parliamentary process of putting to a vote the resolution as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. That is debatable.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not sure that that would end it. I think we might possibly have quite a little discussion. I will leave it to the desire of the Senate, however, and ask for the putting of my motion. Whatever the result may be, of course I shall abide by it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the motion will say "aye"; those opposed, "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to take up Senate bill 120.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the grain-grading bill, which I have tried to get up for some time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course the Senate can dispossess the unfinished business by agreeing to a motion to take up another measure; there is no dispute about that. I do not think any haste can be made by that course, however. You might just as well get rid of the unfinished business and commence with the other measure afterwards.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the motion is not debatable, I believe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. All in favor will say "aye"; those opposed, "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I thought the Senate could get through with the resolution this afternoon, I think I should withdraw the motion; but I am certain we can not get through with it this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The status of the unfinished business is that the pending question is on the resolution as amended. The yeas and nays have been called for, and the request has been seconded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There will be nothing to do but to call the roll on the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing to do but call the roll unless some one wishes to speak.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think the matter will be discussed. I do not want to discuss it any further, and I do not know of anybody who does.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask what the pending question is in reference to the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. SHIVELY. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT (putting the question). By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. SHIVELY. I call for a division.

There were, on a division—ayes 16, noes 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Vice President votes "no"; but there is no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	James	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Kenyon	Pomerene	Smoot
Bryan	Kern	Reed	Thomas
Catron	La Follette	Robinson	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Shafroth	Walsh
Crawford	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Gallinger	McCumber	Sherman	West
Gore	Martin, Va.	Shively	Williams
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was requested to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent because of sickness in his family.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence on business of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call—there is not a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absentees, and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. JONES, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. POINDEXTER answered to their names when called.

Mr. FALL and Mr. GRONNA entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] to go into executive session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 10, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 9, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We rejoice, our Father in heaven, that we are involved in the great eternal plan which under Thy guiding hand sweeps on toward perfection. May we be susceptible to every touch of the spirit that we may lend our aid to its final consummation and thus be in harmony with the laws Thou hast ordained and reap the rewards of the faithful, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. VOLLMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VOLLMER. Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's Washington Post appeared the following article:

REPEAL VOTE COSTS SEAT—REPRESENTATIVE VOLLMER WILL NOT SEEK REELECTION—DECISION FOLLOWS RECEIPT OF LETTER FROM HIS DISTRICT DENOUNCING HIS STAND ON CONTROVERSY.

NEW YORK, April 7.

A Washington dispatch to the New York American says:

"Representative VOLLMER, of the second Iowa district, a Democrat, has announced to his constituency that he will not be a candidate for reelection. The announcement followed on the heels of the receipt of a bitter denunciation of his vote for the repeal of tolls exemption in resolutions passed by the Davenport Commercial Association.

"Davenport is the largest city in VOLLMER'S district. Its opposition foretold his defeat for the renomination should he have decided to make the race in the approaching primaries.

"It is expected that other Democratic Congressmen voting against American sentiment in favor of American sovereignty over the Panama Canal are to follow the example set by Mr. VOLLMER."

Color and sting are given to this article by a pretended interview, which recently appeared in the columns of the same paper, with one Herman D. Snider, purporting to be a prominent citizen of my home town—Davenport, Iowa—and to be stopping temporarily at the Raleigh Hotel in this city. In this alleged interview it was represented that my vote for repeal had not only unfavorably affected my chances of reelection, but that it was a case of rank ingratitude to the Speaker of this House, who had made a speech for me in my campaign, and that Congressman CONNOLLY'S vote for repeal would cost him the Iowa senatorship. I shall not comment on these statements further than to say to his colleagues that they might as well get used to addressing the Representative from the third Iowa district as the Senator from Iowa, because his vote for repeal has not only not hurt his chances but, in my judgment, has immensely added to his great and well-deserved popularity with the people of that State. [Applause.]

I do not know whether the pretended interview with Herman D. Snider is existent or nonexistent. He was not registered at the Raleigh as alleged. He is not a prominent citizen of Davenport. His name does not appear in the city directory of that city. I never heard of him before. The Davenport papers in discussing these facts and the patent absurdity of the statements attributed to him came to the conclusion that the whole interview was a fake and that the name was probably Snide and not Snider. [Applause.] Now, as to yesterday's article:

It is true that I have declined a renomination for Congress, but in every other material statement this article is absolutely false. Since voting for the repeal of the act exempting coastwise ships from canal tolls I have not heard a single word of disapproval of my vote on that measure, directly or indirectly, from any citizen or body of citizens of the second congressional district of Iowa. [Applause.] President Wilson is so strong in the affections of the people of that district that during my recent campaign for Congress a pledge was exacted from me that in all matters coming before Congress during my membership therein I would support the President's policies. But, altogether irrespective of that pledge, I should have voted for the repeal upon its merits as I see them, and in so doing would have reflected the overwhelming sentiment of the people of that district. [Applause.] I have receiv d numerous letters from my constituents commending my course since I cast that vote and have not received a single one taking the opposite view, and certainly have not heard of any resolutions of denunciation on the part of commercial organizations or other bodies. Every newspaper in my district, Republican and Democrat alike, as far as I know, is in favor of that repeal. The metropolitan papers largely circulated in that district, like the Republican Chicago Tribune, Chicago Record-Herald, and Des Moines Register and Leader, have all taken a strong stand for the repeal. I am assured that if I will reconsider my decision not to run renomination will be given me by the practically unanimous vote of my party at the primaries. There is little doubt in my mind that the Democratic candidate, whoever he may be, will carry that district next November. My decision not to run again was made with great regret, and simply and solely because personal interests insistently demand more attention from me than the exacting duties of my present position will permit, and my obligation to my wife and children forbids their sacrifice for the sake of personal ambition, pleasure, or vanity. When I accepted the nomination for the present term I was not sure that I could serve longer, and so stated to those asking me to be a candidate.

I apologize to this House for having taken this much of its valuable time on account of newspaper statements about the youngest and least important of its Members, and would not have done so if it were not apparent that the article and interview in question were printed as part of the campaign which is being prosecuted by certain newspapers to discredit the repeal bill, as well as those who voted for it, and to make it appear as though the country were overwhelmingly opposed to the President's policy. [Applause.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California——

Mr. MURDOCK. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, what is the parliamentary status?

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. When the committee rose day before yesterday, we had not completed the transaction which the Chair is now about to state, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to strike out the word "piecework."

The CHAIRMAN. That is just what the Chairman stated is the business before the committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the Chair will permit me for a moment, the amendment was put, a vote taken, a division called for, a division had, tellers were then called for and tellers refused, but immediately thereafter, without any announcement of the vote, a point of no quorum was made and the committee rose on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman——

Mr. MURDOCK. Does not that open up the whole matter again?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the question is whether the committee will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What about debate on this?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate had concluded, and the committee had divided——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is it in order now for any debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not; the committee takes it up where it left off.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes' debate on each side of this question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we debated this thing about half an hour or an hour.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It is a very important question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on this matter be had for 20 minutes, 10 minutes on a side. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes' debate, 5 minutes on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I object.

Mr. MURDOCK. Try five.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I have three minutes in which to discuss this question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I object; we debated this thing here at length.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eleven gentlemen are present, a quorum.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 44, line 7, after the word "compensation," strike out the words "on a piece-rate basis"; also the comma after the word "basis"; also strike out all of lines 11, 12, and 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN, Mr. MURDOCK, and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 23.

[Applause.]

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury may, during the fiscal year 1915, diminish, from time to time, as vacancies occur by death, resignation, or otherwise, the number of positions of the several grades below the grade of chief of division in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department and use the unexpended balances of the appropriations for the positions so diminished as a fund to pay, on a piece-rate basis, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the compensation of such number of employees as may be necessary to tabulate, by the use of mechanical devices, the accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let it go out, Mr. Chairman. There is no use of spending time on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Treasurer: Treasurer, $8,000; Assistant Treasurer, $3,600; Deputy Assistant Treasurer, $3,200; cashier, $3,600; assistant cashier, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; 5 chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; assistant chief of division, $2,250; vault clerk, $2,500; principal bookkeeper, $2,500; assistant bookkeeper, $2,100; 2 tellers, at $2,500 each; 2 assistant tellers, at $2,250 each; vault clerk, Bond Division, $2,000; clerk for Treasurer, $1,800; clerks—25 of class 4 (1 transferred from Register's office), 18 of class 3, 12 of class 2 (1 transferred to Customs Division and 2 dropped), 37 of class 1 (2 transferred from postal savings roll and two from Register's office), 19 at $1,000 each (1 transferred from Register's office), 20 at $900 each (1 transferred from postal savings roll); coin clerk, $1,400; expert counters—39 at $900 each (10 transferred from Register's office), 15 at $800 each, 40 at $720 each, 17 at $700 each; mail messenger, $840; 8 messengers; 8 assistant messengers (1 transferred from Register's office); 22 laborers (1 transferred to Loans and Currency Division); 6 messenger boys, at $360 each; 2 compositors and pressmen, at $1,600 each; silver piler, $1,000; 4 money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; skilled laborer, $1,200; in all, $359,250.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, let us not waste any time. I would rather the gentleman would make his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 45, line 5, there is a provision for the salary of the Treasurer, fixed by the statute at $6,500——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the law fixes the salary of $8,000. I have sent for the law, and it will be in here in a minute.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair there is some discrepancy as to whether this is $6,500 or $8,000. If the gentleman wants to send for a statute, let him do so; but I have the statute here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman wish to make any other point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is it?

Mr. FOWLER. I will pass to the next point of order. In line 6, on the same page, there is a provision of $3,600 for Assistant Treasurer. The statute provides for $2,800. I make the point of order against this provision because it is unlawful.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on page 1065 of the Statutes of the Sixtieth Congress, 1907 to 1909, section 7, is found:

Hereafter the salary of the Treasurer of the United States shall be $8,000 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the other point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That act was signed on March 4, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the salary of the Assistant Treasurer authorized by statute?

Mr. FOWLER. Two thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think we would save a good deal of time if the gentleman from Illinois, in making his points of order, should be required to produce the law. Otherwise he could just stand here and make a point of order on any item in the bill without authority of law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been advised by the parliamentary clerk that when a gentleman rises and makes the point of order that a paragraph is not in order because it is not authorized by law, and makes it on his responsibility as a Member, then it is the duty of the committee to produce the law showing it is provided by statute.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will simply have to have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give the gentleman time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman from Illinois wants to obstruct Congress in that sort of fashion, he must take the responsibility before his colleagues, as well as before the country.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it is always in order to interrupt Congress or any other body that is doing wrong.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on page 397 of the Statutes, Forty-third Congress, 1875, the salary of the Assistant Treasurer is fixed at $3,800. We have only provided in this appropriation bill for $3,600.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in the same line, on page 45, there is a provision for Deputy Assistant Treasurer at $3,200. I make a point of order against that provision because there is no authorization of law for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOWLER. In line 7——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed whether or not the gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the paragraph or against the specific provision which he points out.

Mr. FOWLER. The specific provision, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOWLER. On the same page, line 7, the bill carries a provision of $3,600 for a cashier. The statute provides a salary of $2,800. I make a point of order against that provision because there is no authorization for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has evidently gotten hold of the wrong law. He is wrong in this as he is in a good many other things. On page 397 of the statutes, which I hold in my hand, the salary of the cashier is fixed at $3,800. We have allowed the poor fellow only $3,600.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is reading from the wrong law. If he wants to impose on Congress in any such a way, why he can do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What are you reading from?

Mr. FOWLER. I am reading from the statutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So am I. I make proof of it before the committee. I am reading from Volume XVIII, part 3, United States Statutes at Large. I would like to know where the gentleman is getting his authority from, anyhow.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The law of Illinois, I reckon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on the same page, line 7, a provision is made for assistant cashier at $3,000. The salary provided for by statute is $2,500. I make the point of order against this provision, because there is no authorization for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on page 397, eighteenth volume, Statutes at Large, I find this provision: "Assistant cashier, $3,500." We give him only $3,000.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman is reading from the statute of 1873, I presume.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. From the statute of 1875, the act reorganizing the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 45, line 7, is the item for "chief clerk, $2,500."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the point of order that these points of order in the same paragraph must all be made at one time. They can not be made in piecemeal to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The gentleman must make his points of order against all the items in the paragraph to which he directs attention in one presentation.

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the point of order that the gentleman must make all his points of order at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOWLER. On page 45, line 7, there is a provision for a chief clerk at $2,500. The statute provides for a salary of $2,000. There is no statute for this salary of $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other point of order on that page that the gentleman desires to make?

Mr. FOWLER. On that same page, page 45, line 8, there is a provision for five chiefs of division, at $2,500 each. The statute provides for five chiefs of division at a salary of $2,200. I make a point of order against that provision. There is no authorization for it.

Then, on line 10, on the same page, there is a provision for a principal bookkeeper at $2,500. The statute provides for a salary of $2,200. I make a point of order against it because there is no authorization for it.

In the same line a provision is carried for two tellers, at $2,500 each. The statute provides a salary of $2,200 each. I make a point of order against the provision because there is no authorization for it.

On line 11 two assistant tellers at $2,250 are carried. The statute provides for a salary of $2,000 for these assistant tellers. I make a point of order against the provision because there is no authorization for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that include the gentleman's points of order against all the provisions in this paragraph?

Mr. FOWLER. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the first provision against which the gentleman makes a point of order is the chief clerk. The law provides for one chief clerk at $2,700. We give him in this bill $2,500.

This same statute provides for five chiefs of division at $2,700. We give them only $2,500.

Two principal bookkeepers are provided for in the law at $2,600 each. We give one at $2,500 and one at $2,100.

The law provides for two tellers, one at $2,700 and one at $2,600. We give them $2,500 each.

Two assistant tellers are provided for at $2,350 each, and we provide for them at $2,250.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati: Clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,200; 4 money counters and handlers for laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $6,600.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether it was necessary in this bill, from the viewpoint of making appropriations under the law, to carry these transferred clerks, and so forth, in the office of the Treasurer separately from the general force in the Treasury Department, as is done in the bill. Why should they not have been carried under the office of the Treasurer in the regular way, instead of carrying them as transferred clerks?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman understands thoroughly that these men were brought in from various subtreasuries under an arrangement suggested by Secretary MacVeagh.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In order that the House would understand why there is such an apparent increase in the Treasurer's Office, we allowed it to appear on the face of the bill where these people came from. These salaries are deducted from the salaries of the subtreasuries where the men came from. In the next bill the force will be consolidated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say, in addition to what the gentleman from South Carolina has said, that a number of gentlemen have been before the committee, wanting to know why the force of the various subtreasuries had been reduced, and these salaries were carried in this way in order to convey full information to the Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. Then this is simply to give information to the House?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of labor-saving machines and tabulating equipment, including exchange, repairs, miscellaneous expenses of installation, cards and filing devices, and for rental of tabulating and card-sorting machines, for use in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, $6,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to call the attention of the committee to page 47, line 13, which we have just passed, where the language occurs, "Total from subtreasuries." Is it correct as it is? Should it not be "for subtreasuries" instead of "from subtreasuries"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That relates back to all these transfers that have been referred to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question with reference to this $6,000 for buying machines and for rent of machines. Could the gentleman tell what proportion of that amount is for rent of machines and what proportion is for purchase of machines? I would like to get a line on the rent paid for these machines.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have not that information at hand. Most of the machines are owned by the Government, but some of the machines the Government can only rent.

Mr. BRYAN. As to these punching machines——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They belong to the Government. I was so informed this morning.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman know what machines we rent?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The electrical tabulators.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman would visit the department and make personal inspection of these machines, I think it would be greatly to his advantage. They have certain machines that automatically assort the cards that are punched. These machines can not be purchased; they are rented.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman has stated that he does not know how much of this money goes to rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir; I do not. The punching machines are not expensive.

Mr. BRYAN. We buy those?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; and the other machines are expensive.

Mr. BRYAN. Those other machines, I suppose, are pretty expensive?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can tell the gentleman, and it might be of interest to Members of the House to know, that the people who manufacture the assorting machines rent those machines to large corporations and the United States Government.

They enter into a contract for the leasing of the machines at what they consider the actual expense of upkeep, but the contract provides that they shall furnish the cards at $1.05 a thousand. The gentleman had some of the cards. When that proposition was submitted to the Treasury Department the auditor's office made an inquiry of the Public Printer to know for what price he could furnish those cards, and he said that he could furnish them at 60 cents a thousand. Thereupon the Treasury Department entered into a contract for the lease of the machines at $40 a month, and for cards at 60 cents a thousand, while the great corporations of the country are paying $1.05 a thousand.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask if there has been any investigation as to whether or not the Government could buy these machines more cheaply than it can rent them?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. These machines are patented, and the Government can not buy them.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Comptroller of the Currency: Comptroller, $5,000; deputy comptrollers—1, $3,500; 1, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; chiefs of divisions—1, $2,500; 2 at $2,200 each; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant bookkeeper, $2,000; clerks—8 of class 4; additional to bond clerk $200; 13 of class 3; 13 of class 2; 26 of class 1; 13 at $1,000 each; 7 at $900 each; stenographer, $1,600; 6 counters, at $840 each; messenger; 5 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; 2 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $142,780.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the provision, on page 48, line 24, for one deputy comptroller, $3,500. The salary fixed by the statute is $3,000. There is also a provision in the same line for another deputy at $3,000. I do not think there is any authorization for that. That is my recollection about it. In line 25 is a provision carried for a chief clerk at $2,500. The statute provides for a chief clerk at $2,200. I make the point of order against these provisions, because there is no authorization of them by statute.

The CHAIRMAN. Are those all the points of order against this paragraph?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the point of order against the deputy comptroller at $3,500 is well taken. The law fixes the salary at $3,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois made it against both.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Do I understand the gentleman to make a point of order against both deputy comptrollers?

Mr. FOWLER. As I view it, there is provision for only one.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The law does provide for one at $3,000, and we have provided one at $3,000, the salary fixed by law. If the gentleman wants to make a point of order against the one at $3,500, he will have to do it.

Mr. FOWLER. That is what I do, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, as to the $3.500.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, the chief clerk——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. As to the chief clerk, Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from Illinois aware of the fact that his action absolutely emasculates the new banking law that was passed a few weeks ago?

Mr. FOWLER. I am willing to put them back in at the salary provided by the statute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no salary provided by the statute, and the gentleman, by making this point of order and depriving the comptroller of this force, is absolutely emasculating the banking and currency law which was passed by Congress and which has met with so much approval all over the country.

Mr. FOWLER. If you want one more at $3,000, offer your amendment and I will not oppose it. I will not object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has made the point of order, and it is his action that is resulting in emasculating this law. I simply wanted to let the gentleman know exactly what he is doing in so far as these points of order are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. No further discussion of it is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On page 48, line 24, I move to insert "Deputy comptrollers, 2, at $3,000 each."

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I would not do that.

Mr. FOWLER. Then you will have to strike out one.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. One remains in. You only want one more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move to strike out "1, $3,000" and insert "2, at $3,000 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, line 24, insert "Deputy comptrollers, 2, at $3,000 each."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to provide for one at $3,500 and one at $3,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment, because there is no authorization by statute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the point of order comes too late, inasmuch as the gentleman did not reserve a point of order upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is a little late in making his point of order. As the Chair understands, there is authorized by law one deputy comptroller at $3,000. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered an amendment to provide for two at $3,000 each, and no point of order was made against it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] moves to amend the amendment by providing one at $3,500 and one at $3,000. Since no point of order was made against the amendment that was not in order, then a point of order comes too late when made against the amendment to the amendment. The Chair does not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the statute has already fixed the salary at $3,000, and it has been passed on by this House. Then there was an effort on the part of the chairman of the subcommittee to put in another in place of the one that was stricken out, conforming to the statute. I have no objection to giving a force sufficient to run the Government of the United States economically; and inasmuch as it was agreed that the salary should not be above the statutory provision, $3,000, it comes in poor grace now from this committee to interpose an amendment for the purpose of violating the plain provisions of the permanent law. I think my point of order ought to be sustained, because it goes to the vitality of the very question on which the Chair sustained the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, if the gentleman will permit him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a word in reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have this to say, that if there is any sharp practice to be played in order to get high salaries increased above the law, I shall interpose points against all items in this bill not in harmony with the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman from Illinois has the privilege and the right to take any course that he chooses to pursue; but I want to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that for two years he sat here under a Republican administration and permitted these salaries to be paid at the sums fixed in this bill and never raised his voice in protest, and that now under a Democratic administration the gentleman comes here and undertakes to strike out these salaries, which will undoubtedly have the result of seriously embarrassing the administration in the transaction of the necessary business in the departments of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois stated a moment ago that he was willing to have two deputy comptrollers, at $3,000 each, although he made the statement in face of the fact that the law only provided for one, thereby showing that the gentleman himself is willing to have a provision go in which says it is in violation of the law, and wrong.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that where the law provides for an office, has it not been the custom in this House that if another of the same grade at the same salary is found to be necessary for the good of the service, the rule has not been to add one, two, or three more, as the case may be, at the same salary, to supply a sufficient force?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; that has not been the custom.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it has.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That has been the custom as to clerks. The point I make is that the gentleman sat here two years under a Republican administration, and raised no protest against the salaries, but now in an administration of the party to which the gentleman belongs and to which he professes allegiance, he is pursuing a course which will cripple that administration by striking out necessary positions, and, in this particular case, positions that are absolutely necessary to carry out the new banking and currency law passed a few weeks ago. The gentleman made a statement that the law only provided for one deputy comptroller, and yet, in the face of that, and his statement that the House should not undertake to make an appropriation for any provision not provided by law, he offered to agree to an amendment to provide for a second comptroller, which he says is in violation of law. Then the gentleman from South Carolina offered an amendment providing for two deputy comptrollers, at $3,000. I am offering an amendment to the amendment to provide one for $3,500, the salary carried for the last 20 years.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention of the able Congressman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to the fact that I stood here in the Sixty-second Congress and tried to right the wrongs in this bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Did the gentleman make a point of order against these provisions?

Mr. FOWLER. I made a point of order against portions of them, and I was confronted then, as I am now, by Members of the House to this effect: That I had made my position known by pointing out irregularities, and that I ought to quit. But I have said this time that I have gone so far over and waded in so deep that it is less dangerous to cross over than to retreat. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I want it made plain to the country that I do not desire to handicap the administration at all, but what I seek and what I do want is the administration to follow the law, whether it be a Republican administration or a Democratic administration. Mr. Lincoln once said that nothing is settled finally until it is settled right, and the greatest right we have to follow here is the plain provisions of the statute, and that is what I ask, and nothing more.

The CHAIRMAN. When this paragraph was read the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] made a point of order to that portion on page 48, line 24, "two deputy controllers, one at $3,500 and one at $3,000," which the Chair sustained. Then the gentleman from South Carolina offered an amendment for two deputy controllers at $3,000 each, which was not in order, but no point of order was made against the amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] offered an amendment to the amendment to make one deputy controller at $3,500 and one at $3,000. Then a point of order was raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]. The gentleman from Illinois having failed to make a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, and it being out of order, any amendment that was out of order to that amendment is in order, and the result is that the Chair is compelled to overrule the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the Chair permit an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. Has it not been the custom in the past in this House that where a provision has been made for an officer and a salary fixed and it has been discovered that two officers were required, that such may be done without violating the statute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised by the parliamentarian that no such ruling has been made, and certainly the Chair does not know of any such ruling.

Mr. FOWLER. That has been the ruling ever since I have been here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That applies to clerks only.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry about the paragraph. This carries a controller at $5,000 and other officers. I want to ask if there is any provision made yet for the salaries of the Federal Reserve Board? How are those salaries to be carried?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The additional $7,000 which the controller will receive by reason of his being a member of the Federal Reserve Board is to be paid by the national banks under the terms of the currency law.

Mr. MANN. Without an appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And you make no appropriations for the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we have not. The Treasury Department held that we were not to make any appropriations.

Mr. MANN. We made an appropriation in the Federal reserve act which, I suppose, would carry the expenses to begin with; but I should think that we would have to make an appropriation for the salaries of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The currency act carries an appropriation of $100,000 for the preliminary organization. After the organization is completed, under the rules and regulations, whatever expenses may be incurred by the reserve board will be paid by assessment made on the banks.

Mr. MANN. Do not the banks, in fact, pay the expenses of the controller's office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They do. The Government first pays it, and then assessments are made on the banks, and the Treasury is reimbursed. Now, when this Federal Reserve Board shall have been organized, it may be that the rules and regulations will require the banks belonging to the system to pay into the Treasury a sum of money sufficient to reimburse it, and that we will be called upon to make an appropriation, as we are now in reference to national-bank redemption, but we have not yet been called upon to do that.

Mr. MANN. I should suppose that the assessment upon the banks would have to be paid into the Treasury. I may be mistaken about that. Of course, if these assessments are paid into the Treasury, they will have to be paid out by appropriations, unless the Federal reserve act makes the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is quite true, I will say to the gentleman. The regulations adopted by this board may require this money to be paid into the Treasury, but, until the regulations are made, this committee has nothing to act upon. There was no suggestion coming to this committee to make an appropriation, and, therefore, it will have to be taken care of in a deficiency or some other bill after the board is organized.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that, if the Treasury Department desired to keep up to date, they would have sent in an estimate for the salaries for the Federal reserve, fixed by statute, and which, I take it, would have to be made out of the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 47, noes 3.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 46, noes 2.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Comptroller of the Currency: Comptroller, $5,000; deputy comptrollers—1, $3,500; 1, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; chiefs of divisions—1, $2,500; 2 at $2,200 each; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant bookkeeper, $2,000; clerks—8 of class 4; additional to bond clerk, $200; 13 of class 3; 13 of class 2; 26 of class 1; 13 at $1,000 each; 7 at $900 each; stenographer, $1,600; 6 counters, at $840 each; messenger; 5 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; 2 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $142,780.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is a provision for the Comptroller of the Treasury. He is a part of the committee that selected the regional banks. A discussion having arisen yesterday about whether or not the banks were consulted after the regional district boundaries had been established, and the statement having been made that the banks voted in district No. 10, indicating their preference for the bank in that district, I communicated with one of the oldest bankers in that district and one of the most favorably known in the United States, asking him if such a submission had been made. This is his answer to my inquiry:

OMAHA, NEBR., April 8, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES H. SLOAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

No opportunity whatever was given the banks to express preference concerning either boundaries or reserve cities. After the districts were fixed, when Nebraska was tied up with a slice of western Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, and a slice of Texas, Omaha could not expect to be named as the reserve city. It was fixed for Kansas City alone. The outrage lies in putting us into such a district, with which we have little in common, and where a higher interest rate has prevailed and the business methods pursued are entirely different. About seven millions of Nebraska money must be placed in that bank, whether used by Nebraska people or not.

HENRY W. YATES.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Commissioner, $6,000; deputy commissioners—1, $4,000; 1, $3,600; chemists—chief, $3,000; 1, $2,500; assistant chemists—2 at $1,800 each; 1, $1,600; 1, $1,400; heads of divisions—4, at $2,500 each; 5 at $2,250 each; superintendent of stamp vault, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; clerks—3 at $2,000; 31 of class 4; 27 of class 3; 41 of class 2; 40 of class 1; 32 at $1,000 each; 42 at $900 each; 4 messengers; 20 assistant messengers (one transferred to surety-bond section); 16 laborers; in all, $359,270.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. On page 49, line 21, there is a provision for a deputy commissioner at $4,000. The statute provides for his salary at $3,500. There is also a provision for one at $3,600. There is no authorization for the increase in the first, and no authorization at all for the other. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important office.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is this the office which is charged with the collection of the income tax?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So if this paragraph is stricken out there would be no provision whatever made for the officials here who have to take charge of the collection of the income tax, and this would be an indirect attack or is an attack upon the income tax, as I understand it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has just stated what I was in the act of informing the committee, that after many years Congress has succeeded in putting upon the statute books an income-tax law, in order to tax the rich and take the burden of government off the poor, especially the laboring men of this country, placing it upon the shoulders of those who are better able to bear the burden and who have shirked those burdens for lo these many years. We have placed upon this particular bureau the responsibility and duty of collecting from these men of great wealth these revenues to run the Government, and the gentleman from Illinois, who is supposed to be friendly to this great administration and the friend of labor, comes into this committee and absolutely paralyzes the enforcement of this great law by asking that this important paragraph be stricken from the bill.

Mr. Chairman, it is subject to the point of order. I am sorry the gentleman has seen fit to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard before the point of order is ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the gentleman. The Chair can not indulge the gentleman to speak to a point of order after he sustains his contention. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Life-Saving Service: General Superintendent, $4,000, and $500 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; assistant general superintendent, $2,500; principal clerk, $2,000; title and contract clerk, $2,000; topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; civil engineer, $1,800; draftsman, $1,500; clerks—3 of class 4, 5 of class 3, 4 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each; messenger; assistant messenger; laborer; in all $48,120.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph for the reason that it carries, on page 50, line 10, $500 additional for the present incumbent of the office, which is not authorized by law. I make this point of order because there is a plain provision of the statute fixing the salary of this office at $4,000. This is an effort on the part of this committee to increase the salary of this office by $500 without any authority whatever.

Mr. Chairman, there is a way to get ample provision in this bill to carry out the needs of this Government. The leader on the minority side, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in his adroit method, endeavors to make it appear that there is an effort to destroy the administration of the Government, and he makes a plea for the poor. He has voted more times against the poor than any other man in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois to indulge the Chair for this suggestion: There is a method by which the gentleman from Illinois can discuss the various subjects he now desires to discuss, and that is by moving to strike out the last word of some paragraph to which he does not desire to make a point of order. It is the desire of the Chair to pass upon the point of order which the gentleman has made.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. I want to say that if the committee wants to make ample provision for the administration of the Government it can go back to its committee room, where it ought to go, and bring in a clean bill in harmony with the plain provisions of the statute. It is their duty to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The Life-Saving Service is one of the most important of the governmental activities. This service saves thousands of human lives every year. It saves millions of property along the coast. It is a service that ought to commend itself to this House and to the country. The man who is now at the head of this service has been there for something like 40 years.

Mr. MANN. Ever since it started.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He organized it and has been with it from its infancy up to the present day; he has nursed and developed it. Ten years ago the Congress of the United States, recognizing the peculiar merits of this man, and not desiring to increase the salary permanently, provided that while the office was held by this particular man he should receive $500 additional compensation. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indulge the Chair to say that virtually the Chair cut the gentleman from Illinois from a further discussion of the proposition on its merits, and he did not feel like indulging the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This committee has not increased it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing: Director, $6,000; assistant director, $3,500; chief of division of assignments and reviews, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; medical and sanitary officer, $2,000; stenographer, $1,800; clerks—1 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 9 of class 2, 9 of class 1, 8 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each, 6 at $840 each, 15 at $780 each; disbursing agent, $2,400; storekeeper, $1,600; assistant storekeeper, $1,000; clerk in charge of purchases and supplies, $2,000; 9 attendants, at $600 each; helpers—2 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each, 2 at $600 each; 3 messengers; 7 assistant messengers; captain of the watch, $1,400; 2 lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; 60 watchmen; 2 forewomen of charwomen, at $540 each; 25 day charwomen, at $400 each; 77 morning and evening charwomen, at $300 each; foreman of laborers, $900; 4 laborers; 85 laborers, at $540 each; in all, $241,760; and no other fund appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for services in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the character specified in this paragraph, except in cases of emergency arising after the passage of this act, and then only on the written approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in every such case of emergency a detailed statement of the expenditures on account thereof shall be reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, because, on page 50, lines 18 and 19, there is a provision for a director of the bureau at a salary of $6,000. The statute provides for a salary of $5,000. There are other irregularities in the paragraph on which I do not desire to waste time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not know where——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the salary carried in the current law for the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is $6,000. The paragraph to which the point of order is made carries 60 watchmen, quite a number of charwomen, and in one place 85 laborers, at $540 each, and yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] makes the point of order on all of these items. The gentleman makes the point of order on this paragraph which carries the entire cost of the operation, so far as services are concerned, of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which prints the stamps for the Post Office Department, which prints the national-bank notes for the national banks, which prints the greenbacks for the Government, which prints the internal-revenue stamps for the Internal Revenue Department, and all the rest of the fine engraving and printing of the Government. Now, we have already stricken out of the bill on these points of order all the provisions for the collecting of the income tax and the other excise taxes of the Government, all of the provisions for carrying on the office force of the Life-Saving Service, and now my colleague makes the point of order on the paragraph carrying laborers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. If the point of order should be sustained and the provision go out, there is no provision left for the payment of the women or for other employees who do work in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. I appeal to my colleague not to endeavor to strike out the employment of these poor people. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. If this point of order is sustained, will it discharge the Committee on Appropriations and prevent it from bringing in a bill in harmony with the statute?

Mr. MANN. These items to which I refer are in harmony with the statute. The gentleman makes the point of order upon the items for 85 laborers at $540 each, 25 day charwomen at $400 each, 77 morning and evening charwomen at $300, and in addition to other places like 3 messengers, 7 assistant messengers, and so forth.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. And laborers. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there anything to prevent the chairman or any member of the Committee on Appropriations from offering an amendment to provide for all of those places as provided for by law?

Mr. MANN. Well, so far as the power of Congress is concerned, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing to prevent Congress from passing a law paying each of these people $40,000 a year apiece, but when it comes to a practical proposition there are many things to prevent.

Mr. FOWLER. What is there to prevent a member of this committee from offering an amendment in harmony with the statute?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I say these items are in harmony with the law, and that is the reason I am arguing the point of order. If I did not think they were in harmony with the law, I would not argue the point of order, and I am calling the attention of the Chairman to the fact that the law authorizes this and provided for these charwomen, these laborers, these messengers, and I maintain that these items are not subject to the point of order which my colleague is insisting upon.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask the gentleman if he will yield further?

Mr. MANN. Well, I will yield, although the gentleman takes up most of the time now, but I will yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that any member of this committee or of the House may now offer an amendment restoring this paragraph in harmony with the statute?

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman through with his question? He has asked it six times——

Mr. FOWLER. And the gentleman has never answered it yet.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman through with his question? The gentleman may not be satisfied with my answer, but any member of this committee can propose any kind of an amendment he desires. It does not make any difference whether it is in order or out of order, whether it has anything to do with the subject matter or not; that is not the question before us. When an amendment is proposed, that will be before us. The question before us now is the paragraph making provision for printing stamps for the Post Office Department, for the printing of money which is in use throughout the country, for the printing of stamps for the Internal-Revenue Department, for the printing of all engraving done for the Government by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the gentleman has made a point of order against the entire paragraph and all the items contained in it.

The gentleman is insisting on striking out the paragraph. Now the gentleman asks whether it is within the power of the Congress to overcome the gentleman. I think that, in the end, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of my colleague to kill the Life-Saving Service, to ruin the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and to strike down the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the power of Congress will be exerted to retain all of these items. But my colleague will not participate. He is doing his best to kill the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this point of order is not well taken, because the gentleman makes a point of order against the paragraph carrying all of these salaries to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has called attention, for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, down to the smallest paid employee, charwomen, and laborers down there, who make a livelihood by hard work and attention to their business. The permanent law nowhere fixes the salary of the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. So that being the state of the law, it is left to Congress in appropriating for this office to fix a salary. The gentleman will not assert it to be a fact that there is any permanent law fixing the salary of the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. If it were true that there was a general law fixing the salary at any particular amount, then the gentleman's point of order would be good, but this salary, Mr. Chairman, has never been fixed except in the current law—in the appropriation bill—and that being true, it has never been a fixed salary, but subject always to the will of Congress to say whether it shall be $5,000 or $6,000, or any other amount, and therefore it is not subject to the point of order. To that end I call the attention of the Chair to this rule upon the subject. On page 355 of the Manual, I read:

> But an exception to these general principles is found in the established practice that in the absence of a general law fixing a salary the amount appropriated in the last appropriation bill has been held to be the legal salary.

Now, in 1910, as I am informed, the salary was fixed at $6,000 in an appropriation bill, and since that time—and I believe the gentleman will agree with me that I state the legislative facts correctly—since that time Congress has carried, and did carry in the last appropriation bill, the salary of $6,000. The rule from which I made the citation is one dealing with the question of what is in order upon appropriation bills, and provides in the first part of it that it is in violation of the rule to fix a salary greater than the one provided for by the general law. But the exception is in the case that we now present to the Chair, and that is, there being no general law fixing the salary of the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the last bill making the appropriation and fixing the salary is the law, and therefore the gentleman can not sustain the point of order against it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman's contention is right, then the proposition making the salary $5,000, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], would still be subject to a point of order, would it not? I understand the gentleman from Georgia to state that the statute does not fix his salary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do. The gentleman from Illinois does not contend that there is any permanent law upon that subject; at least, that is my information.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding from the gentleman from Illinois was that the salary was $5,000 per year.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman understands if it was established by current law, not by permanent law, at $6,000——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am with the gentleman, of course.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the salary at $6,000 is subject to a point of order, then the salary at $5,000 or $4,000, or any other amount, would be subject to the same point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly. If the point of order is good against $6,000, it would be good against $1.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the effect of the gentleman's point of order, if sustained, would be that we could not have any director.

Mr. BARTLETT. Because there is no permanent law fixing the salary. And the only guide the Chair has is as to the salary that was carried in the last appropriation bill. It occurs to me that the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether he has the statute creating the office of the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no statute. There is a law authorizing the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. It is a governmental institution in operation. The law devolves upon that bureau the duty of performing certain governmental functions, and we make appropriations for these functions to be performed, there being no salary for the director fixed by law. It is perfectly manifest that the amounts fixed in the current appropriations must control.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no doubt that if the law creates a bureau and does not fix a salary, the salary fixed in the current law is the salary that shall be fixed above which this committee can not go if a point of order is made against it. The only question in the mind of the Chair was if the act creating the Bureau of Engraving and Printing created the director or any other office or left that entirely to Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It created the bureau to make stamps and do certain other things.

The CHAIRMAN. That would authorize the appropriation.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not able to find, in my investigation, an authorization for the office. Also, Mr. Chairman, in the current act of 1910, Sixty-second Congress, there was carried a provision for $5,000. While I am not sure whether the salary was at that time made permanent law, because it is hard to hold all these figures in mind, yet I have an impression that the salary was fixed at that time at $5,000. Yet I would not impose my recollection against the contention of any gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is familiar, I am sure, with the rule that unless the statute fixes the salary the amount carried in the last current law is the salary?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question is on the salary fixed in the current law, the appropriation bill for 1914.

Mr. FOWLER. If there is no authorization by statute for the office——

The CHAIRMAN. The very fact that the Congress creates a department is sufficient to authorize or create an officer to perform the duties of that department.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Secret Service Division: Chief, $4,250; assistant chief, who shall discharge the duties of chief clerk, $3,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 1 at $1,000; assistant messenger; in all, $16,370.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph, and I make the point of order against the item——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not both reserve a point of order and make it. Let him make his point of order. I demand the regular order.

Mr. FOWLER. My point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that on page 51, line 19, a provision is made in the bill for the chief of the Secret Service Division at a salary of $4,250. The last appropriation bill carried a provision for $4,000. This is an increase over the last appropriation of $250, and that is the reason why I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make a point of order against the paragraph?

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not reserve it when the gentleman from South Carolina calls for the regular order Does the gentleman make it to the entire paragraph or to the language that has just been read?

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to reserve the point of order against the paragraph, and make a point of order against the item I have indicated.

Mr. MANN. That has never been the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, that has never been the practice of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not make a point of order just to suit his convenience. He can not halfway make it, or only partially make it, or make it and still reserve it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, and make the point of order against the item indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state to the Chair whether he makes the point of order against the paragraph or against the item on line 19, "Chief, $4.250"?

Mr. FOWLER. I made the point of order against the salary of the Chief of the Secret Service Division.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr JOHNSON] say in regard to that?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to reserve the point of order against this item.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] demands the regular order.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, for this item, Chief of the Secret Service Division, no salary is authorized in the statute creating the place; and while it is true that the bill of last year carried $4,000, the fact that it is not fixed by law seems to me to hold against the point of order. I doubt very much, in view of this fact, if this is subject to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee; we are making such slow progress. I have already stated to the committee since we began the consideration of this bill that wherever this committee has increased any salary we were perfectly ready to be criticized for it and to explain why we did it.

Now, I would like to make a statement of a moment or two. The gentleman who holds this office——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the item is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this position is under the Secret Service Division. The chief of that division is by this bill provided with a salary of $4,250. It is true that in the current appropriation act the salary is fixed at $4,000; it is also true that since the original act was passed, as I recall it—passed at the short session last year—there has been a new President installed. One of the duties of this chief of the Secret Service Division is to guard the President against attacks; and I maintain, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am discussing the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I maintain that it is in order for a Democratic House to increase the salary of the man who is to protect the Democratic President, notwithstanding the opposition of my colleague, Mr. FOWLER, to his protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, did the paragraph go out?

The CHAIRMAN. No; only the item for the chief at $4,250. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Director of the Mint: Director, $5,000; computer and adjuster of accounts, $2,500; assayer, $2,200; clerks—2 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 1 of class 1; private secretary, $1,400; messenger; assistant in laboratory, $1,200; assistant messenger; skilled laborer, $720; in all, $22,580.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the following: On page 51, on line 24, is a provision for $5,000 for the Director of the Mint. The statute provides for a salary of $4,500. For that reason I make a point of order against it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The point of order is well made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order against the paragraph, or simply against the director at $5,000?

Mr. FOWLER. Against just what I have stated, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN. We have not been able over here to tell what the point of order was directed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made the point of order against the item on line 24, page 51, "director, $5,000."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman makes a point of order against the sum $5,000. Now, if that point is sustained, only the provision for the salary of the director is stricken from the bill. Is that true?

Mr. BARTLETT. That is all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then is it true, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] made against the salary of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service struck out the whole paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In that case he made the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. He made the point of order against the paragraph in one instance and against the item for salary in the other.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then the point of order against the Life-Saving Service was made against the whole paragraph and not against the salary of the superintendent?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has stated it correctly. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For freight on bullion and coin, by registered mail or otherwise, between mints and assay offices, $10,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out "$10,000," in line 6, page 52, and insert "$30,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Amend, page 52, line 6, by striking out the sum "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Washington discusses his amendment I would like to make a suggestion. I understand that this reduction is upon the theory that some of the assay offices heretofore carried in the bill may be discontinued. Now, amendments will be offered at another place in the bill proposing to reinstate these assay offices. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington or the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill if this amendment can not go over until we dispose of the amendments that will be offered to reinstate the offices omitted by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I was just going to ask the chairman for unanimous consent to pass this item, because the action of the committee with respect to the assay offices will largely determine what this appropriation ought to be.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the committee should be sustained, then, perhaps, the appropriation of $10,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Amply sufficient, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from South Carolina to make that request?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What is the request?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That that particular item be passed without prejudice, to be returned to after we pass the mint and assay offices. Then we will know better what we are doing.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection to that, if the amendment is to be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from South Carolina to make that request?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to pass this item temporarily.

Mr. MANN. To pass the paragraph with the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. To pass the paragraph with the amendment pending. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection; but I want a little more definite understanding, that it shall be taken up immediately after passing the paragraph in relation to assay offices.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think that will be the proper time to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Surgeon General of Public Health Service: Surgeon General, $6,000; chief clerk, $2,000; private secretary to the Surgeon General, $1,800; assistant editor, $1,800; clerks—3 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 7 of class 2 (1 of whom shall be translator), 7 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each; messenger; 3 assistant messengers; 2 laborers, at $540 each; in all, $49,780.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, chairman of the Civic Welfare League, went to this most important Bureau of Public Health and made complaint to Surg. Gen. Blue with reference to the system of working women employees in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department. The Surgeon General appointed Dr. Rucker, one of his force, to investigate the matter. Dr. Rucker went there and took the matter up with Mr. Kram, but there arose a question of jurisdiction. Dr. Rucker did not care to force himself upon Mr. Kram, and Mr. Kram pleaded that the Bureau of Public Health hardly had jurisdiction to interfere. Nevertheless, Dr. Rucker presented a series of questions to be asked of these employees, in order that the conditions might be brought out definitely and carefully. He presented these questions to Mr. Kram, but the matter was held in abeyance by him. A few days ago Dr. Rucker asked Mr. Kram what he was going to do about it, and Mr. Kram notified Dr. Rucker that he preferred that Dr. Rucker should not ask those questions and not interrogate these girls. In other words, Mr. Kram slammed the door shut in the face of the Bureau of Health and prevented an investigation of the complaint lodged by the Civic Welfare League concerning the health of these women who are worked under the lash of Mr. Kram.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Who is Mr. Kram?

Mr. BRYAN. He is the Auditor for the Post Office Department in the Treasury Department. When the Health Bureau attempted to investigate the matters that were referred to by me in the debate here day before yesterday, the accuracy of which statements was challenged, when an attempt was made to investigate them by a man who was competent and qualified to do so, Mr. Kram interposed his objection and prevented that investigation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Where did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. BRYAN. I got that information this morning from Dr. Rucker, of the Bureau of Public Health. Surg. Gen. Blue appointed Dr. Rucker to make the investigation of a complaint lodged by a noted civic worker here in the city, an associate and helper of Mrs. President Wilson in civic matters. Dr. Rucker went there and presented a series of questions, and requested that they be asked of the women at work on these machines, in order that the complaint made by the Welfare League might be determined, and in order that these matters which I detailed with more or less indefiniteness day before yesterday might be regularly determined. Mr. Kram interposed the point of jurisdiction, the delicate proposition of a clash between two departments, and the Health Department concluded that they had no right to run over a coordinate, and therefore the investigation has not been made.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that both these bureaus are under the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Both these branches of the public service, the Auditor's Office in the Treasury Department and the Public Health Service, are under the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is for the Secretary of the Treasury to determine whether one service shall go into the office of another service in his department; not for them to determine among themselves.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman knows that the Secretary of the Treasury has other very delicate matters on hand now that, doubtless, somewhat divide his attention.

Mr. MANN. I should suppose they would incline him toward the side of the women—one woman, at least. [Applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. These facts are as related. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], in his argument the other day, wherein we were turned down to a certain extent, said that he had not investigated the "personal pathology" of the proposition. Nevertheless he came to certain conclusions that I believe were not at all warranted. By "personal pathology" I suppose he meant personal suffering, disease, and things of that kind that we were complaining of—the very things he had not investigated. Also, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] had not thoroughly investigated that side of it, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] did not know particularly about the complaints of these individuals. I believe he said no complaints had been filed. I think upon revising his thoughts the gentleman would correct that, and I believe the gentleman will remember, doubtless, that some complaints have been presented to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not do anything of the kind. I have no recollection of having received any complaint on this subject from any human being.

Mr. BRYAN. Then I will not insist upon that, because I am not in a position to prove the point.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I am as much interested in the welfare of these people as is the gentleman from Washington, or anybody else; but I have taken it upon myself to go to this place and make a personal investigation.

Mr. BRYAN. I recognize that the position of the gentleman from South Carolina is as he has stated, and I am not questioning his interest or sincerity.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. For a question.

Mr. HOWARD. Has the gentleman ever visited the Auditor's office of the Post Office Department?

Mr. BRYAN. I have.

Mr. HOWARD. Has the gentleman talked with the young ladies down there?

Mr. BRYAN. I have.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, if you have talked with them you have discovered that Mr. Kram is one of the most popular men in the department.

Mr. BRYAN. I have talked with 27 of them, and the unanimous opinion was that if Mr. Kram should fall down the elevator shaft they would wear red chrysanthemums instead of crêpe. As I stated the other day, there is no man in the department so unpopular and execrated and condemned by the employees as is Mr. Kram, as far as I have been able to ascertain.

Mr. HOWARD. How many has the gentleman talked with?

Mr. BRYAN. Quite a number.

Mr. HOWARD. About how many?

Mr. BRYAN. Well, I will not stand for that cross-examination. The gentleman from Georgia is not conducting a prosecution.

Mr. HOWARD. No; I am not conducting a prosecution, but I am asking a question to find out something about the knowledge of the gentleman from Washington, which seems to be very superficial from what he has said.

Mr. BRYAN. I am informed that there are more complaints filed in the department against Mr. Kram than any other man in the department. When a physician from the Health Bureau went to investigate him he practically shut the door in his face and refused to allow these girls and women to be interrogated. Now, if the gentleman from Georgia wants to defend that kind of business, if he wants to say that a man that will do that kind of a thing is right with the employees and is treating them fairly, he may take the responsibility for his statement. As far as I am concerned, I do not believe it is right. We propose to knock out this piece-rate business, and to knock it out so emphatically that it will not get back into the bill in the Senate.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I happen to know a little about the controversy down there in the Auditor's office for the Post Office Department, and I have known more or less about it for nearly three years. I can not and I will not remain idly by on the floor of this House and hear a man who in my candid judgment is doing his duty to his country slammed right and left. I do not know what Mr. Kram's politics is. I imagine he is a Republican.

Mr. HOWARD. That is right.

Mr. COX. He was appointed during a Republican administration, and for the good of this country, for the good of the department, it will be hard to supplant him by a Democrat. Three years ago I was made chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, which put me in touch, more or less, with all the bureaus of the Treasury Department. At that time Mr. Kram was beginning to inaugurate this system. The employees trooped to my committee room at the Capitol, day in and day out, with all kinds and manner of bitter invective heaped upon him, that he was cruel, that he was inhuman, that he was taking human life, and they tried to get an investigation. I refused. I did not know Mr. Kram at that time, and I went down there to see, myself.

While I am not an expert accountant, I went through the department to some extent. I could not see at the time any cruelty on the part of Mr. Kram as against any employees, and this last summer I spent from 10 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the evening in the presence of Mr. Kram, going from desk to desk, interviewing employee after employee, and I never heard a single, solitary kick. Part of the time I was with Mr. Kram and part of the time he was not present. It is the first time in the history of my career since I have been a Member of Congress that I ever heard of an employee of the Government being overworked. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. What did these charges of cruelty consist of?

Mr. COX. Speeding up; making them work faster, as it is claimed; but I deny this to be true.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a fact that the auditor's department in the Treasury as it now exists is the best organized bureau in the Treasury Department?

Mr. COX. There is no question about it. As I say, it is the first time in the history of my career that I ever heard a man get up on the floor of the House with the nerve and audacity to claim that any employee of this Government was being overworked. [Laughter.]

Go down to the Pension Bureau and see them hanging over the balustrades by the score and score; see them standing around reading newspapers. Go down to the War Department and see the halls and the great corridors in the building literally filled with employees idle; doing nothing. Go to the Secretary of State's office, go to all the great departments of the Government and find, if you can, any employees that are actually overworked.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Kram has inaugurated a system that ought to control in this country, which requires a full day's work for a full day's pay. As a result of Mr. Kram's installation of piecework, the Postmaster General informs me, and I imagine he informs everybody else, that he has been able to furlough 70 employees. Is it our duty to strike out provisions in this bill that would reduce the employees of the Government, so that the old man back home with the hoe can to this extent have his burdens lessened? It certainly is. If a system can be devised that is not cruel or inhuman that will reduce the employees and thereby effect an economy to the people at large, it is certainly our duty to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I shall object to that. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum. The game that you are undertaking to play you will not play unless I can get time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You have already got the provision out of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am not going to let such rotten statements go as have just been made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I say they are not rotten statements; they are facts, and I stand by them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-seven Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum he had directed the roll to be called; that 280 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he reported herewith the list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think it is unfortunate when an employee of the Government undertakes to do his duty, to save money for the Government, and to properly perform the duties of his office, that there are Members of the House who, without any personal investigation, without taking the trouble to go to his office and look into the matter personally, but merely because, possibly, some disaffected employee in his office comes to the Member with an ex parte statement, complaining of some supposed or alleged injustice to that employee, should undertake to denounce such public official on the floor of this House. I hold no brief for the Auditor of the Post Office Department. I do not know his politics. I have understood that he is a Republican and not a member of my party, but, Mr. Chairman, there is not an official in this Government who has looked after the affairs of his office with greater zeal and has saved more money for the Government, taking into consideration the amount of money appropriated for his office, than has the present Auditor of the Post Office Department. It has been said here on the floor of the House that his office is a sweatshop, that he is overworking employees, but if the gentlemen who make that charge had seen fit to go down to his office and go through it and investigate it from top to bottom I am quite sure they would not have made any such statement on the floor of the House. I say it is doing a great injustice to the Auditor of the Post Office Department to make that statement, and gentlemen owe it not only to him but to themselves, before they stand here on the floor and make such statements, to make at least a partial personal investigation of the facts.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; not now. What are the facts? In 1910 the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department during the fiscal year cost the people of this country $835,680. In this bill for the year 1915 there is proposed to be carried the sum of $710,820, a reduction of more than 14 per cent over what it cost to do the same work four years ago; and that notwithstanding the fact that the cost of the Postal Service has increased in the meantime more than 33 per cent. That is a record, Mr. Chairman, of which the Auditor of the Post Office Department has a reason to feel proud, and certainly Members of Congress, in the face of that record, ought not to stand here and undertake to criticize and abuse him in his honest effort to discharge the duties of his office.

It has been said that he runs a sweatshop. What are the facts? The facts are that Mr. Kram has issued an order in which he prohibits an employee in his department from assorting more than a certain number of cards; and there are employees in his office who are able to start at 9 o'clock in the morning and get through with the work they are allowed to perform in any single day before 3 o'clock in the afternoon. In addition to that, it was shown here on Tuesday that employees in his office who formerly made only $720 a year when paid a salary are now drawing more than $1,000 a year. There is not an employee in his office to-day who is not drawing more money under this piece-rate basis than he or she was drawing under the salary basis, with the exception of six; and, in addition to that, as I have already said, they not only draw more money, they not only receive more compensation, but they work one or two, and in some cases three, hours less than they formerly did. The gentlemen are wholly unwarranted in what they say. They are doing an injustice to the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and they are doing an injustice to themselves when they come here and on the ex parte statement of some disaffected or disgruntled employee and without the least personal investigation on their part undertake on the floor of the House to denounce the auditor and the conduct of his office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12169. An act providing for an additional appropriation for a public building in the city of Monroe, N. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5147. An act to authorize and direct Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Canal Zone, and formerly chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to investigate certain claims of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.; and

S. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution to authorize the President to grant leave of absence to an officer of the Corps of Engineers for the purpose of accepting an appointment under the Government of China on works of conservation and public improvement.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition to the offices of the four auditors of the Treasury required to be removed to the old building of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the General Supply Committee and offices of the Treasury now occupying rented quarters, and such other offices or parts of offices of the Treasury Department as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine, shall be removed thereto; and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall entirely vacate all of said buildings on or before June 1, 1914.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the last word?

Mr. MANN. Fourteen, not seven. In addition to any question about the merits of the proposition, is that word "buildings" in line 18, or should it be "building"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are two or three buildings.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is only one referred to hitherto, and then it says "buildings."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Sometimes buildings are referred to in the singular and sometimes in the plural. As a matter of fact, there is some kind of a walk way and steps between the buildings.

Mr. MANN. With due deference to grammatical construction, if it is "building" in one place, it ought to be "building" in the next place, I do not care which; but when I find the word "building" in one place and in the next line or two referred to as "buildings," it is a little incorrect, whatever it is. If it is "building" in line 12, it should be "building" in line 18. However, I do not care. As I understand, it is the intention under this system to transfer to the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing the different divisions in addition to the auditors. These different divisions are now placed where?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Some of them are in rented buildings and some of them in the Treasury Building.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but where are they? That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I could not tell the gentleman, unless I had the Book of Estimates to refer to the rented buildings.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have not succeeded in getting much yet.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Some are in the Cox Building, some in the Union Building, and so on.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Illinois yielded the floor?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] was praising Mr. Kram's work in the auditing department——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to make the point of order——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Kram has established a system of——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we filled 20 columns of the RECORD on Tuesday with a discussion of this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let me ask the gentleman a question. I think I can be as good-natured as anybody.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am trying to be good-natured.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If I consent to a discussion of this subject for five minutes, will the gentleman promise not to return to it any more?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I make no promises at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up the time of the committee——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman took up 35 minutes on a roll call.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make no promises, but I will promise gentlemen I will take up some time from this on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time, from the Postmaster General relating to the rule for the appointment of postmasters in Republican congressional districts.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not like to be discourteous.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman ought not to object; it is pretty good stuff, and it is only a few lines.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the status which prevents the gentleman from Illinois from speaking at this time? I have not been able to discover it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing to prevent the gentleman from Illinois from addressing the committee at this time, if he discusses the paragraph under consideration, and the gentleman from South Carolina made the point of order that the gentleman was not discussing the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is not that a rather unusual objection?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Inasmuch as the gentleman wanted to discuss the Auditor for the Post Office Department and the paragraph takes into consideration the removal of the four auditors of the Treasury Department, of which this gentleman is one, was not the gentleman in order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But we do not happen to remove him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it does not come within the spirit of the rule. The Chair has been as liberal as it is possible to be with reference to this discussion, and if the gentleman in charge of the bill makes a point of order the Chair feels constrained to sustain it. The question before the committee is a mere question of parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair has stated in reference to that, and the question now is, Shall the Clerk read in response to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]? The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1914.

Hon. W. E. WILLIAMS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I have your letter of the 6th instant asking to be advised as to what extent Congressmen at Large are consulted with regard to the appointment of postmasters under the practice now being pursued by the department.

In reply, I would advise that under a practice of very long standing the department seeks recommendations for postmasters from Representatives in Congress who are in accord with the political faith of the administration. For districts not represented by such Congressmen the recommendations of Senators in such accord are given first consideration; but where neither Representatives nor Senators are in accord with the administration suggestions and recommendations are sought from the State organizations of the party in accord with the administration.

You will therefore observe that Congressmen at Large under this plan are not credited with any post-office patronage.

Very sincerely,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of resisting the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina rose, who is in charge of the bill, and the Chair felt that he ought to recognize the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman who is in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire recognition?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to the floor, unless the gentleman from South Carolina wants it, and I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether or not this bill carries provision for the rent of buildings that are now occupied by these auditors who will be removed to the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The legislative bill carries the appropriation for the rent of such buildings as are rented in Washington, but we contemplate that when we have the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing Building at our disposal we will be able to move all of these departments that are now in rented buildings to that building. You will notice this bill carries no appropriation for rent. But it is fair to say that I inquired whether or not they would be able to get all of their files that are now in the Cox Building and in the Union Building into the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing Building, and it was stated that it was impossible to answer the question properly until they go in and take out certain partitions and begin to use the space. It is possible when they undertake to move into that building they will not be able to store all the files and records, and we will still have to make further provision for rented buildings; but the appropriation will not be very large.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What I particularly desire to know, and I now ask the gentleman, is how much will be saved by reason of the auditors being moved to the old bureau building and not being required to further rent quarters for the occupation of these departments?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are now paying about $47,000 a year in rents, and we hope to save nearly all of that amount. We may have to rent a little space outside, but not much.

Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday we filled 20½ columns of the RECORD in discussing the piece-rate proposition. Only two speeches, as I now recollect, were made on this side of the House in favor of the bill. This morning the piece-rate proposition was overwhelmingly voted out of the bill. The committee has no feeling about it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] did not happen to participate in that debate. I do not want to be discourteous to anybody, and although we have passed the matter and it is out of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not ask any favor——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina (continuing). To address the committee for five minutes on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understood a while ago that my colleague refused to be good. Have they reached a ground for agreement?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I have the same statement to make now that I made then. I have no promises to make. I tried to be good all the way through. I have as much right to exercise my rights on the floor of this House as any other Member, and shall be the judge of how to do it under the rules.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman now seeks to do it outside of the rules.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I have not sought this. The gentleman is mistaken. This request has not been made by me.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman realizes he does not have to accept this tender unless he wants to do so.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman can not get the floor without addressing the Chair.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I decline to accept the offer of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I decline to accept the unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in order to save my colleague under the circumstances, and at his suggestion, publicly made, I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For washing and hemming towels, for the purchase of awnings and fixtures, window shades and fixtures, alcohol, benzine, turpentine, varnish, baskets, belting, bellows, bowls, brooms, buckets, brushes, canvas, crash, cloth, chamois skins, cotton waste, door and window fasteners, dusters; flower garden, street, and engine hose; lace leather, lye, nails, oils, plants, picks, pitchers, powders, stencil plates, hand stamps and repairs of same, spittoons, soap, matches, match safes, sponges, tacks, traps, thermometers, toilet paper, tools, towels, towel racks, tumblers, wire, zinc, and for blacksmithing, repairs of machinery, removal of rubbish, sharpening tools, street car tickets not exceeding $250, advertising for proposals, and for sales at public auction in Washington, D. C., of condemned property belonging to the Treasury Department, payment of auctioneer fees, and purchase of other absolutely necessary articles, $13,500.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move to strike out the last word?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do; and for the purpose of getting the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]. I want to ask him if he was duly elected to this Congress and has presented his credentials as a Member of this Congress?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I understand I have. I have not inquired of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the leader of the minority.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood from the leader of the minority that he had some doubts as to whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] had been elected or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent and miscellaneous expenses, Office of Auditor for the Post Office Department, namely: For miscellaneous items, including purchase, repair, and exchange of typewriting machines, of which not exceeding $375 may be used for rental of telephones, and not exceeding $300 may be used for the purchase of law books, books of reference, and city directories, $3,500.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Kram, who is at the head of the auditing department in the Post Office Department, has instituted one of the most vicious systems that has ever been instituted in any industry in the country. I am surprised at some of the remarks made here, and can not account for them beyond the fact that the gentlemen who have made them have very little knowledge of what the piecework system means, and even a less knowledge of the industries of the country and what is to the benefit of the workers of the country, inasmuch as they are advocating a system such as has been instituted in this department.

There never has been a piecework system but that it has been injurious and disadvantageous to the worker. It has always developed into a wage that is based upon the most efficient and very best labor, and when they increase the productive power the wage is reduced until a speeding-up system is reached that results in overdrawing on the resources of the worker.

Now, it is not surprising to me that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and the other gentlemen who said that they went down there and were shown around by Mr. Kram should make a favorable report of the matter, because Mr. Kram doubtless had matters fixed for them. I happened to go down there when Mr. Kram did not know I was coming, and I say to you, gentlemen, that some of the employees were afraid to speak. And if you will tell me of a condition where the employees are afraid to speak the truth in regard to a matter, but say that it is something they approve of, their advice and opinion is of no value to me, so far as I am concerned. This system there is going to result in the deterioration of the resources of the women who are working there, and if this Congress wants to be in harmony with the best interests of the laboring people of this country, both organized and unorganized, they will put their stamp of disapproval on any such system as Mr. Kram has inaugurated in that auditing department. [Applause.]

Now, to my mind it is only a question of being fair in this matter. It is nothing about which we should become excited, or that should lead to personal remarks. Piecework has been going on in this country for many years.

Organizations of labor have made investigations in regard to these things outside of their own organizations; I mean organizations that do not have the piecework system. My trade had it when we started as an organization, and we soon found that it was detrimental, and we disposed of the system. Almost every other organization, after studying the situation, has done the same thing.

I say that it is not fair to say that because those organizations are opposed to the piecework system they are in favor of loafing. Everybody who knows anything about my history knows that it is not true. I believe in efficiency. I believe in merit in work. I believe in doing a fair day's work for a fair day's pay.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No; I can not be interrupted. I must comply with the rules, and that means I can get only five minutes. All these organizations have the same view on this subject, not because they have any feeling against the employer, because certainly they are interested in the industries in which they are working. They have taken this position only because they know it is for the best interests of human kind and for the best interests of all the people of this country. I say to you that piecework is only of temporary benefit anyway, because as soon as it makes inroads upon human resources, as soon as you get the work to that position where there is a strain and an overdraft on the resources of the human being, he begins to deteriorate, so that he is not as efficient as he formerly was.

I am glad this question has come up here, and I am glad we shall have the opportunity to pass upon it, and pass upon it properly, and that means that it will be stamped out, and stamped out now. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the piecework system is practically the same as the Taylor system. The labor unions all over the country have been opposing that system, and it is rather a happy conclusion that has been arrived at now, because the manufacturers who are finding out really what it is do not use it themselves. They have found after a thorough trial that it is not advantageous. Of course they took to it at first. Mr. Taylor told what it would do in the way of promoting efficiency, and so on; but when it was learned that it was not really an efficient system and was not going to accomplish what Mr. Taylor and others said it would accomplish, and was not really of advantage in shop management or a real benefit to anyone, they passed it up. But these gentlemen here who do not know anything about labor, and who prefer to take the word of a man whose system of work is a blot on this administration—and that is Mr. Kram——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that his colleague may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I found out that the system in vogue down in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department was wrong and contrary to the representations that have been made in regard to it, and it is a wrong return to make to say that the Government employees are not efficient servants. I believe, in the main, that they are efficient servants and earn all or more than they are given. I believe they are becoming more efficient all the time.

I do not know what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is talking about when he says they are loafing around. There may be men in some of the Government departmental offices loafing, some of those messengers, or people like that, who are called upon now and then to do work and who must be ready to do their work when they are called upon. But in the Post Office Department and in the Navy Department, where they do mechanical work, and in other departments where they have their work laid out for them, I believe they are as efficient as most workmen are anywhere.

It has been demonstrated in the Navy Department that they can there manufacture almost any of their supplies more cheaply than those supplies can be purchased by contract. If the gentleman will go to Chicago, I will show him some real hard workers, mail carriers, and I will leave it to him to decide, before he consumes much time in Chicago, whether they are worked too hard or not, both in the post office and as carriers. I will show him that he has yet to discover a place where the post-office employees are not earning the money they get. I believe it would be wholesome information for the gentleman, and it would put him more at ease and would render him less excited about these employees of the Government getting something that does not belong to them. I can show him that condition in almost every department that I am familiar with, and I can show it to every gentleman here.

I am one of those who are opposed to every sort of loafing, whether under the Government or otherwise. I tell the officials of labor unions that they must put the stamp of disapproval upon those employees who try to get Government jobs simply on the theory that the jobs are easy or that they can thereby get something for nothing. In other words, I urge upon them that they must encourage industry and efficiency on the part of their members. In connection with the trades-union movement and otherwise I have always contended that a mechanic should do a fair day's work and should receive in return a fair day's pay for that fair day's work.

This bill is inconsistent in many ways. I notice, by a comparison of the items in regard to the engineers in Government buildings, that some are paid $1,400, some $1,200, and some $1,000. I notice some other things also that do not seem to be just the proper things.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. May I ask this question, entirely for information? I wondered if the gentleman's attention had been called to the fact that the law clerk in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department receives $3,000 a year while the law clerks in the offices of the other auditors receive $2,000? For example, on page 41, in line 7, the law clerk in the office of the Auditor for the Treasury Department is given $2,000 per year; in line 13, $2,000 is given the law clerk in the office of the Auditor for the War Department; line 24 provides $2,000 per year for the law clerk in the office of the Auditor for the Navy Department; on page 42, the law clerk in the office of the Interior Department Auditor gets $2,000; and line 14, page 43, gives the law clerk in the office of the Auditor for the State and Other Departments $2,000 per year. Yet the law clerk in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department is given $3,000 per year. Why should there be any discrimination among these law clerks? Why should they not all be given the same salary of $2,000 per year?

Does the gentleman know any reason for that; and if so, what that reason is?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not know. I do not think the law clerk there does piecework in the auditor's department [laughter], and I do not suppose he is any more efficient than any other law clerk. There may be some explanation to it, but I do not understand it. But however we may differ about other matters, it seems to me that in this case there should be no difference of opinion in regard to piecework among those who are trying to bring about proper conditions among the working people. The establishment of the piecework system by any Government department can not fail to be an encouragement to those outside who are desirous of introducing that system. It enables them to point to the fact that the Government itself is doing piecework, and it gives those drivers who want to drive labor to the limit of its ability and to keep up the strain and destroy the resources of labor at an early age an opportunity to introduce that system in their private establishments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $6,000, to be expended under the direction of the Auditor for the Post Office Department under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and to operate as a specific exception of the said office from the appropriation for contingent expenses, Treasury Department, unless otherwise provided by law.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I notice that at the top of page 58 there is a separate paragraph beginning with the words:

In all, $6,000.

Is that an addition to these other paragraphs on the other page? And if it is, why is it made into a separate $6,000 item? Is the total appropriation $6,000 or $12,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is simply the foregoing items added up.

Mr. BRYAN. It looked odd to me, and I did not know what it was.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of tabulating equipment for use in auditing accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service, including exchange, repairs, miscellaneous expenses of installation, cards, and filing devices, $86,350, to be expended under the direction of the Auditor for the Post Office Department under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That not exceeding $22,150 may be expended for the rental of tabulating and card-sorting machines.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph carries an appropriation of $86,350 for the purchase of additional mechanical equipment for that particular auditor's office which audits the accounts of the Postal Service, to which I have absolutely no objection. The statement was made here by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that a great deal of credit was due to this particular auditor for the saving of a vast amount of money. I contend that the saving to this Government is from the installation of these mechanical devices and not from the system which he inaugurated in that particular branch of the service. In line with that I wish to take, not my own statement or the statement of any employee down here, but the statement of that gentleman himself, on page 140 of the hearings before the committee, in which he states:

When the installation of the electrical tabulation system was recommended it was recognized that there would be a number of employees in the office who would not be adapted to perform the work, and the department has relieved the office from time to time of persons not adapted to the work, taking over on the rolls of the various bureaus 15 employees in the past 18 months, and on the 12th instant the retransfer of 12 former employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was directed by the Secretary.

In all, 27 employees in 18 months. That is 16⅔ per cent of the 162 employees in that department. I want to call attention to the fact that in the short period of time in which this system has been in operation they have found that number of employees unfitted for this system of piecework. And what has this gentleman done? He has recommended their transfer to some other bureau. In other words, he has got the best that was in them, physically, under the old and the new systems, and when they could continue no longer he has transferred them to some other branch of the Government service, and that branch of the Government service is supposed to suffer.

In other words, he wants young women, strong and healthy. As long as they are able to hit the pace and keep it up he is willing to keep them in that particular establishment, but just as soon as they are not able to keep up the pace on these tabulating and card-punching machines he wants to turn them over to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, the Treasury Department, or some other department and let that department bear the expense of their inefficiency. That is the system against which we are protesting, not the action of the committee, not the installation of these labor-saving devices, because we realize that the Government ought to receive as much benefit as private employers from the inventions which we protect through our legislation and through our patent laws. It is the system this gentleman has established in the Auditor's office of the Post Office Department, whereby he is taking the best that is in these women, as far as their physical condition is concerned, and after he gets through with them and makes them ready for the scrap heap he is willing to turn them over to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing or some other branch of the Government service. I stand for a fair division of the benefits accruing from the installation of these mechanical devices, both financial and otherwise, between the Government and the employee that will promote efficiency and will be the right sort of economy.

I am not opposed to the installation or to the furtherance of this system of introducing labor-saving devices in the Government service, but I am opposed to the Government itself taking advantage of defenseless women and allowing one of the Government officials to build up a reputation for efficiency and economy at the expense of human beings. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up a great deal of time, because we have already discussed this thing at great length. The paragraph over which the discussion arose has gone out of the bill, and I am taking the defeat gracefully, I hope, and in perfect good humor.

I want to say, once for all, for the benefit of some of these gentlemen on the floor, that I am as much interested as they are in the people who are in the employment of the Government. I am not rendering so much lip service, but I believe I have as much of the milk of human kindness in me as any man here. [Applause.]

I have gone to this office and investigated conditions. I have expressed to the Auditor for the Post Office Department my conviction that under no circumstances, as these people increased in efficiency and as they were able to turn out more cards per day or per hour, should there be any reduction in the price. There is nothing in this record that justifies the statement that this man has sent old and worthless and worn-out people to other departments. That is not what he says. That is what the gentleman from California says, and the testimony does not warrant it. I will tell you what he did do. He took a vote, and some people voted that they would prefer a salary. Some voted that they would prefer piecework. Every person who was found to be unadapted to piecework—not on account of age, but on account of temperament or anything else—and every person who did not want to do piecework, it has been the policy of the Auditor for the Post Office Department to seek for that person another position, where he could be paid an annual salary and not be compelled to do piecework. Now, that is all there is about it.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Does the gentleman know whether this ballot in relation to piecework was a secret ballot or an open ballot?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The ballot was in writing.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I mean whether the employee was compelled to sign her name on the ballot or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; they signed their names; and for those who voted that they preferred their salaries instead of piecework it has been the policy of the auditor to seek places where they could be paid salaries instead of continuing on piecework. Nobody has been turned off, and the people have not been transferred because they were inefficient, but they have been transferred because they preferred to be transferred, or because they were not adapted to piecework. That is the statement the auditor makes to me.

As I said in the beginning, this whole question has been thrashed out. You gentlemen have won your victory, and you certainly ought to be satisfied with it. I think that you ought at least to be fair enough to yourselves to go and make a personal investigation before you talk in that way on the floor of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. With Members on this side of the House I voted for the amendment to remove this piecework system, because I do not believe in the permanent employment by the Government in working this class of people on the piecework system. I think the criticisms that have been made against the auditor, Mr. Kram, are entirely unnecessary, unprovoked, and very unfair. Every gentleman must know that when it comes to operating a particular machine, like a typewriting machine or a punching machine, machines that require a delicate touch of the fingers, the ability to rapidly move one finger after another in the right place, that everyone is not adapted to that character of work.

Many of the women in the auditor's office who are used to using a pen, adding up columns of figures, doing the work well and quite able to do the clerical work and do it well, when it came to operating a punching machine did not find that they were mentally or physically, one or the other, adapted to the best work of that character. It was not the piecework system that made the distinction at all; it was not a question of whether they worked on piecework or not. Of course such persons might be retained on the monthly salary roll and do a little work, but it is perfectly evident to everyone that it would not take very long for a person not adapted to that character of work, on a salary, to be dropped from the place, because one who does a very little amount of work or makes a very large number of errors will not be long retained in that office.

The auditor's office in making the change from the old system to the new system of machine work, which is referred to as piecework, found a number of these ladies who were not well qualified for operating the machines as they were for doing the clerical work, and he has endeavored, with other Government officials, instead of removing these people from the Government service, to find places for them somewhere else in the Government service.

It is hardly fair for my friend from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] to say that it is because they have been worn out, as if they had been at this line of work for a series of years. These machines have only been in the office about two years. People who have the strength to do this kind of work do not get worn out in that length of time. It is not because people have been worn out, but because some of them are mentally and physically not capacitated to do this class of work.

I stated to the House the other day that it would be impossible for me to operate one of these machines owing to a slight infirmity, but I do not think I am wholly useless in the world, or entirely worn out; not yet. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have seldom been more gratified over any one proposition than I was over the victory of the amendment of the gentleman from California this morning doing away with piecework in this auditor's office. I know nothing personally about the conditions in the office, but I am against piecework. I have had an opportunity in my life to see the evolution of piecework in one branch of labor. I knew as a youth the old-fashioned print shop, where the printer stood at the case and was paid by what was known technically as "by the ems." The man who put up more type than the other man got more pay, and in those days the proposition upon the part of the large employer was to drive all of his men for maximum production.

I saw the old-style print shop pass and the new-style printing office come in. I saw the evolution from the man who stood at the case to the man who sat at the machine. The transition was a cruel period in the printing trade, for the reason that the new typesetting machine was a labor-saving device, and thousands of printers were turned out of employment when it was installed. The machine put the printer on an entirely new basis. Pacemaking was bad enough when a man stood at the case, but here was a high-tensioned machine, a machine of high gears, rods, and finger boards, in which there was practically no limit of production under pressure. The minute the machines were installed there was remonstrance, and piecework, which was tearing men down physically and nervously, passed in union shops.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How long has the gentleman been in the House?

Mr. MURDOCK. About 11 years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have had appropriations in this bill for the payment of piecework employees of the Government ever since the gentleman has been here, and he has never said a word in opposition to it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am sorry I did not; and, if I have been guilty of dereliction in the past, I am doubly glad to assist to-day in getting rid of this piecework system.

It is not particularly what happens up here in this department that I am interested in, but it is the example the Government sets all over the country to those employers who drive men and women mercilessly and cruelly by the piecework system. Organized labor is against piecework.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The best-organized body of employees is the plate printers; and every year that the gentleman has been here the bill has carried an appropriation for the payment of plate printers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to be paid at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the gentleman has never raised his voice in opposition. These employees would not have it changed if they could.

Mr. MURDOCK. I doubt the gentleman's statement on that. Probably they would not if you took the testimony of the men above them, who are interested in driving them to the limit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; we have had representatives from the plate printers before our committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, this paragraph has a provision in it for the rental of machines. The Government does not own all the machines; some are owned by some private corporation; and it is the interest, I judge, of that private corporation to keep the machines going the limit to show their efficiency to the Government—to show that they are better than hand labor.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Would it not be for their interest to reduce the output?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. You take the women of the department and speed them up under the lash and the efficiency will fall off. They will not keep up in efficiency, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has just pointed out. If you crowd the operators, put them on high-tension machines, drive them to the limit, the efficiency will fall off; it does not increase.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLLECTING INTERNAL REVENUE.

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, surveyors, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices, $2,150,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any officer, designated above, subpœnaed by the United States court to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 25, page 58, insert the following:

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any deputy collector who has not received his appointment as the result of a civil-service examination."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, against that I make the point of order. It is legislation, pure and simple.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the item is not subject to a point of order, but of that later. This item, carrying $2,155,000, provides for the salary of 63 revenue collectors, 1,179 deputy collectors, and 168 clerks. The act of October 22, 1913, provided that these deputy collectors should be taken out of the classified service, and should be appointed, irrespective of the law which requires that deputy collectors shall be appointed from the certified list. That act was the worst blow to the civil service that civil service has received in the last 20 years. That act was intended and will reinstate the spoils system. That act is significant when we follow it with the first appropriation bill and find that the change to the spoils system calls for additional force to do the work.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GOOD. This provision, carrying salaries for those officers for deputy collectors, is most significant. It proves one of two things—either that the Democratic deputy collectors are inefficient or the spoils system is to blame for the increase in salaries. Mr. Chairman, I read from the hearings to show the extent of these increases.

It is estimated 10 more deputies will be employed at a salary of $1,400 than were employed in 1913, 20 more at a salary of $1,300, 6 less at a salary of $1,200, 3 less at a salary of $1,100, 16 less at a salary of $1,000, and 4 more at a salary of $900; also 5 more clerks at a salary of $1,200, 3 more at a salary of $1,100, 20 more at a salary of $1,000, 1 more messenger at a salary of $720, and 1 more at a salary of $600.

And this bill carries every increase asked for.

No one contends that the work is increasing. Why, then, should we increase this organization force? Why this increased expense? Simply because we have provided that these deputies shall be appointed without regard to civil-service examination. A return to spoils means an increase for spoilsmen. Let me cite one case. In my own city a number of years ago a young man came and commenced the practice of law. He was able, but he was poor. He took a civil-service examination, and was appointed a deputy revenue collector, at a salary of $50 a month. He had charge of the sale of stamps to the persons there engaged in the sale and manufacture of tobacco. That community was horrified one day to learn that that young lawyer, who had the confidence and respect of everybody, was found dead in his office, sitting in his chair. He left a wife and little girl, but no property. His widow took the civil-service examination and was appointed a deputy collector in the place of her deceased husband at $50 a month, which enabled her to live and educate her little girl. Last week the spoilsman entered that town and removed that widow from office and placed in her stead the chairman of the Democratic county committee—a very estimable gentleman; no examination; oh, no. The office was removed from the Federal building to the place of business of this gentleman; and that is what is going on all over this country. I make this amendment now when it will strike, perhaps, at as many Republican deputies as it does to deputies who are Democrats. It enunciates a principle that ought to be written into the law with regard to deputy collectors of internal revenue, with regard to deputy collectors of the income tax.

Mr. Chairman, I have searched diligently to ascertain some good reason why we should increase this force. I can find no good reason except the spoils system. Efficiency and ability to perform the work of the office has been set aside and reward for political service is to be the only element that will enter into one's qualifications for appointment to these positions. There are almost 1,200 of these deputy collectors in the United States. The salary carried for these positions is over $2,000,000, an amount that will go to the spoilsmen throughout the country and will be the entering wedge that will, unless we by our acts prevent it, destroy the great civil-service system, a system that has done so much to bring better service for the Government wherever it has been employed.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, the question I desired to ask the gentleman was this. He stated that the greatest blow that has been delivered in 20 years to the merit system was when this House agreed to the Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, I believe, removing deputy collectors and deputy United States marshals from the classified service. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not recall that the same blow was delivered by President McKinley, after his inauguration in 1897, when he removed all of these same officials from the classified service by Executive order?

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman say that would make it right? If that order was wrong, is that any reason why this Congress should perpetuate that wrong?

Mr. GORDON. I was just calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that this was not the worst blow that has been delivered, this amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was delivered by act of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. GORDON. The urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. GOOD. That order kept in the service everyone who was in the service——

Mr. GORDON. That order resulted in removing every Democrat in the service and filling the offices with Republicans. It was done, of course, in the interest of the service! The gentleman's idea of the interest of the service is to put out every Democrat in office and fill his place with a Republican.

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. GORDON. And that is exactly what was done under Mr. McKinley, and just as soon as they got the offices filled with Republicans Mr. Roosevelt issued an Executive order putting them back into the classified service without an examination. Is that true or not?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not true; and the amendment I have offered will prevent as many Republicans from receiving salaries who have not been appointed as the result of the civil-service examination as it will Democrats. It is not partisan at all. It is an amendment offered to preserve the civil-service laws of the United States.

Mr. GORDON. Yes. Whenever you propose a measure here to keep Republicans in office and put Democrats out it is in the interest of the civil service. The gentleman talks about the large number of Republicans in these positions. Just possess your soul in peace and give us time. We will dispose of all the Republicans who are not efficient; but we have not had the time yet. I do not know where the service has suffered. I arose simply for the purpose of calling attention to the hypocrisy that has been indulged in on the floor of this House on this one particular question, to wit, the deputy collectors and deputy United States marshals. President McKinley, after his inauguration, removed from the classified service by Executive order deputy collectors and deputy United States marshals, and then proceeded to fill the offices with Republicans. It took about all the time that McKinley was President to do this. When Roosevelt got in he proceeded to issue an Executive order placing all these employees back under the civil-service rules, and by that time they had all these positions filled by men recommended by Republican Senators or Members of the House, none of whom had passed a civil-service examination. That is exactly what was done, and that is history.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, under the guise of limiting an appropriation it is not in order to change the law. The deficiency act of 1913 specifically provided that these particular officials should not be appointed by reason of civil-service regulations. In other words, if they have been taken out by act of Congress it is not possible in making an appropriation for them under the guise of limiting that appropriation to repeal the law, so I make the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. This amendment is clearly a limitation on the appropriation and in order under the rules. I call the attention of the Chair to page 360 of the rules, paragraph 825, and to this language, which brings under the rule an amendment which provides—

That no part of the appropriation under consideration shall be used for a certain designated purpose.

That language refers to a ruling of the Chair which we find in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, paragraph 3917, page 617:

The House may by limitation on a general appropriation bill provide that no part of an appropriation shall be used for a certain purpose.

That is exactly what this limitation does. I refer the Chair to the citation on page 617, and I also call the attention of the Chair to the citation in paragraphs 3917 and 3926 of the same volume, all of which clearly indicate the unvarying rule of the House, a rule that has been followed without any variation by many Chairmen, that a limitation of this sort is clearly in order. It is a limitation to the effect that no part of an appropriation shall be used for a certain designated purpose, and the logic of the rule is this, that as the House can refuse to appropriate for a certain purpose—in other words, an amendment to strike out this item would be in order—the House may by limitation provide that no part of an appropriation shall be used for a certain purpose.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina says that it is not in order, and cites an act of Congress which he said took these places out from under the classified service. The gentleman is not entirely accurate in his language or statement, although that does not make any difference. The law in question provided that these appointments might be made without regard to the civil service, but the fact is a large number of the people employed, to be paid for by this item, have been appointed under civil-service rules. My idea is that probably a majority of those now serving were appointed under civil-service rules, but I would like to ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who is familiar with the subject, if that is his information.

Mr. GOOD. Most of them.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Iowa says most of them were appointed under civil-service rules. Now, there is a law to the effect they may be appointed without regard to civil-service rules, and some may have been so appointed, and it has been held time and time again——

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. And the rulings have been so clear that I somewhat hesitate to take up the time of the Chair in discussing it—that the House may limit appropriations, as is proposed. Let me read a little further. I am reading now from the rules, page 360, paragraph 825, and I call the Chair's special attention to this language:

And this designated purpose may reach the question of qualifications.

That is exactly what this item does reach, the question of qualifications. Now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, I think, is mistaken about the matter in reference to the deputy collectors and marshals under the internal-revenue office being appointed under the civil service. The gentleman will recall that in the tariff act passed making provisions for the collection of the income tax a provision——

Mr. MONDELL. We have not reached that portion yet.

Mr. BARTLETT. That there was a provision carried in the urgent deficiency bill of October, 1913—I think it was October sometime——

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to my friend that the item to which this amendment is offered is at the bottom of page 58 and refers to internal-revenue collectors.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, the internal-revenue collectors collect the income tax, and the deputy collectors, so I do not think I am mistaken—however, I do not want to consume too much of the gentleman's time.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands this, that whether I am entirely correct or not, whether a large majority or only a majority, or a minority only, were appointed under civil service, is immaterial. It would not matter if only one had been so appointed.

Mr. BARTLETT. I readily assent to the gentleman's proposition, and I merely wanted to correct the statement of the facts which he had made. It is immaterial whether any have been appointed under civil service as affecting the legality of this amendment, and of course I realize that at once that that would be no argument against it being in order.

Mr. MONDELL. That was my information—that a majority of them had been so appointed—but that is entirely immaterial.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is.

Mr. MONDELL. The law now provides they may be appointed in any way. Now, some have been so appointed——

Mr. BARTLETT. Most of them.

Mr. MONDELL. The rule of the House is very clear relative to an amendment placing a limitation providing that no part of an appropriation should be used for a certain designated purpose.

I am now reading from the rule, and the gentleman will realize how clearly the language of the rule fits this case: "And this designated purpose may reach the question of qualification." The case is so clear I do not wish to take up the time of the Chair any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The present occupant of the chair is not very much enamored of the civil-service law, and ordinarily would like to rule this provision out of order; but from an examination of the precedents it is very clear this is purely a limitation on this appropriation, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if passed, would prevent the payment of salaries to those Government officials who have been appointed since the act of October, 1913, and the passage of the tariff act containing the income-tax provision. Up to the time of the passage of the act known as the urgent deficiency act of 1913, by reason of an Executive order issued a year and a half or two years before that, the deputy United States marshals were appointed under a so-called civil-service process. Finally, when the urgent deficiency bill of 1913 was before the House, on an amendment which I offered myself on the floor—I do not know whether it was agreed to by the House or not. Anyhow, when the bill came back from the Senate—whether it passed the House or not I do not now recall, but I think it did—the provision was found to have been somewhat amended by the Senate. I do not recall the details, but the effect of the law as it now is since that act was passed is that those deputy United States marshals and deputy internal-revenue collectors who were compelled to give a bond to the collector or the marshal for the performance of their duties should be selected without reference to the civil-service law. And the act of 1913, known as the tariff act, containing the income-tax provision also provided that the deputy collectors who were to be appointed to collect the income tax through the Internal Revenue Office and under the collectors of internal revenue should be appointed without regard to the civil service. Now, that is the law, and the deputy United States marshals and the deputy collectors of internal revenue, having been appointed, have been performing their duties under this law.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir; go ahead.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] put in the RECORD a moment ago a statement that by reason of exempting this class of employees from the civil service the number of deputies had been largely increased in the department of the collector of internal revenue. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, they have been increased by reason of the provisions of the tariff law.

Mr. COX. The income-tax law?

Mr. BARTLETT. The income-tax law; yes.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I thought it related solely to the collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. GOOD. If you will look at the bill, you will find in the item on page 59 that we appropriate $1,000,000 for that service. That has nothing to do with the collection of the income tax, but only with the collection of the internal revenue of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does have something to do with it, because the deputy collectors are in the internal-revenue office and they collect the income tax, and while you appropriate $1,000,000 for it, if you pass this amendment you appropriate it to be expended only for those who may be appointed under the civil-service rule. I understand that. I will endeavor to put in the RECORD the provision of the law on this subject. I think it is a wise one.

The examinations that were held for deputy United States marshals were a farce. I read a copy of one of these examinations on the floor of the House in the discussion of that subject, and it is absolutely a farce to have men examined for the office of deputy marshals in the manner they were. They have had no examinations held for deputy collectors to collect the income tax, because the law provided that they should not be thus appointed. And now when all of these officers have been appointed in the way provided by the law of 1913, to say that they shall not be paid their salaries unless they have been thus appointed would not only be an injustice to these men who are filling these offices, but would absolutely nullify and delay and hinder and put off and very much embarrass the administration of the law.

We all know how slow the Civil Service Commission is in making reports upon examinations. Those of you who have had experience in examinations for fourth-class postmasters or rural free-delivery carriers know, since now the Civil Service Commisson is flooded with examinations, that it takes from one to three months sometimes. I have some examinations that have been held as long as three months ago for rural free-delivery carriers on which no report has been made. If you adopt this amendment, so far as the office of the United States marshal and office of the internal-revenue collector are concerned, now engaged in collecting the income tax, you might as well suspend the collection of the income tax until the Civil Service Commission can hold such examinations as they did hold to provide men to fill these offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. This Congress passed and the President signed bills which virtually said that, so far as these offices are concerned, for the benefit of the public service these appointments should be made without going through this farce of civil-service examination. For one, I am glad they did. I am proud of the fact that I took some part in having that legislation enacted. It is nonsense to repeal it or suspend it at this hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman wait one minute?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Make it 10 minutes, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] makes the argument that this amendment, if carried, will make it impossible to conduct the work of the Government, because there will be a considerable number of officials who can not be paid under the appropriation with the limitation.

Why, the gentleman is aware of the fact that he or any other Member of the House, if this amendment carries, can offer a provision under which to pay those who do not come within the limitation or those whose salaries are cut off by reason of the limitation. In other words, if the gentleman from Georgia is so wedded to the spoils system, is so anxious to be able to appoint his henchmen and friends and supporters to these jobs, and his side of the House, with its large majority, is with him, he can offer and they can carry an amendment under which such people can be paid.

But the question now before the House is this: Are we in favor of retaining in office men who were appointed to office under civil service, and are we in favor of having the civil service extended and cover deputy collectors, paid for under this item? There are 1,179, as I understand. The present program is to discharge as many of them as possible, because, though they have been for some time in the public service, they do not happen, some of them, to be of the household of the faith of the majority on the other side. No matter how worthy they may be, no matter how well qualified, the gentlemen are so anxious to take care of their hungry constituents that they want to throw these people out.

The amendment provides, in effect, that worthy Government officials shall continue to serve, shall not lose their jobs in order to give the friends and supporters of gentlemen on the other side who may not be qualified an opportunity to get jobs. But, as I said a moment ago, if gentlemen on that side are wedded to the spoils system and want to continue it, they can do so, even though this limitation shall carry, by providing otherwise for the payment of those whose payment is prohibited by the limitation.

It is as clear a proposition of civil service as we have had before the House in a long time. A vote "aye" in favor of this amendment is a vote in favor of the retention of tried and faithful public officials and in favor of the merit system in public affairs. A vote "no" is in favor of turning out tried and efficient public servants in order that spoilsmen may take their places and hold their jobs, to the harm and detriment of the public service. Gentlemen want to bear this in mind when they vote on this question. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, everyone who is candid will be forced to admit, no matter to what party he belongs, that his party is not guiltless of violations of the civil-service idea. I am very glad, however, as a member of the Republican Party, to remember that the great steps that have been taken in civil-service reform have been taken under Republican administrations, and I think gentlemen will realize, if they are candid with themselves, that every one of these steps, reluctantly taken sometimes, I will admit, has been of advantage to the public service.

Gentlemen, we can not disguise the fact that fundamentally the spoils system has no defense. We can not disguise the fact that no real and permanent advantage can come to a party that abandons even temporarily the merit system. It will not benefit gentlemen on the other side, who are defending violations of the civil-service laws, if they shall succeed.

It will not redound to the credit of themselves or to the benefit of their party. It is only a selfish and unworthy appeal that in any instance seeks to justify a departure from sound and justifiable principles. All of us must have learned in these latter days to recognize the great truth that merit alone should determine fitness for office; and now, when the opportunity occurs, as it always does to the majority, to abandon or to violate the merit system, I appeal to gentlemen to act on their better motives, on their larger judgment, for the good of the country, and also for the ultimate and perpetual good of their party.

I know how the temptation comes. It comes in insidious ways. Friends are importunate. The places to be filled are all too few. You can truthfully say to this side, "You violated the merit system when you had the power." But no matter what the circumstances or whatever party is responsible when violations occur they are always wrong, and the final judgment of the people will condemn such violations by whatever party made.

It has been urged here to-day that Republicans when in power violated the civil service both by official rule and in practice. But that is no justification, if true. If wrong then it is wrong now. If it be true that Republicans did wrong, your justification can not come by repeating the wrong, but by doing right. It is, of course, easier to stand for civil-service reform when you are not immediately interested. But the greater credit will come to those of us who shall always stand, whether in or out of power, for those principles which we must know are right and best for the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired on this paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GOOD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, at the bottom of page 58, by adding the following as a new paragraph:

"On and after October 1, 1914, the whole number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and the whole number of collectors of internal revenue shall not exceed 64."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not press the point of order. By increasing the number of revenue districts by one you will undo an injustice that was done that district in 1912. When the number of revenue districts was reduced from 67 to 63 it was not contemplated that the twelfth district, with headquarters in Scranton, Pa., should be eliminated. I think the chairman of this committee will vouch for the truthfulness of that statement. It was intended to interfere with other districts, but not this district. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, favors this restoration, as do the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and his deputy, who have expressed their opinions in writing to the committee.

I ask the Members of this House to place themselves in my position and to consider my case just as they would want me to consider a case pertaining to their own districts where an injustice had been done them. This twelfth district comprised 20 counties, with a population of 1,381,879 in 1910, a business of more than two and one-half million dollars a year, with an increase in the receipts of $818,000 in five years. Within 40 miles of the city of Scranton, where the headquarters of this district were, there is a population of a million people. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, the collections for the twelfth district were $2,545,703.02. There were 11 grain distilleries and 46 breweries, 6,034 special taxpayers and, in addition, 2,623 corporations that filed returns of annual net income. The corporations alone represent a capital stock of $369,000,000, with a net income of $25,000,000. Notwithstanding these large and rapidly growing interests we were forced into a district entirely different from ours and so far away and inconvenient that a day was consumed in going to and a day in returning from the city of Lancaster, where the headquarters for the ninth district are located. And this injustice was done us when within a radius of 40 miles of the city of Scranton are 1,000,000 people with whom was done the great bulk of the revenue business of the twelfth district.

I repeat, it was not intended that this district should be disturbed. Other districts were considered as among those to be eliminated, but the political exigencies of that time resulted in this district being affected. I ask that justice be done that district. We are entitled to this restoration. The ninth district, in which we are merged, is largely an agricultural district. The district which I represent is a great industrial district, and the one is not in harmony or touch with the other. Our people have been greatly inconvenienced by the removal of the headquarters from the city of Scranton.

Mr. COOPER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue both favor this restoration?

Mr. FARR. Both favor it and say an injustice was done us, and that great inconveniences have resulted. Mr. Cabell, the former Commissioner of Internal Revenue, made the same statement—that it has caused a loss in money to the Government and a great increase in the expense and much inconvenience to the taxpayers of my district. I want to repeat that it never was intended that this district should be interfered with. I ask you now, in justice to my constituents, to restore that district. I want you to do for me just what you would want me to do for you under similar circumstances.

Mr. SMITH of New York. What would be the expense of establishing the office?

Mr. FARR. To reestablish this office it will require a revenue collector. The additional expense will not amount to over $6,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, before making a point of order I want to say that the gentleman who has just addressed the committee has been very industrious and has presented with great force the merits of his proposition. I really think there is merit in the proposition that that territory is entitled to be designated as an internal-revenue district, but the law limits the number of districts to 63. The matter of arranging the boundaries of these districts is within the discretion of the President.

There are five internal-revenue districts in one State. There is one in the city of Cincinnati; there is another in the city of Covington, just across the river. I sympathize with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I think these districts can be so arranged under the law as it now exists as to give him his district without increasing the whole number. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if this increase were made, it would still be within the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to determine as to whether this particular district should be created.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; it would be in his power to reestablish that district, or he might put it somewhere else.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; he might put it somewhere else, it is true. He might reorganize the districts.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But under the circumstances I take it, unless there were some strong reasons to the contrary, he would reestablish this district. Now, it appears from the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Government really would save money by reestablishing the district.

Mr. FARR. Yes; it positively will.

Mr. MANN. Owing to the peculiar conditions of transportation and distances over in Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, nobody knows better than my friend on the other side that the man in charge of a bill must speak for the committee. There may be items in the bill that he personally does not favor. There may be things left out that he would like to see in the bill. I am compelled to make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I understand very well the responsibilities of a gentleman in charge of a committee; and yet I have frequently seen gentlemen in charge of a committee, when peculiar circumstances were brought to their attention, permit the House itself to judge of the merits of the case.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This is a legislative proposition.

Mr. MANN. I think myself it is a very nice thing, just once in a while—not often, but once in a while—to let the House itself determine what it wants to do. This is a good case.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman reserve the point of order for two minutes more, so that I may answer just one statement that he made?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FARR. A considerable number of people came from my section of the State to appear before Secretary McAdoo. After hearing them he frankly told them that it was a mistake to have abolished this district, that it was his wish to have it restored, and that he would endeavor to secure its restoration.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. When was it abolished?

Mr. FARR. October 1, 1912, just before the presidential election; and that was the reason that we lost that district. Mr. McAdoo went mentally all over this country with a view to merging districts for the purpose of restoring this one. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] lost a district in his State, and two districts in Iowa were merged in order to restore the district in South Carolina.

I submit in all fairness to the chairman, Mr. JOHNSON, that we do not need the district in South Carolina any more than we need the district in northeastern Pennsylvania that I have the honor to represent. Now, about the rearrangement of the districts. It is impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury to do it. He has endeavored to do so, and as regards the State of Kentucky I think it would be an injustice to remove any one of those districts. I believe it was a mistake to lessen the number of districts from 67 to 63, because it has resulted in a loss of money to the Government and in a lack of that close supervision that is so essential for this business. I trust that the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting the income tax: For expenses of assessing and collecting the income tax as provided in paragraph N, section 2, of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties, and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, including the employment in the District of Columbia of necessary clerical and other personal services, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $1,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 14, page 59, insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any deputy collector who has not been appointed as the result of a civil-service examination."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is the provision to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] referred a few moments ago. This appropriation carries a million dollars for the collection of the income tax provided for in the tariff bill. It will provide for about 400 deputy collectors, who will be engaged in collecting this tax. These deputy collectors are appointed by the various collectors of internal revenue throughout the country, and the patronage is considered senatorial patronage. They are appointed on the recommendation of Senators, and it is estimated that a great many million dollars will be collected every year through the deputy collectors. Their duties require that they shall go into the private affairs of manufacturers, business men, farmers, and professional men. After a man has made his return, that return is subject to such examination as the collector of internal revenue may require. The return is sent to the deputy collector appointed under this provision, and he has authority to go into the books, into the private affairs of the men who are obliged under this law to make returns and to pay the tax.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if there is any class of employees any place in the Government that should be entirely removed from political influence, it is this class of men, these 400 deputy collectors that are going throughout the land inquiring into the private business of the thousands of men who will make these returns. These collectors ought to be high-minded men, appointed without any regard to politics, without any regard to the political party to which the Senators belong who will recommend and secure their appointment. I can think of no class of men who will be called upon to enforce the law that should be more free from political bias and influence than these collectors.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that these income-tax collectors are to be appointed on the recommendation of Senators?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. MONDELL. And are not Members of Congress, Representatives, to be considered in the selection of these collectors?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentlemen on the other side will have no interest in it and will get no patronage if the amendment does not pass.

Mr. GOOD. Nothing at all.

Mr. MONDELL. It will not take anything from the patronage if your amendment carries?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all. But because of the character of the work required from this class of employees, it seems to me that that side of the House ought to favor this amendment, not because you have nothing to say about the men appointed, but you have a constituency which you represent upon the floor of this House that do need some protection. They want the protection whether they be Republican, Progressive, or Democrat. Their business secrets when imparted to these deputies should be inviolate. They ought to be appointed as the result of civil-service examination, and that examination ought to be one of the hardest examinations that it would be possible for men to pass.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming undertook to criticize some of us for being opposed to this pretense of civil-service reform. There is an old saying that—

> When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
> When the devil got well, the devil of a monk was he.

The voice of the gentleman from Wyoming was never heard in this Hall or anywhere else when his party was in power advocating putting any officers under the civil service. Now the gentleman is sick politically he would be a monk, but when he is well politically, the devil of a monk is he.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman kindly inform me when and where I ever voted against civil service, and where I ever voted in favor of a spoils system?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not kept tab on the gentleman. I did not say anything about the gentleman's vote. I said that his voice, which has been heard in Congress continually, as it has been to-day, for the last 18 years, and never until the Democrats came into power did we ever hear him suggest that any officers should be placed under the civil service.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has missed some of my speeches.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. As long as the gentleman himself was the beneficiary of the spoils system we heard no denunciation of that system by him, but since the Democrats have come into power and he can no longer apportion out these offices to his henchmen he becomes a convert to what he calls the civil-service law.

Mr. Chairman, the tariff act contains the following provisions:

In the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C., there shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, one additional deputy commissioner, at a salary of $4,000 per annum; two heads of divisions, whose compensation shall not exceed $2,500 per annum; and such other clerks, messengers, and employees, and to rent such quarters and to purchase such supplies as may be necessary: Provided, That for a period of two years from and after the passage of this act the force of agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, and other employees, not including the clerical force below the grade of chief of division, employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the city of Washington, D. C., authorized by this section of this act, shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury to insure faithful and competent service, and with such compensation as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may fix, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, within the limitations herein prescribed: Provided further, That the force authorized to carry out the provisions of section 2 of this act, when not employed as herein provided, shall be employed on general internal-revenue work.

* * * * * * *

Provided, That hereafter any deputy collector of internal revenue or deputy marshal who may be required by law or by authority or direction of the collector of internal revenue or the United States marshal to execute a bond to the collector of internal revenue or United States marshal to secure faithful performance of official duty may be appointed by the said collector or marshal, who may require such bond without regard to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof, and the officer requiring said bond shall have power to revoke the appointment of any subordinate officer or employee and appoint his successor at his discretion without regard to the act, amendments, rules, or regulations aforesaid.

It will be seen that the Internal-Revenue Commissioner shall not appoint these men, but that they shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Are not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury more competent to select these men for these important offices than to have them subjected to examination under the civil-service law? As I said, I have on two occasions made proffers of civil-service examination for deputy marshals, but there is nothing suggested in those examinations or in the questions propounded——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not the time, but I will gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall appoint.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, I said the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall appoint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman kindly tell me how the Secretary of the Treasury would know whom to appoint as a deputy collector in the city of Milwaukee, in my State?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. He would get the information from a Congressman, as a matter of patronage—the old spoils system.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asked me a question. No; the Secretary of the Treasury has these applications and their indorsements, and he receives information from the collector, and these indorsements and applications are submitted to him for his information. I desired to have some of my constituents appointed, but I have not been fortunate enough to secure anyone to be appointed. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has a peculiar aptitude of undertaking to suggest every time he makes a speech that the people who advocate something to which he is opposed, or who oppose something that he is in favor of, do it from ulterior purposes, and he parades himself before the House and the country as being the "holier than thou" of all the Members of the House. The gentleman is welcome to that place, if he desires to occupy it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 28, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Boston: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,500; vault clerk, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; redemption teller, $1,800; clerks—1, $2,200; 5 at $1,600 each; 1, $1,500; 1, $1,400; 2 at $1,200 each; 3 at $1,100 each; 4 at $1,000 each; chief guard, $1,100; 3 watchmen, at $850 each; laborer and guard, $720; 4 money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $46,570.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to what extent he investigated the question as to the effect the new currency law would have on the Independent Treasury and the offices of assistant treasurers at the various points?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have no definite information. I asked the Secretary of the Treasury what effect he thought it would have, and he said until the system was put in operation and they knew more definitely the workings of it they were not prepared to make any recommendations as to changes in the several subtreasuries, but they expected to use the subtreasuries in connection with the reserve system to some extent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I notice that on page 189 of the hearings that Deputy Assistant Fort was interrogated by the gentleman from South Carolina in regard to this matter. He said, among other things, that the new currency law seems to contemplate the continuance of the subtreasuries, and so forth. I judge from the very brief statement he made that the department is assuming that all of these officials will be necessary. I can not understand how or why it should be necessary to maintain these offices, at least with their present force, when the currency law becomes fully effective under the new organization.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know about that. I asked the Secretary of the Treasury that question myself. When the reserve board shall have organized and the new banking system shall have been installed, if he finds it is necessary to increase his force in the subtreasuries by reason of the new law, he can then come to Congress with some definite suggestion as to what he needs and why.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the new law what possible work can the subtreasuries do? The money is going to be in the hands of the new banks; deposits are made to the new banks; collections will be made in that way, and payments will be made through checks on the banks. What earthly thing is there left for the subtreasuries to do unless simply to draw salaries?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman will have to wait until the law is in operation to get an answer to that question, because I can not answer it.

Mr. MANN. I do not criticize the making of the appropriation, but I certainly do criticize the answer of the Treasury Department that they do not know, because anyone who has read the new law knows that under the new law the reserve banks will do the business and the subtreasuries will have nothing left to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Suppose the subtreasury is in a city where there is no bank, for instance, New Orleans, where, I believe, they did not get a bank?

Mr. MANN. There may be an excuse to help out New Orleans and Cincinnati, maybe, but of course they never have discovered before the need of a subtreasury at Atlanta or Dallas.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, they have not needed one.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is optional with the Treasury Department to put money in a reserve bank.

Mr. MANN. They have branch reserve banks in all of those cities.

Mr. COX. Under the new currency law they still have the right to make national banks depositaries if the Secretary of the Treasury wants it. If I recall the new currency law aright, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to deposit public funds in national banks.

Mr. MANN. In a reserve bank.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask for five minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, most of my time was consumed by other gentlemen, and I had not concluded what I desire to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Go ahead; I desire the gentleman to have that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. I just wanted to take up enough of the gentleman's time to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] when he said that the Secretary of the Treasury could deposit Government moneys only in reserve banks. Under the law passed he can deposit them in any national bank anywhere in the United States that is now a United States depositary.

Mr. MONDELL. That is under the new currency law?

Mr. ADAIR. That is under the new currency law; and he still has the right to deposit Government funds in any national bank anywhere in the United States that is a Government depository.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not clear on that point; but it was evidently intended by the currency act that the Government funds should be deposited in reserve banks.

Mr. ADAIR. That is true that such a provision was made in the bill as it passed the House, but it was amended in the Senate so as to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury could deposit Government funds in any of the banks now a depositary.

Mr. COOPER. Does that grant the right to create new depositaries?

Mr. ADAIR. No; there is nothing about creating new depositaries, but I take it he has still the power.

Mr. PLATT. That has nothing to do with the subtreasuries, however, and gives no excuse for continuing this appropriation.

Mr. ADAIR. I know that does not apply to them.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, as I understand your contention is the new act practically abolishes the sub treasuries. There is nothing in the new act that requires that. One thing in the new act is an authorization permitting the reserve banks to receive Government deposits. Then there is another provision which says that when required by the Secretary of the Treasury they shall act as fiscal agents. Then there is another provision that nothing in the act shall be construed to deny the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to use member banks as depositaries.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize the fact that there is nothing in the currency law that specifically provides that these subtreasuries shall cease to perform these functions, but, as a matter of fact, when the law is fully operative and has a complete organization there will be nothing for these subtreasuries to do.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman permit again?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. The views expressed by Mr. Baker, of the Treasury Department, and Mr. Fort led me to call the attention of the committee to the matter. Mr. Baker says that the law leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury; that the Secretary of the Treasury may do this and he may do that and he may do the other thing. Clearly, if the new currency law is to operate, he must do what the law contemplates, and if he does, then the subtreasuries will be as useless as a fifth wheel on a wagon, and there is no reason why these appropriations should be continued. I realize the situation. We do not know when the new currency law is to become completely operative, and therefore I make no suggestion at this time to cut out these items, but, clearly, if the law does go into operation in any reasonable length of time, these appropriations will not be needed in anything like the sum provided in this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield right there? This question came up when the currency bill was being considered, and the provisions in it were made explicit, so as to avoid the very contention that has been raised now. The act does leave it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury, because those who investigated it differed with the view that the gentleman holds and thought it might be necessary to maintain these subtreasuries, and it is not necessary for a practical operation of these regional reserve banks that they should take the places of the subtreasuries. That is not the object of these regional banks. That is not the primary function of them.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says he thinks it necessary to continue. The gentleman evidently has information that the balance of the House is not possessed of.

Mr. WINGO. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not intend to convey the impression that I was authorized to say that. But from the information I have, I take it——

Mr. MONDELL. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, these offices will become superfluous as soon as the currency act is in complete operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $3,000; assistant cashier, $2,000; vault clerk, $2,250; paying teller, $2,500; assorting teller, $2,000; redemption teller, $2,000; change teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; bookkeepers—2 at $1,500 each; clerks—1, $1,750; 1, $1,600; 9 at $1,500 each; 14 at $1,200 each; hall man, $1,100; messenger, $840; 3 watchmen, at $720 each; janitor, $720; 8 money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $71,420.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that simply for the purpose of saying that it is the expectation that the new currency law will supersede the subtreasury system, and the leaving of these appropriations for subtreasuries in here at the full amount would seem to indicate that the Secretary of the Treasury does not believe that the law can go into effect for a year, or else he is afraid of it—one or the other. There certainly ought to be some provision in these subtreasury items for the lowering of the expenses during the year if the law is going into effect some time within the next fiscal year. It certainly ought to go into effect within that time.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman favor abolishing the subtreasuries?

Mr. PLATT. I certainly do. I think they are useless institutions and never ought to have been established.

Mr. WINGO. Will you state why, under the Federal reserve act, the subtreasuries will be useless?

Mr. PLATT. The subtreasury system is for the purpose of locking up public funds that ought to be where the people can make use of them. That is all it has ever been good for.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman understand the primary purposes of the Federal reserve is to take care of the public money, or is it simply an incident to their operation?

Mr. PLATT. It is one of the primary purposes of the Federal reserve banks to take this money that has been locked up in the subtreasuries and put it in circulation.

Mr. WINGO. That viewpoint is interesting.

Mr. PLATT. That is one of the primary purposes of the new system.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Philadelphia: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,250; coin teller, $2,000; vault clerk, $1,900; bookkeeper, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,800; receiving teller, $1,700; redemption teller, $1,600; clerks—1, $1,600; 2 at $1,500 each; 2 at $1,400 each; 1, $1,300; 5 at $1,200 each; 1, $1,000; chief guard, $1,100; 5 counters, at $900 each; 6 watchmen, at $720 each; 4 money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $49,770.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do not know whether the committee itself went into these reductions in the subtreasuries or whether they simply took the action of the Treasury Department. Upon what hypothesis they can be explained is beyond me. Here is Philadelphia, the paragraph we have just read, where the appropriation last year was $52,070, and this year it is carried at $49,770—a reduction, I believe, of less than $2,500 in that office. The next item is St. Louis, where the reduction is from $44,660 to $33,860. Now, the theory of these reductions is that by transferring from the subtreasury to Washington, the change from the subtreasury to Washington, and changing the regulations, and possibly the law, the Treasury itself here does a great deal of work that heretofore was done at the subtreasury, and that additional work here is being cared for by men transferred from the subtreasury. But how does that explain a reduction of $2,500 at Philadelphia and over $11,000 at St. Louis, when the difference in the work done must be the same uniformly throughout the country? I may be mistaken, but I suppose they do not have a different regulation for Philadelphia than they do for St. Louis.

I notice in New York a reduction of nearly $35,000. In Boston it is less than $4,000, or about $4,000. Now, these people were not complaining before. If the force in the different subtreasuries heretofore was properly balanced, then the transfers which have been made do not leave them properly balanced now. Philadelphia is the third largest subtreasury, I believe, and the only reduction in the Philadelphia office consists of two places—one a clerk and one a counter. In all the other places—except Boston, possibly, and there is not much reduction there—there is quite a reduction in the force on the theory that the amount of work is reduced. I do not know whether it was this administration that made the change or not—it may have been a former administration—but I would like to know whether these changes were made on the basis of the difference in work to be done or whether somebody "worked" the administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will take but a minute to answer that question. The number of people transferred to Washington from the subtreasuries is the number necessary to take care of the work taken out of the respective subtreasuries.

The gentleman calls particular attention to the difference between St. Louis and Philadelphia. In Philadelphia they retained four laundry machines for washing money. They must have an adequate force to handle that money. In St. Louis we do not keep any washing machines. We take the statement of the Treasury Department that they had taken from the various subtreasuries and transferred to Washington the force that they believed would properly be taken out, considering the work that was taken away from the subtreasuries.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the committee did not make any investigation themselves of this matter, but simply took the statement of the Treasury Department. I should say it was quite an indictment of the Treasury Department, either as to what they have done now or what they did before.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that there is going to be a night session to-night.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have an agreement with a gentleman interested in assay offices to permit him to make a motion to restore certain items to the bill. I am willing to make a motion to rise now, with the understanding that to-morrow, or on the first day the committee is in session, we shall return to that place in the bill and allow our friend to make a motion to restore the assay offices that were stricken out.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I suggest that we continue on until we reach the assay offices, on page 63, which appear only two pages ahead of the paragraph last read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, who also acts as vault clerk, $3,000; bookkeeper,

$2,000; paying teller, $2,400; receiving teller, $2,000; clerks—one $2,000, two at $1,800 each, one $1,500, one $1,400, one $900; messenger, $840; four watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $27,020.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind Members that there is a session to-night from 8 o'clock until 11, and designates Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. WALTERS, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DOREMUS, for one week, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15418) authorizing Maj. Clyde S. Ford, Medical Corps, to accept and wear the decoration tendered him by the Ottoman and Bulgarian Governments for services rendered in the Balkan Wars, and the same was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4544. An act to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Caribou National Forest Reserve.

RECESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentiary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman had not made that motion. What then?

The SPEAKER. If he had not made it, we would have gone on until 11 o'clock. Does the gentleman think that is a proper proceeding?

Mr. MANN. I think the order left it rather queer.

The SPEAKER. The order did leave it up in the air. That is the truth about it. Ordinarily, of course, the order provides that the recess shall begin at a certain time and continue until a given time. This is not a privileged motion, anyway. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] that the House recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MARIAN B. PATTERSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 296) for the relief of Marian B. Patterson.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Marian B. Patterson, of Shelby County, Tenn., the sum of $20,963, in full compensation for claims on account of the losses or reduction in salary and allowances for rent and clerk hire sustained by her late husband, Brig. Gen. R. F. Patterson, from January 1, 1898, to May 28, 1906, during which time he was United States consul general at Calcutta, India, through the method of settlement adopted by the United States Government in connection with the fluctuation in the value of the Indian rupee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can say anything to the gentleman which will cause him to withdraw his objection, but I wish he would reserve it until I can make a short statement.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. AUSTIN], who was taken ill this afternoon on the floor of the House and compelled to leave. He can not be here to-night, and he asked me to be here in his absence and to say that this lady, Mrs. Patterson, who is the beneficiary of this claim, really needs this money very much. She is in debt. This claim has been pending for a great many years. She needs the money very badly, and if it is ever to be paid by the Government it ought to be paid now. It is indorsed by former Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh and also by Mr. Huntington Wilson, who was the First Assistant Secretary of State, both of whom have pronounced it a just and valid claim, and also by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported once adversely by the Committee on Claims in a prior Congress, and is bitterly opposed by the present Treasury Department. It is a case exactly like this: Suppose Members of the House were paid their salaries in silver dollars, the question might arise as to whether they should pay these silver dollars—$625 per month—upon the basis of the commercial value of the silver, which is dollar for dollar, or the bullion value, which is about 49 cents per dollar. These people claim they should be paid for their services in the bullion value of the Indian currency, in silver, and have the benefit of the commercial value. I utterly disagree with that idea. I am willing to undertake to convince the House whenever the matter comes before the House that there is absolutely no justice whatever in the claim. I recently had a report upon it from the Treasury Department, which the committee did not obtain or ask for, I believe.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to say to my distinguished friend that all I know about the claim is what I gained by reading the report, but I understand that the consul, Mr. Patterson, was required to settle with the Government on one basis and forced to take his salary on another basis, which resulted in his being deprived of about $20,000 in the course of the 10 or 12 years he was there in Calcutta as consul.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that for many years these consuls were permitted to take invoice fees, and so forth, on the bullion value of the silver, which was considerably less than the commercial value, and they were paid their salaries in the bullion value of the silver, which was considerably less than the commercial value.

The money was worth a great deal more to them than the amount that was charged against them. Complaint was made by the people who paid in this money for invoices, and so forth, that they were required to pay in the bullion value, whereas the proper method of paying was the commercial value of the silver. The department changed the regulations and provided they should be paid in commercial value, just as people here pay silver, dollar for dollar, and do not pay two dollars for the services of one dollar. Of course this consul general, when he was paid his salary in the commercial value of the silver, did not get as much out of it as he would have obtained if he had been paid in the bullion value of the silver. If he had been paid over here, probably that is all it would have been worth; but he was paid in Calcutta, and paid it out there. I do not see any justice in allowing a consul anywhere in the world to receive money at a much less rate than its value for services.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why was it that the Government settled with his clerk, who was drawing, I think, $800 per year, upon the basis desired by Mrs. Patterson and declined to settle with the consul upon that basis?

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that the Government did that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I get my information from the report, which makes that statement, or, rather, from the letter of Secretary MacVeagh.

Mr. MANN. Formerly these people were paid in bullion value. The bullion value was about 20 cents and the commercial value was 30 to 32 cents, on the silver basis. There is no justice that I can see in giving them the profit between the bullion value and the commercial value.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. COX. I do not know much about this case, except I had several interviews with a gentleman who was working in the Treasury Department when this came up, who had something to do with it for old lady Patterson. I do not know Mrs. Patterson at all. I have never talked with her, but I have talked frequently with this gentleman, and this man who figured it out in the Treasury Department told me——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means this man who figured it out for Mrs. Patterson, for the Committee on Claims after he left the Treasury Department.

Mr. COX. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. MANN. That is different. He did not figure it out for the Treasury Department.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman to say he has a letter or some report of the Secretary of the Treasury that the committee has not got. I am not going to ask for it——

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad to show it to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I wish the gentleman would read it.

Mr. MANN. I have not got it here; it is downstairs in my room.

Mr. COX. As I recall the gentleman's story to me, it was that the controversy between Patterson and his Government came up by way of fluctuation of the value of silver bullion as quoted in the markets of the world—for instance, in Calcutta, in London, and New York—and that is what brought about the difference, and that he was compelled to settle on one basis and that later on the Government receded from its position and admitted it was in error, and as the gentleman told me, while he doubted very much that the old lady had a claim for the full amount, but as he figured out, as I understood him, and he so convinced former Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh that she had a meritorious claim of some $2,000, brought about by the fluctuation in the market value of silver bullion in Calcutta, London, and the United States. Is there anything in that?

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, that gentleman, after he left the Treasury Department, did some figuring for Mrs. Patterson, and attempted to figure out the Government owed her about $2,000, and this bill, by the way, is for $20,000; but here is the fact: The Indian rupee is worth about 20 cents in bullion value. In commercial value the rupee is from 30 to 32 cents. There was a slight fluctuation, and every quarter the Treasurer or the Director of the Mint, one of the Government officials, fixed the value of the Indian rupee. There may be a slight fluctuation from day to day or from week to week, no more than there is in the bullion value of our silver. Now, formerly those people were paid in the bullion value.

If anybody went to the consul general's office and got services, they were charged in the bullion value of rupees, so that they had to pay a good deal more for those services than they were worth or according to the commercial value of the rupee. There was a complaint made, and a very proper complaint made. This is not the only case where such a situation arose, and the Government made a regulation providing that the commercial value should be fixed quarterly by the Government of the United States, and that these officials should receive their fees in the commercial value of the silver and account for it. Now, when they collected a considerable sum of money which was much above their salary, the balance they remitted to the United States. Of course, when they took the rupees to the bank, they got the benefit of the commercial value of 32 cents, and got a draft and remitted it to the United States. If they could collect the bullion value and remit the commercial value, they would get 12 cents on each rupee. That probably would not have been allowed, but the consul general or consuls took their salaries out of the money which they collected. Formerly they took it at the bullion value, so that they received a good deal more for salaries than they were really entitled to.

The Government made the regulation that they should take it out in the commercial value just exactly as though in the United States. If a consul here from some other country was paid $5,000 a year in silver money he would be paid in silver money on the basis of dollar for dollar, not on the basis of 49 cents on the dollar. He would be paid 5,000 silver dollars and not 10,000 silver dollars for a $5,000 salary. That is the whole thing in this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield? I am not thoroughly informed on this subject myself. Is it not true that all the moneys paid by the merchants on account of merchandise were paid to the consul, Gen. Patterson? And also is it not true that he paid his clerks and employees in the bullion value; and that later, when he came to settle with the Government, he was charged with the shortage that was brought about by reason of all these transactions, thereby letting the burden fall upon him of the total amount that would grow out, for instance, of the payment of clerks? He collects on the bullion value, pays the clerks on the bullion value, and years after is compelled to settle on the commercial value.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that to be the case at all. He was directed by the State Department to collect on the basis of the commercial value and to account on the basis of the commercial value. It is quite possible that during one quarter, when the new regulation went into effect, he may have paid out to his clerks a portion of the quarter's salary on the bullion value for a month or two, but that is all that would be possible, unless he violated the Treasury regulation, and I do not understand that to be the case at all. He was there for a number of years. This regulation went into effect shortly after he assumed the office, and he would have received more money if he could have taken his salary in rupees at the value of 20 cents each, the bullion value, rather than in the commercial value, 32 cents, which they were worth at the bank and in trade.

Mr. SCOTT. But is it not a fact that Gen. Patterson's shortage, so called, was not known or reported to him until after he had returned to America a number of years and after the majority of these transactions had expired?

Mr. MANN. That is not the fact. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that there is a difference of opinion in respect to the bill, and it will have to go over. Inasmuch as the matter has been discussed as much as it has, I feel that I ought to say that when this claim was first presented to the committee, when the bill was first introduced, I was prejudiced against it. I did not think it had any basis at all. But I made a careful examination of the facts, and I believe the Government owes this lady a considerable sum of money. And when the time comes to discuss the matter fully I hope to be able to convince the House of that fact. But I think we might as well pass on now.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman were able to convince the officers of the Government who are wholly disinterested in this proposition.

Mr. POU. Well, I will say to the gentleman that this lady has had a hard time in explaining this matter, because it is rather intricate. I took occasion to look into it carefully; but I do not care to take up the time of the House to-night, because we are anxious to get through this calendar here and eliminate the bills which can be passed by unanimous consent. But I will say to the gentleman that the result of this whole matter has been nothing less than a tragedy. When this woman's husband came back to this country but for the assistance of a very distinguished and philanthropic friend he would have had great trouble and would have suffered in a manner very different from having his money withheld.

Mr. MANN. I am very much afraid it was sympathy and philanthropy that got the committee to report the bill.

Mr. POU. There is absolutely no sympathy. I will say to my friend from Illinois that nothing in the world but a careful and, I hope, a loyal-like, impartial investigation forced me to the conclusion that the Government owes this woman this money. I would not have said this much but for the fact that we have discussed the matter in this preliminary sort of way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object for a moment.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state that I had this matter under investigation. I took it up with the department and the officials of the Government and made the statement that I was entirely without prejudice and wanted to get at just the facts and the honest conditions in order to do the right thing in voting on this measure.

But the letter indicates and tells exactly what the department has to say about it, and I could not make it plainer than to make the statement that was just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and that is, that at the end of the year, instead of accepting $7,500, we would ask the Government to pay us the difference between the commercial and bullion value of our salaries. For two or three months, at the beginning of Mr. Patterson's service, the Indian rupee was not on the standard, but I think it was only two or three months after the general took his position until it was just as much standardized as the sovereign or the pound, and was based on English money, and was just as much commercial as the English money itself was. And when the money received for the receipts of that office, mind you, was taken over to the bank, a draft was purchased and remitted to the Government of the United States, the Government of the United States giving full credit for the draft. Consequently, I could not see any reason for this claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CHARLES A. DAVIDSON AND CHARLES M. CAMPBELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3041) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Charles A. Davidson and Charles M. Campbell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750 to Charles A. Davidson, and the sum of $750 to Charles M. Campbell, late clerks of United States courts in Indian Territory, in pursuance of the findings of fact reported to the United States Senate by the Court of Claims in the cases of Charles A. Davidson and Charles M. Campbell against the United States, No. 14046, congressional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withhold his objection for a moment, until I can say a word in explanation.

Mr. MANN. I will withhold my objection long enough to say this: That if the gentleman wants to get a unanimous report on this bill he will have to get the favorable report and recommendation from the Department of Justice.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that the Court of Claims sent back its findings, with the amount that these gentlemen paid in under protest, and which they are unable to recover.

The facts are that in 1900 we had three divisions of the United States court in the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory. Mr. Fannon, Mr. Davidson, and Mr. Campbell were clerks of those United States courts in the Indian Territory. They were getting a salary, and retained for clerk hire a thousand dollars annually. Mr. Fannon and Mr. Davidson and Mr. Campbell insisted that they had the right to retain this $750, which ran, according to my recollection, from May 31, 1900, until March 2, 1901. The department insisted that they should pay it into the Treasury. Mr. Campbell and Mr. Davidson paid the amount of $750 into the Treasury, while Mr. Fannon refused to do so.

The matter was taken to court, and the court decided that Mr. Davidson and Mr. Campbell were entitled to the amount of $750, and then Mr. Davidson and Mr. Campbell came to Congress. Their bill was introduced and referred to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims made its usual finding on the questions submitted to it, and found the same state of facts that the United States court had found. Thereupon the pending bill was introduced, and I was in hopes that it would go through. A bill similar to this passed the Senate at one time, and there was a report from the Senate committee, and the Committee on Claims of the House adopted that report.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct about it, except that the Court of Claims does not make a finding about the law in these cases at all or about the loss to the Government.

Here was a case where the Department of Justice required these clerks to pay these fees over to the Government, and without ever asking the Department of Justice for the reasons which actuated it, and without asking it whether it had reasons why this money should be repaid under this bill, you come here and get a report from the Committee on Claims to pay it. I think we are entitled in the House, before we pass such a bill, to know the reasons which actuated the Department of Justice; and a bill like this ought to be referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion upon the subject before it is acted upon favorably, in justice to the Members of the House.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that I tried to convey as plainly as I could the fact that the Court of Claims does not render any judgment on this character of cases, as the gentleman is aware; but the court showed the law under which they were acting, and the court makes a finding of facts. The Department of Justice raised no objection in the Court of Claims to the finding of facts or to the facts submitted to the Court of Claims. This is a case where the men have been out of their money since 1900. They have taken a circuitous route to recover it. Mr. Fannon was wise enough not to accept or obey the dictatorial orders of the clerks in the department, while these other men, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Davidson, are out their money because they did not want to get into a lawsuit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this session of the House to-night was set apart purely for the purpose of going through this calendar by unanimous consent, and hereafter I am going to insist on the regular order. I think, in the interest of everybody, that ought to be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

W. W. BLOOD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1515) for the relief of W. W. Blood.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to W. W. Blood, of Greenville, Plumas County, Cal., the sum of $439.09, in full payment for all work and labor done and performed by him for the Government of the United States, or its official representatives, at the Indian school near Greenville, Indian Valley, Plumas County, Cal., during the year 1907.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PETE JELOVAC.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13153) for the relief of Pete Jelovac.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF MOSES M. BANE.

The next bill in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7553) for the relief of the estate of Moses M. Bane.

The bill was read as follows:

Bane, deceased, who was receiver of public moneys for the Territory of Utah, and paid office rent at Salt Lake City for the years 1877 and 1878 and for the first quarter of the years 1878 and 1879, the sum of $1,080, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the said sum for office rent having been advanced by the officer out of his private means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ELIZABETH MUHLEMAN ET AL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12191) for the relief of Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for the death of said Samuel A. Muhleman on February 14, 1898, caused by injury received on the 9th day of June, 1893, while employed as a clerk in the Record and Pension Office, War Department, while located in Ford's Theater at the time of its collapse.

With the following committee amendment:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "and the heirs at law."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

MARY E. GOODLEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8803) for the relief of Mary E. Goodley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. Goodley, mother of William Goodley, late cranesman, employed under the direction of the Isthmian Canal Commission, a commission acting under the authority of the United States of America, the sum of $—— to compensate her for the death of her son, the said William Goodley, in the service of the Government of the United States, brought about by his being killed by an explosion while in the discharge of his duty in and about the Panama Canal.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Mary E. Goodley, mother of William Goodley, the sum of $1,000, to compensate her for the death of her son, the said William Goodley, who was killed on October 8, 1908, while in the discharge of his duty as a cranesman on the Panama Canal in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire how the committee arrived at this amount? It seems to me that it is entirely too small.

Mr. POU. I will say to my friend from Louisiana that $1,000 is the smallest amount that the committee have agreed to report in a case where a person is killed.

Mr. ELDER. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I had a somewhat similar case. I really think that if there is any liability on the part of the Government, $1,000 is entirely too small an amount. We set up the idea here that the public-service corporations of the country ought to pay a larger amount, and so they justly ought. Why should this rich Government, liberal as it is on a great many other matters, pay only the insignificant sum of $1,000? I merely wanted to know if that was the usual amount, and why we should pay only that amount in the case of the death of a boy like this. If he was of any account at all, I do not believe there is a court of record or a court of last resort in this country but what would sustain a judgment of at least ten times the sum allowed here. I realize that no large amount will be granted, but it occurs to me that this is indeed too small a sum for this Government to pay, and that we should demand of others no more than the Government is expected to pay.

Mr. POU. Of course there is no liability on the part of the Government.

Mr. ELDER. I understand there is no legal liability, and that we have not the right to sue.

Mr. POU. The committee has been confronted with a good many difficulties, and perhaps it can not claim to be consistent in all cases.

Mr. ELDER. I do not want the chairman to understand that I am complaining of the committee; but because it is a gift is no reason why we should not do it in a full and fair amount. I interrupted because I wish to know why the Government in a case like this should not make it a free and full reparation, as would be demanded of a private individual.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. LAWRENCE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2662) for the relief of Andrew J. Lawrence.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Andrew J. Lawrence, of San Jose, Cal., out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, for injuries sustained by him while employed as a lineman for construction of military telegraph line for the Signal Corps of the United States Army between Valdez and Gulkana, Alaska, in the line of duty, on or about the 1st day of September, 1908.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

C. E. MOORE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3610) for the relief of C. E. Moore.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the accounts of C. E. Moore, late postmaster at Cherryvale, State of Kansas, to be credited with the sum of $130, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, being on account of the loss of $130 in postal funds lost by the failure of the Cherryvale National Bank, of Cherryvale, State of Kansas, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the late postmaster; and the said sum of $130 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry. The bill first proposes that he shall be credited with the sum of $130, and later it says that $130 is hereby appropriated. I recognize that it is a Senate bill. Where by law we provide that a certain credit shall be given to a man short in his accounts for any reason, is it necessary to appropriate the amount in addition to that? No money passes.

Mr. POU. I think not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PETE JELOVAC.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we recur to Calendar No. 73, a bill for the relief of Pete Jelovac; and I will suggest to the committee that if consent is granted I will ask that the bill be amended so as to substitute $1,460 for $5,000 provided in the original bill and the $2,500 suggested by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 73. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13153) for the relief of Pete Jelovac.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pete Jelovac the sum of $5,000, for injuries received while employed in the Gunnison Tunnel at River Portal, Colo., July 17, 1906, while employed by the Reclamation Service of the United States, $2,000 of said sum to be paid to the said Pete Jelovac upon the passage of this act, and the remainder of said sum to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each: Provided, That no sum of money due to or to become due to the said Pete Jelovac under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Pete Jelovac.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

In line 6 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500."

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman who introduced the bill I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be amended by striking out the figures $2,500 and inserting in lieu thereof $1,460.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The following additional committee amendment was read:

In line 9, page 1, strike out the following language: "Two thousand dollars of the said sum to be paid to the said Pete Jelovac upon the passage of this act and the remainder of said sum to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SEVERIN AND BERTHE L. EVENSEN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 135) for the relief of Severin and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Severin Evensen and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen, who was killed on the United States ship Neptune while employed in coaling the same at Melville, R. I., on the 18th of October, 1911, through an accident which occurred without negligence or misconduct of said Sigurd Evensen, the sum of $360.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. This was a seaman in the Navy, killed in line of duty?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is anyone entitled to a pension on account of that fact?

Mr. MONDELL. He was a civilian.

Mr. MANN. No; he was not. He was a seaman.

Mr. POU. That question was looked into by the committee, and the information we got was that nobody was entitled to a pension in this case.

Mr. MANN. Is not the dependent mother entitled to a pension? I see the committee recommend an increase in the amount of the Senate bill from $360 to $1,000. I would like to know if somebody is going to get a pension in addition to that? We are not in the habit, of course, of paying specific amounts for deaths in the Army and Navy. This is a death of a seaman in the Navy in regular line of duty. If some one is entitled to a pension on account of that, I can see no reason why, in addition to that, we should establish a precedent of paying a fixed amount to begin with.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that the mother would not be dependent. The husband is living, apparently.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that would depend on the facts.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the committee inquired of the Pension Office if either of these beneficiaries had a pensionable status, and the information we got was to the contrary; that no pension would be allowed. I am not familiar with the facts further than that, but we made inquiry on that very point, for the point was made that probably somebody would be entitled to a pension. We called up the Pension Office, as I say, and we were informed that neither one of these dependent parents had received a pension, and no application had been made, and that they were probably not entitled to it. It was for that reason that the committee agreed to increase the amount, as I recollect, from $360 to $1,000.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the figures "$360" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS B. M'CLINTIC.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 661) for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SAMUEL HENSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1171) for the relief of Samuel Henson.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL, DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1689) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from the appropriation pay of bailiffs, etc., United States courts, 1912, to Selah G. Blakeman, $192; and from the appropriation pay of bailiffs, etc., United States courts, 1913, to Selah G. Blakeman, $363; and to Timothy E. Hawley, $513, notwithstanding the fact that said payees also served and received compensation as field deputy United States marshals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. PENROSE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3305) directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to credit and settle an account of Maj. George H. Penrose.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, directed to credit and settle the suspended account of Maj. George H. Penrose, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, in the sum of $267.87, being the amount disbursed by him in August, September, October, and November, 1908, at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., to Albert W. Carlson and Bruno Buschek, employees of the United States, which account was disallowed by the Auditor for the War Department August 26, 1910, and by the Comptroller of the Treasury on the 27th day of January, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER GILMORE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8077) for the relief of Alexander Gilmore.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alexander Gilmore, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $72.61, and said sum is hereby appropriated in payment of his share of the balance found due his late brother, David N. Gilmore, late of Company K, Thirty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims a question. In 1911 we passed a limitation act upon the filing of these claims, providing that no claims should be allowed unless filed on or before December 31, 1912.

Is it the policy of the committee where Congress passed a law fixing a limit of time in which claims of a certain character may be filed, and these are old war claims practically, that just as soon as that time has expired to report special bills in behalf of everyone who has not complied with that limitation act?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend from Illinois that the best answer I could give to that question is that the committee would only feel constrained, I think, to do that where there were extraordinary circumstances surrounding the particular case.

Mr. MANN. Well, with that explanation I will not object; the amount is not very much.

Mr. POU. We are trying as nearly as we can, I will say to the gentleman, to discourage just such cases as he has described. I will also say, further, to the gentleman that the committee in cases where the applicant for congressional help has been persistent in following up bills here from time to time, that we are putting an end to that practice by making an adverse report.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me for saying it, I would like to say this: I have watched claims bills in the House for a good many years and quite a large number of claims bills have been reported from the Committee on Claims on the Private Calendar, but never in my recollection have there been so few bad bills reported on this calendar of same number as there are on this calendar [applause], and I compliment the committee on its work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUPRÉ). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the gentleman that the committee appreciates highly what the gentleman has said, because there is no man who is so diligent in preventing bad claims from going through this House as the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF PETER DEEL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3843) for the relief of the heirs of the late Peter Deel.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of the late Peter Deel, $167.47, for services rendered in carrying mail on route No. 7487, Mississippi, from January 1, 1861, to May 31, 1861.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and as far as I am concerned, I will not object later. This bill is of identically the same character as the first bill on the calendar, which the chairman of the Committee on Claims asked to have passed over. Why he did that I do not undertake to say. As far as I am concerned, I shall not object to the payment of this claim, although for a number of years I fought them; but Congress paid them, and I think there is quite a large amount yet to be paid; but at the same time if this bill is to pass, why should not the first bill on the calendar pass? It is one of the claims for carrying mails in the Civil War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois when the first bill which went over at my request was reached in the House some days ago we were hoping at that time to agree upon some consistent course in the committee with respect to all bills of that character, and it was for that reason that I asked that it be passed over. This second bill had escaped my attention and I was not observant of the fact that it was exactly similar to the first bill. The gentleman from Mississippi has insisted all along that the claim ought to be paid, and I think he is right; but the reason I asked that the first bill go over was because we were hoping to have an understanding between the members of the committee as to what we were going to do with claims of that character.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, there was something over a quarter of a million dollars of claims in the Post Office Department or the Treasury Department, where, probably, if one should be paid others should be paid without requiring the claimants to lay around or hunt around or beg around to get $50 or $150 allowed them.

Mr. POU. I think that is very true.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the policy of the committee is going to be, but certainly if there are two bills just alike, and we pass one and refuse to pass the other, it will look like unfair discrimination.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Go back and pass the other one. They are just alike.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

JAMES HARVEY DENNIS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11040) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James Harvey Dennis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANTRILL. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky objects and the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of expediting the consideration of these bills, I ask unanimous consent that when the Clerk reads the title of the bill opportunity be given for objection then. If anybody objects to the consideration of a bill, I do not see the necessity of taking up the time of the House by reading it in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that objection may be made immediately after the reading of the title of the bill reported. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM H. WILLIS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10205) for the relief of the estate of William H. Willis.

Willis, deceased, the sum of $36.57, in full settlement for transporting the United States mail in 1860 and 1861.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether the committee referred this bill to and received any reply from the Isthmian Canal Commission?

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the inquiry was made, and a report was made on it, but that the letter was lost. We intended to have a copy, and we asked the Isthmian Canal Commission to furnish us it, but it has not been received up to this time. It contained, I think, a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That is my recollection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I object. The bill will be reached soon on the calendar no doubt.

Mr. DIES. I did not know the letter from the Isthmian Canal Commission had been lost. A report was had from them—that is, a statement of the fact that he was injured in service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I would like to say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] turned those papers over to me. I am quite sure they went back with the other papers, but they do not appear now. I do not know what became of them, but there was such a report with the papers.

Mr. MANN. I think the bill ought to go over until we get them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Aufdemorte while employed in said subtreasury, as stated on page 5 of House Document No. 721, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and said claim is hereby remitted and satisfied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the bill, Mr. Speaker; also the right to object. This is a public bill, and has no place on the Private Calendar. The gentlemen who are interested in it ought to have it, at some proper time, referred to the Union Calendar. For the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois make a point of order or object?

Mr. MANN. I object now. I thought perhaps the gentlemen interested would want to look it up before they would take the time to have it considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me there is no question about the point of order. If the Chair is prepared to rule upon it, all right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WINGO). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This bill reads:

Repaying the amount of the bond surrendered by the surety—

For the appearance of the prisoner. I wonder if that is a common legal expression in Pennsylvania or elsewhere—

The amount of the bond surrendered by the surety.

I confess it is new to me. The accused died, but before learning of his death the surety paid the bond. I suppose the bill will get the money, but it is a queer legal expression.

Mr. MANN. Oh, let us pass it anyhow.

Mr. FOSTER. Let it go.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOWLER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. POU. Oh, yes; it was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I object.

PARKER S. ROUSE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of the legal representatives of Parker S. Rouse, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Parker S. Rouse, late station assistant in the service of the United States Geological Survey, having been drowned while performing his duty on the 24th day of August, 1906: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of Parker S. Rouse, deceased, the sum of $892, being the amount of salary and allowances for one year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 6 strike out the figures "892" and substitute in lieu thereof the figures "600"; in line 7 strike out the words "and allowances."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. When would it be in order to move to strike out the preamble, after the passage of the bill or now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order now.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman from North Carolina want the preamble in?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that the preamble be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the preamble be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. MURRAY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3920) for the relief of William E. Murray.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William E. Murray the sum of $720, and said sum of $720 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for personal injuries sustained by him without fault on his part and while in the discharge of his duties as a watchman in the Department of the Interior, as found by the Court of Claims, in findings of fact filed May 20, 1909, and printed in House Document No. 226, Sixty-first Congress, second session.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 13, after the word "session," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following:

"Provided, however, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said William E. Murray under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said William E. Murray."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE S. SHERMAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12166) for the relief of Jennie S. Sherman.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,000 to Jennie S. Sherman or her heirs, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to make said payment.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 5 strike out the figures "$11,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,500."

In line 8 after the word "payment," strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon, and add the following words:

"Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Jennie S. Sherman under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable processes whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Jennie S. Sherman."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for the payment to Jennie S. Sherman or her heirs. Is she living or dead?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. At the last report she was barely living.

Mr. MANN. And then you provide that no money due or to become due shall be liable to attachment levies or seizure, and that it shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Jennie S. Sherman. Suppose she is dead; can the heirs get the money under that provision?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I would think not. The committee was trying to keep the money from the attorneys, who might otherwise get it. I believe the objection is well taken.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to state that the subcommittee thought that it would be a good thing to put that in. She is the party injured, and we do not think it is necessary that anybody else should get the benefit of it.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman think that if the words "or heirs" were inserted in line 10, after the word "Sherman," that that would cover it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment, in line 10, by inserting, after the word "Sherman," the words "or heirs," and also in line 3, page 2, after the word "Sherman," the words "or heirs."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Sherman," insert the words "or heirs," and page 2, line 3, after the word "Sherman," insert the words "or heirs."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, ought not the title of the bill to be amended so as to incorporate the idea of the heirs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment?

Mr. FOWLER. I suggest that the title be amended to conform to the bill, and ask unanimous consent to that effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent that the title of the bill be amended to conform to the text of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman better suggest the amendment to the title.

Mr. FOWLER. After the word "Sherman," in the title of the bill, add the words "or her heirs."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the title of the bill be amended in the manner which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Sherman" in the title of the bill insert the words "or her heirs."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment to the title?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SANDY CRAWFORD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4008) for the relief of Sandy Crawford.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sandy Crawford, of Chicago, Ill., the sum of $20,000, as damages for personal injuries sustained by the said Crawford while employed upon the rivers and harbors improvements at Riverton, Ala. The injuries occurred in 1897 while Crawford was withdrawing a charge of dynamite which failed to explode, and in the premature explosion which followed both eyes were destroyed, totally incapacitating him for manual labor for the rest of his life, and the injuries were caused through no fault of his own, but solely through his following out and performing a proper act by direction of the person in charge of the work: Provided, however, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Sandy Crawford under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Sandy Crawford.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$20,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether it is the policy of the Committee on Claims to refer bills of this character to the department for a report? Here was a man who was in the river and harbor improvement service of the Government who claims to have been injured. I have no doubt that the claim is correct, yet ought not the bill be referred to the War Department for a report upon it? They must have some information. I find in the report a letter from the Judge Advocate General, and also one from a lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers, but these letters contain no facts. Did the committee have any information from the War Department as to the facts in the case?

Mr. METZ. Yes; it appears in the report.

Mr. MANN. Where?

Mr. METZ. On page 4 of the report there is a report from the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. METZ. And on page 5 there is another one.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. METZ. Then what does the gentleman call that correspondence?

Mr. MANN. I see this:

A copy of a report submitted to this office March 17, 1898, by the officer in local charge of the work on which Sandy Crawford was employed at the time the accident occurred is inclosed herewith.

But where is it? It is not here. That is not a report upon the bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we have been following the policy of referring every bill to the department of the Government which is supposed to have information about it. In some cases the information is very full. There are a few exceptional cases about which they have no information at all, and this happens to be one of them. Whatever information we could get appears in the report here, and this bill, as are all other bills of a similar character, was referred to the department with a request that we be furnished any information they might have. I understand the information that we got was that this data was all they had upon the subject.

Mr. METZ. And the fact that the man was hurt without any fault of his own, some 17 years ago; that he lost the sight of both of his eyes; that he began first as a water boy; and has had to take care of himself ever since.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but we do not get that report from the department.

Mr. METZ. The department verifies it.

Mr. MANN. Where?

Mr. METZ. It is not here, but the committee had it. It is not here in the report, as I see.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will say further that this man was not a regularly enlisted soldier.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. POU. He was an employee.

Mr. MANN. Yes; he was a civil employee; but they have a record of these things in general, and whether they have or not, we would like to know it if they have no record of that fact. Of course the report from the department is not printed in the report of the committee.

Mr. METZ. They do not deny any of the facts.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that in the case he just objected to a moment ago, the case of Thomas, the report was not in full. It merely stated that he was injured while serving as a carpenter upon the canal, and that is about all the report consisted of, as stated in the report of the subcommittee. In a case of that kind, if objection is made because the report is not full, I suggest there is nothing about which to make a report.

Mr. MANN. I am not making an objection because the report is not full.

Mr. METZ. May I say, further, that in getting these reports I find that the Government rarely takes the blame for anything. There is simply a report made that so-and-so is injured, and that is all.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I hope the gentleman does not misunderstand my position.

Mr. METZ. I do not.

Mr. MANN. I do not say that the committee should follow the report of the department, or that Congress should be bound by it; but where there is a department that has information upon the subject, I think we are entitled to the information that they have. We use our own judgment on whether their information is correct or whether we agree with their opinions.

Mr. METZ. The evidence shows the man was hurt, and, after 17 long years, he ought to get some relief.

Mr. MANN. He may have been hurt as a result of his own negligence. We are never in the habit of taking ex parte statements.

Mr. METZ. The record shows that he was not hurt as a result of his own negligence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SERAPIO ROMERO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6014) for the relief of Serapio Romero, late postmaster at Las Vegas, N. Mex.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Serapio Romero, late postmaster at Las Vegas, N. Mex., the sum of $1,106.98, with interest from August 1, 1885, to date of passage of this act, on account of money paid by him to the Post Office Department at that time.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of said bill after the enacting clause and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Serapio Romero, ex-postmaster at Las Vegas, N. Mex., the sum of $1,106.98, on account of money paid by him August 1, 1885, to the Post Office Department, this being the amount embezzled by the assistant postmaster, W. E. Miller."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. HOYT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 54) an act for the relief of George W. Hoyt.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of George W. Hoyt, postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., in the sum of $11,236, due to the United States on account of money-order funds embezzled by Joseph Kingman, late assistant postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., in the year 1911; and the sum of $11,236 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of this claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the figures "$11,236" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,917.50."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the figures "$11,256" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,917.50."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think these claims ought to be paid where the Navy Department causes damages by collision. I am very sorry that the Committee on Claims in this bill allows damages for the loss of services of the vessels. In a good many cases we have had in the past with respect to these bills, really admiralty cases, Congress, I think, whenever a vote was taken on the subject—and there have been votes taken a good many times—has refused to make any allowance, after paying the damage, for the loss of time. Of course, if we pay for the loss of time in one case we ought to pay it in the other cases. It is true if they could bring a claim in a court of admiralty they would be entitled to recover for that, but it is a good deal like the payment of interest. We consistently refuse to pay interest on those claims which are not collectible legal claims. I wish we could get the department to follow that practice. Apparently that is not possible.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Hodges, and C. C. Hodges for labor performed for the United States upon a written order of W. T. Wilkerson, colonel in the United States Army, commanding a post at Columbus, Tex., during the month of August, 1865.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not object. I examined that case, and it is a perfectly righteous one. Surely the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. Of course he will object.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understand this bill is to pay a certain amount to a man who was injured after he had received the maximum amount under the employees' compensation act.

Mr. POU. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not think that ought to go through by unanimous consent, and therefore I object.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to do so, but it will prevent several bills coming up to-night, and I will not withdraw my objection.

Glynn, to reimburse him for damages to his clothing and for hospital charges incurred as the result of assisting an inspector of the Department of Commerce and Labor in serving warrants of arrest on certain aliens.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH WALDO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the committee on their amendment to this bill, which provides for compensation on account of a man who lost his life by drowning. That is the language of the committee amendment. The original bill provides for compensation for the same man, who is stated to have lost his life "as a result of asphyxia, due to submersion by falling into the North River, N. Y." That bill was prepared by my friend from New York, Mr. CALDER, and bears marks which undoubtedly are the result of his college education. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 10, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we stand to-day in the presence of that great mystery of love, not that we have loved Thee but that Thou hast loved us, and hast given to us by revelation to know the length and breadth and height and depth of the love of God that passeth knowledge. We adore Thee for this expression of Thy care and of Thy love for men. We pray that the message that has not been exhausted in these 20 centuries, the message that comes from the tragedy of Calvary, may reach our hearts, may speak to us of higher things, and may lead us to the contemplation of that infinite purpose of God in human life. May our hearts be refined at the remembrance of that tragedy, and may our lives be brought into sweet subjection to the will of God in loving response to His infinite love for men. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

[Telegram.]

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 9, 1914.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Following statement of facts concerning remedial oil-land legislation telegraphed to-night to chairmen of Senate and House Committees on Public Lands. Will appreciate it if you will arrange to have copies of this statement furnished all members of these committees with such favorable comment as you can make consistently.

With reference to proposed remedial legislation concerning petroleum lands, we respectfully submit following facts among others. The great oil development of California was initiated and carried on under laws that were indefinite and unsuitable for the oil industry. Legitimate operators have been retarded by change of attitude of governmental departments, commencing over four years ago. Technical construction placed upon law has been remedied twice by acts of Congress. Attitude of departments has practically prevented securing patents for over four years, and now new technical constructions of the law, undoubtedly made with the best intentions, have resulted in financial embarrassment to many operators, in some instances to the point of bankruptcy, and placed a cloud upon property rights acquired under laws and customs followed for many years. At this time an enormous number of stockholders and fifty millions of investments are having a great injustice done them by these technical constructions. If the law were ever violated, a large proportion of the investment in the development of the industry is now in the hands of innocent purchasers from original locators. These interests find themselves now facing bankruptcy brought about by reasons of the attitude of the Government in bringing suits against operators, the marketers refusing to buy their oil on account of possible legal complications, and oil being removed from alternate sections by powerful corporations.

Congress is now asked to legislate affecting the future disposition of these lands, excepting those upon which patent has already been earned, and should at this time pass a bill to give immediate relief by providing for imposing a reasonable royalty of production until such time as titles can be adjudicated. Further, the leasing bill should be so amended that all occupants in good faith with substantial development be given a preferential right for lease under whatever terms and conditions may be provided in said law. Further, Congress should not include in said leasing bill provisions that would write into titles of these property interests conditions that would prevent cooperation of operators to market oil and make agreements for cooperative transportation, for the reason that such provisions while intended to prevent monopoly would fail of their purpose and make monopoly more complete.

Washington, April 9, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to thank you for your kind note of the 6th, and particularly for this suggestion, which I quote from it:

"I wish you would advise me fully just what work you plan to do, and what appropriations you have asked for, and what it is hoped to do with each one, and whether there is any fund available for this work at this time."

I appreciate so highly the opportunity of answering your kind suggestion that I do so at length. Let me first state the general conditions and then one by one discuss the situation in each of the various branches of our service concerned.

House Document No. 577, of which copy is inclosed, speaks for itself. I invite your attention to the lists of wrecks that therein appears, together with the sad and wholly needless loss of life arising from them. I regard it as of primary importance that these disasters be stopped. The department is ready and willing to so act as to stop them, but it can not do it for lack of funds and equipment. Congress has authorized the building of a great Alaskan railway. I heartily approve this, but it approaches a mockery to have this undertaken while access to that railway, even in its preliminary stages, is rendered dangerous to life and property for lack of safeguards which we know how to provide and are anxious to provide, but for which we lack means. Nay, it is the fact that we have less means to-day for safeguarding the Alaskan coast than heretofore, because the Government itself has been a sufferer through the loss in Alaskan waters of the lighthouse tender Armeria, which has never been replaced. We have been obliged to borrow for Alaska from another district a smaller tender—the Columbine—for temporary use until we can get a new Armeria. Meanwhile the authorization for the Armeria lags and no appropriation is made for it. I greatly fear that the failure to provide promptly vessels and funds for the urgent duty of surveying and protecting the commerce of our Northwest and Alaska will mean further loss of vessels and of lives, which can be prevented by prompt and thoughtful attention to the actual facts of the case.

If I am putting this to you too plainly, I must ask to be pardoned, in view of the fact that the situation is so real to me that I must have it on record that my part has been fully done in bringing the facts to the attention of those who have the power to provide the necessary means for doing the work.

Let me now take up each bureau in its turn.

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

I personally took up in Seattle a few days ago with the inspector in charge of lighthouse work in Alaska the work which is there to be done. We have an appropriation for a lighthouse and fog-signal station at Cape St. Elias which is to be given immediate care. It will probably, from the nature of the case, take two full seasons before this can be in operation. The work is one of great difficulty.

We have asked for $60,000 for additional aids to navigation on this coast—meaning buoys of various kinds and other minor lights and marks. The last appropriation for this purpose was $60,000, made on March 4, 1911. No funds for this purpose now exist. This fund of $60,000 is not only urgently required, but is required at once, and time is almost as important as money in the matter. If it be delayed until well on in the summer, I need hardly remind you how short the Alaskan season is and how impossible it will be to expend the money wisely ere the early winter comes on. Meanwhile lives and vessels are at stake. Therefore, say, $25,000 of this sum should be made immediately available.

Many requests have been received for aids to navigation. We have only means for replacing those that for one reason or another are damaged or destroyed. We can not add to the safety of the coast until we get this money. Aids should be established in the near future on the west coast of Prince of Wales Island, Peril Strait, Neval and Olga Straits, Sitka Harbor, and numerous other places which at present lack aids.

Depending upon the size and location, 30 or more lighted aids can be established for the sum recommended in addition to different buoys. No measure authorizing these aids has been passed in the House of Representatives, and in the absence of such authorization an appropriation for them is subject to a point of order in the House. Yet for lack of this authorization and appropriation it is the plain fact that human lives are at peril and commerce is endangered, while a hideous history of wrecks, in which the Government itself has been a sufferer, points the way to a certain future of disaster unless action is had and had quickly.

On May 20, 1912, the lighthouse tender Armeria was wrecked off Cape Hintchinbrook, Alaska. She was the largest in the Lighthouse

Service, and the only one regularly attached to the Alaska station. I need not tell you that the waters off the coast of Alaska, and particularly in those sections that lack modern lights, are very rough, and that a vessel is needed not only able to stay at sea in rough weather but to work in turbulent waters. The sum of $250,000 was authorized under the act of March 4, 1913, but upon studying the question I became satisfied that a vessel such as could be built for this sum would not be such as was required for the service. The great distances on the Alaskan coast require the carrying of fuel and cargo in unusual quantities, and the more so as the commerce increases and the normal demands grow. It is, in my judgment, much wiser to build a vessel now of sufficient size to cover the demands of the near future than it would be to build a vessel now too small for the known service only to call upon Congress a little bit later on for an additional ship. In other words, by adding $75,000 to the authorized cost of the new Armeria we may, for the total sum of $325,000, secure that for which a much larger sum would be required if the matter were treated in a different way. A measure authorizing the additional $75,000 has been approved by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and it is pending on the calendar in that House. Unless it is passed, an appropriation for the vessel is subject to the point of order, and under such conditions another year might pass with the consequent injury to the service and the continued risks to navigation. It should be remembered in this connection that it will take at least a year to build the vessel after she is authorized and funds provided, and that the distance she must necessarily go from her base of supplies is such as to require a ship of at least the very reasonable cost proposed because of the need for maximum cargo capacity. The sum of $325,000 for this ship is deemed entirely reasonable and an urgent necessity. Senate bill No. 2876, passed March 6, 1914, authorizes the increase of cost of this vessel to $325,000. It has not, however, been passed as yet in the House.

Your attention is further invited to the fact that there is no lighthouse depot in Alaska, and the work of the service there is crippled by the lack of such facilities. Temporary quarters are now rented at $325 per month, which rental would, of course, be stopped if the Government owned its own facilities, as it does elsewhere. Of course, we can not afford to install in rented quarters the most efficient facilities required for the Lighthouse Service, because a change in location might involve their whole or partial loss. We have in our estimates suggested (item 32) the wisdom of an allowance of $40,000 for the purchase of a site for a lighthouse depot and the necessary equipment.

An important improvement which directly affects the coast of Washington and indirectly assists Alaskan navigation is the light and fog-signal station for which we have estimated, to be located at or near Kellett Bluff, Henry Island, Wash. The sum we have asked is $40,000. It will greatly affect the greater part of the commerce between Puget Sound and Alaska. Vessels proceeding northward through Haro Strait in fog keep close to the west shore of San Juan Island, where the water is deep. They judge their position by the echo of their whistles from the precipitous shore of the island until they reach Mosquito Pass and Open Bay, where the uncertain currents are apt to cause them to lose their reckoning. Several large vessels have already been ashore in the vicinity of Kellett Bluff. There is a reservation of land for lighthouse purposes at this point, but no authorization as yet or appropriation for the station. Without discriminating against other lighthouse improvements urgently required elsewhere, it is the fact that the above should all of them be established with the least possible delay.

In our estimate for general expenses, Lighthouse Service, is included $20,000 for the installation of wireless telegraph on lighthouse tenders. This will equip five vessels. We have on the coasts of Oregon, Washington, and Alaska three ships—the Heather, the Manzanita, and the Columbine. There is now no possible means of reaching any of these ships except when they are actually in port. They can not, for example, be ordered to proceed to mark a certain danger or to rescue persons in peril because there is no means of communicating with them. In the interests of safety and efficiency it is, in my judgment, urgently required that this appropriation be approved. At any hour the absence of this radio apparatus, now common to all seagoing ships, is likely to cost far more than the total expense of installing it on all our ships. This installation, if permitted, would require an appropriation of $5,500 to provide for the salaries of the wireless operators, and this appears as a portion of our estimates.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

House Document No. 577 herewith states, on page 3, the needs of this service as regards Alaska and the Northwest. On two points special stress should be laid. The first is the new vessels intended for this service, three of which are solely for Alaska surveys and three smaller ones for wire-drag operations. I have personally examined within a fortnight the vessels of this survey used for Alaskan work. The McArthur is 38 years old; the Gedney is 39 years old. Neither vessel should be permitted in service longer than is required to build and equip their successors. They are old wooden ships, only kept in service by scrupulous care, with old-fashioned single-cylinder engines, not economical in service, and with accommodations which, to say the least, are poorer than those furnished other Government officers in marine service. Neither has any electricity, and consequently no wireless. Both of them are very slow, and valuable time is lost that would be spent upon work because of the time it takes to move about. In this day a ship that when pushed can sail 9 knots at most is not an efficient tool. These vessels work in the most dangerous spots of the most dangerous coast of the United States, yet they are not such as can keep to the sea in the rough waters which are usual. They are not such as have modern methods of assisting other vessels when in danger, and no communication is possible with them when in service for lack of wireless. They are not constructed according to the modern marine ideas. They are worn out and old-type tools that should be discarded, because it is no longer safe and economical to use them

Our estimate contemplates the construction of six new vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, three to be abou 75 feet long, intended to replace the expensive hired equipment now used, and to cost about $75,000, the other three to be of a larger type, of about 450 tons each, intended for Pacific coast work, to cost about $450,000 for the three.

The above is based upon my earnest belief that the work of surveying the coasts of Alaska and the Pacific Northwest calls for the best and most modern equipment in order that it may be done expeditiously, accurately, and safely.

This applies also to the next item, which is "Wire-drag apparatus."

This is a portion of the item in our estimates, "Field expenses, Pacific coast." The amount appropriated for this for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, was $165,000. We are asking for $225,000. Included in this is $30,000 for an additional wire-drag party to be employed on the coast of Alaska during the summer and along the Pacific coast during the winter. This item appears on page 3 of House Document No. 577.

A peculiarity of the Alaskan coast is the pinnacle rocks which rise abruptly in points from the bottom. Ordinary sounding apparatus, which is all we now have, will not find these. A case in point is the State of California, wrecked in Gambia Bay with a loss of 32 lives. She struck a pinnacle rock. The bay had been sounded and she had been in and out many times. The only means available for soundings, however, would not discover such a pinnacle. A wire-drag apparatus is a sure means of finding such rocks. One was requested several years ago for use in the Northwest, but was not granted. If it had been granted and if it had been put in use in Gambia Bay, the State of California would have been saved. It ought to be supplied and the money for it and for the force necessary to use it should be made available immediately. With such an apparatus the coast can be made safe. Without it, it would only be by accident that one of these pinnacles would be discovered.

Included in our estimates also is an item of $1,000 to be used for the purchase of plans for the above-named vessels.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

I am sure you will agree that the situation in which this service exists upon the Pacific coast is an absurd one. There is but one supervising district, centered at San Francisco, which covers the whole Pacific shores of California, Oregon, and Washington, with their inland waters, extending up the Columbia, Sacramento, and other rivers. It includes Hawaii and the entire coast of Alaska and the rivers thereof. It hardly needs to be said that one supervising inspector has need to be gifted with miraculous powers to give this service due attention. Were it not for the fact that we have an exceptional force, all of whom I have personally met, upon the Pacific coast this service would be more a name than a reality. Fortunately, the subordinate officers of the service are of an exceptional quality.

In our estimates for the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill we included one additional supervising inspector, to be established at Seattle, and provided for an increase of two local inspectors to assist him. I had the pleasure of stating the matter as clearly as I could to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. They have reported the bill without this provision. From my personal knowledge of the situation I can assure you this is urgently required. Our force upon the Pacific is now insufficient. It is necessary for such inspectors as we have to work excessive hours and under exceptional difficulties in order to meet the normal demands of commerce. There has been complaint that vessels are unduly delayed for the examinations required by law. If this is so, it can not now be avoided, though I have known of our inspectors starting out at 3 o'clock in the morning to avoid this difficulty.

The Pacific coast expects, and properly so, a large increase of its commerce from the Panama Canal and from the development of Alaska. There is, under these circumstances, no wisdom in adding to the already excessive burdens of an overworked force. I earnestly request that this matter may have your thoughtful attention.

To maintain, as at present, under one supervising inspector offices located as far apart as St. Michaels, Alaska, Los Angeles, Cal., and Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, is asking too much of human nature.

BUREAU OF FISHERIES.

This bureau has under its supervision the culture, maintenance, and care of the enormously valuable fisheries of the Pacific Northwest and of Alaska, the product of which, as you know, is many millions of dollars annually. It is to-day, and has long been, in the ridiculous position of having four inspectors to cover the entire water front of Alaska with no boats, so that in many instances they are obliged to call upon the parties they have to inspect for the means of transit whereby to do the inspecting, for the canneries are often placed where there are no regular means of transit.

We are asking the sum of $100,000 for the construction and purchase of vessels and boats in connection with the enforcement of the laws and regulations for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, including one seagoing vessel, one light-draft tug, and six rapid motor boats, to be immediately available and to be available until expended.

In this connection we are asking an increase in our force of inspectors of from four men to eight men for this service. In this same connection we are asking that the sum hitherto appropriated of $75,000, which includes all the traveling expenses of the fisheries inspectors in Alaska, together with the hire of boats and all other necessary expenses, including the protection of the seal fisheries and the furnishing of food, fuel, clothing, etc., to the natives of the Pribilof Islands, transportation of supplies, hire of vessels, etc., shall be increased to $110,000.

If you desire further information in detail, let me say that the Commissioner of Lighthouses, the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Supervising Inspector General of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, or the Commissioner of Fisheries will take great pleasure in conferring with you, and I am myself entirely at your disposal in that matter. Let me add also that the disbursing officer of the department, Mr. Johannes, is personally familiar with the details of our estimates and appropriations, and he will with pleasure wait upon you in this matter on request.

May I ask your attention to pages 11 and 17 of my annual report, a copy of which is herewith, in which the above matters are briefly treated; also to page 104, paragraph 3, and pages 118, 131, 138, and 139?

I feel very keenly the importance of a forward movement in the Pacific Northwest and in Alaska, and am anxious to contribute thereto. Preliminary to this I instructed the Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries to visit Oregon and Washington in the early part of March, and I have myself just returned from a brief visit there. The Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries is under instructions to make a thorough examination personally of matters relating to his service in Alaska during the coming summer, and I intend, if permitted, to visit the Northwest and Alaska myself next year.

The value of the fisheries of the Northwest, both those in streams and those in the deep-sea waters, are of such importance to our food supply, not alone on the Pacific coast but in our eastern cities, that they should be treated with a considerate hand by those who control national funds. I need not tell you how deeply these interests are concerned in our foreign trade. The adequate improvement and maintenance of the services I have discussed above would not by any thoughtful man be considered a matter of expense. It would be regarded solely as a wise investment, certain to render very large returns.

I am taking the liberty of sending a copy of this letter to your colleague, Senator POINDEXTER, and to the Senators from California and Oregon, for I wish them to know the views of this department toward the great and important part of our country they represent. I am also sending a copy of the letter to Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM, Delegate from Alaska, and to the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, whom I wish to be informed as fully as practicable in the matter.

I have no objection to your making this a portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD if it shall seem wise to you to do so.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

LOCATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 332, submitted by Mr. HITCHCOCK on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the organization committee of the Federal Reserve Board be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all briefs and written arguments made by each city applying to the organization committee for the location of a Federal reserve bank, together with the reasons relied upon by the organization committee in fixing the boundaries of the reserve districts and locating the reserve cities.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my resolution does not imply any attack upon my part upon the organization committee of the Federal Reserve Board. There have been a number of such attacks coming from communities in different parts of the country and attacking the motives of the members of the Federal Reserve Board. I desire to disclaim any disposition to join in such attacks.

The purpose of my resolution is to secure from the committee itself exact information, information that will show: First, the evidence laid before the committee by the various communities which asked for the location of reserve banks; second, the evidence which was laid before the committee by the 7,400 banks themselves, when they voted an expression of their wish as to what district they desired to be attached to; and, third, the reasons which moved the committee finally to divide the country into 12 districts, and locate the cities as they did.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire if the resolution as framed will call for the information which the Senator has just referred to? I should like to know what was the expression of preference of the various banks as to what regional bank they should be attached to. Is that information called for?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It may not be specifically called for, Mr. President, but I feel confident that the committee which asked the banks to vote will be very glad to send that information to the Senate in response to this resolution.

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will state that the Secretary of the Treasury told me this morning that he had a statement prepared, which he is going to send to the newspapers and which is going to be printed in the RECORD, that will give the reasons for the selection of the regional banks, and will also comply with the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], giving the respective votes of the various banks in the regional districts upon the reserve bank they desired for that district.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am obliged to the Senator, and I appreciate the desire of the board to give publicity to this matter through the press. We have a right to have it here. Only a few months ago——

Mr. JAMES. I will state to the Senator that the Secretary of the Treasury has requested a Senator to present it, and have it printed in the RECORD when it is given out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is all right enough; but I am asking for more, Mr. President. My resolution calls upon the board to submit to the Senate, as I have already stated, the arguments, data, and facts presented to the board by the 37 reserve cities which applied for the location of reserve banks, and also the votes which the 7,400 banks cast in expressing their preferences for reserve cities, and also the reason relied upon by the reserve board in making their final allotment.

I am not looking for a voluntary expression on the part of the reserve board. I am seeking to have the Senate given direct and certain information which it has a right to have, and which I have no doubt the reserve board will gladly present, in a form where it can be effective and helpful in this matter.

Mr. President, there is virtually only one question involved here. Did the organization committee violate the letter or spirit of the instructions that Congress gave it in the Federal reserve act? That is the only question there is. We have no right to investigate the motives of the board, and I am not disposed to do it. I believe the motives of the members are of the highest, and I have every respect for the individuals who constitute the board; I have perfect confidence in their good faith; but we have a right, as a branch of the legislative body, to inquire into the question whether or not the law was observed in letter and in spirit when the districts were laid out. The law authorized the committee to divide the country into districts, not more than 12 nor less than 8 in number. Under that discretion the committee did as it had a right to do, but, I think, unwisely; it divided the country into 12 districts. It went the limit, and in going the limit it added to its own difficulties enormously. It would have been comparatively easy to divide the country into 10 districts, and easier still to divide it into 8 districts. Each district which was added increased the difficulties which the board itself had to meet, reduced the strength of each district, and reduced the strength of the organization as a whole. Having done this, there was only one other thing for the board to do, and that was to comply with the definite and specific instructions of Congress in the allotment of districts.

Mr. President, these instructions are simple, and they are contained in a proviso which has specific emphasis and which reads as follows:

Provided, That the districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the convenience and customary course of business and shall not necessarily be coterminous with any State or States.

In other words, Mr. President, Congress intended in that proviso to direct a specific instruction to the board not to disturb the customary course of the banking business of this country, not to dislocate the banking customs of the country, and it intended specifically to direct the board to consult the convenience of the banks for the purpose of disturbing business as little as possible. The board evidently took this view of the case, because it asked the banks to vote to show what would be their convenience and what would be their custom of business.

I am not in a position, Mr. President, to speak for the whole country. I think in the main the division was as good as could have been made under the difficult circumstances of 12 districts, but I know there is some warrant for the loud protests which are coming up from various parts of the country, and I believe those protests are based upon a violation of the instructions of Congress in this respect.

Take, for instance, district No. 10, which I know personally, because I am a resident of Omaha, and Nebraska is placed in district No. 10. We have 241 national banks in the State of Nebraska. Under this instruction of Congress the board asked those banks to vote to show their preference for a reserve city. How many of those 241 banks in Nebraska voted for Kansas City? Exactly 8. In other words, less than 4 per cent of the national banks of Nebraska asked to have Kansas City made the reserve center. Yet the whole State is placed in the district of which Kansas City is made the reserve city. I consider this an outrage. The bankers of Nebraska consider it an outrage. They are indignant over it. It means the dislocation of all their customary course of business. Whereas the course of business in the Central Western States runs east and west, they are asked abruptly to change it to north and south. Whereas the banks of Nebraska keep their balances in Omaha or in Chicago, they are asked hereafter to put their balances in Kansas City. Of course there are a few who keep their balances in Kansas City now, but they are negligible.

Under those circumstances I consider that a gross injustice has been done to Nebraska; a direct injury has been inflicted on the State. I believe the law has been violated by the committee, and I want to know what the reasons were which induced the committee to put the whole State of Nebraska in the Kansas City district.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What other territory is embraced in the tenth district besides the State of Nebraska?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Mississippi asks what other territory is embraced within the Kansas City district, and the question is a very pertinent one. The Kansas City district includes all the State of Wyoming—and practically no banks in Wyoming do any business with Kansas City now because they have no direct railroad connection—the whole State of Nebraska, the whole State of Colorado, the whole State of Kansas, the northern half of Oklahoma, the northern third of New Mexico, and a small ribbon of territory in western Missouri.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I shall not make the inquiry I desire to propound in any spirit of hostility, but does the Senator from Nebraska expect, and do those who have brought this matter in here expect, that, as any possible result of all this, the selection can be changed? If it is thought that it can result in a change, then I think it is all well enough, perhaps, that we should take up the matter; but unless it does contemplate that in some way we can effectuate a change in this decision and get these matters corrected, I confess I can not see what we shall gain by bringing the matter into the Senate. I ask the question in all good faith.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a perfectly fair question, Mr. President, and I am perfectly willing to meet it. I have no doubt that when the full Federal Reserve Board is established the matter will be laid before it in a proper way. The law provides that there shall be a power of review in the Federal board after the organization committee has made its first tentative division of the country; but, in order that the matter may be brought before the full board, an effort is necessary to collect the facts, to combine the arguments, and to bring the pros and cons into the same volume. That is what I desire to do. I desire the organization committee to send to the Senate the arguments of the 37 cities, the votes of the 7,000 national banks, their first and second preferences, if they had them, and the reasons of the board for making the selections as they did make them. I desire the whole thing to be bound in a single volume and, possibly, discussed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that I know that information can not be published in a single volume. I saw the committee of my own State present their material, and it will take a couple of volumes—several volumes—to print what they have presented; but——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I do not mean by this that I object to the most thorough investigation of the material if it can be carefully preserved, because finally it should all be presented to the reserve board; the full reserve board should have the opportunity of seeing the material that the committee on organization had, and, of course, none of it ought to be lost. If it is to be sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency it should be put in such shape that it can be carefully preserved, of course, before it is so sent. I agree with that suggestion of the Senator; and finally it ought to go to the reserve board for their consideration.

Mr. CLAPP and Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I first yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. What I wanted to ask was whether under the provisions of law already in effect in the usual course of procedure would not all these matters naturally come before the final tribunal to pass upon this question? What I am inquiring is, what is gained by the Senate taking up this matter? It seems to me all the evidence will go up on the review, and no doubt the parties in interest will also, in addition, present perhaps new arguments, if they are authorized so to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And they will ask for a review.

Mr. CLAPP. And they will ask for a review.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not think that is a proper view to take of the case. The Senator from Minnesota may not know it, but the fact is that the banks of the country are afraid of these officials, and many of them will suffer, and many communities will suffer, rather than take aggressive action to overturn the preliminary considerations of the committee. If, however, the matter is brought here under the orders of the Senate and published, and an interest is shown in enforcing the letter and the spirit of the law in the body which passed the law, I think there will be much more likelihood of fair consideration being given to these suffering communities—and they are suffering—when the time comes for a final consideration. There is nothing extraordinary about this.

Mr. CLAPP. I have no question that communities will suffer; I believe this country will suffer in the long run. If I thought this agitation in the Senate would result in the correction of some of these mistakes—and that seems to be the view of the Senator from Nebraska—then, perhaps, we would be justified in discussion. We can not of our own force change that decision; but we may, perhaps, throw enough light on the matter so that the interest of the public will effectuate a change. I take it that is the view of the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is my purpose merely to gather information in an official and authoritative way——

Mr. CLAPP. That is all right.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To show the Federal Reserve Board that the Senate expects the letter and the spirit of the law to be observed.

I have shown the situation with respect to one district, the tenth district. There is no doubt in the world that the banks in that district, the banking business, and the commercial interests will be seriously damaged. I will admit that it would be quite possible and quite reasonable to attach a part of Nebraska to the Kansas City district, if Kansas City is to be a reserve center; I will admit that there are along the southern tier of Nebraska a number of towns which have a natural banking connection with Kansas City; but to attach the whole State to Kansas City when only 4 per cent of the banks there asked for it and the rest overwhelmingly asked to be connected with Omaha or Chicago is an obvious wrong. Congress did not intend to uproot the banking customs of this country; it intended to observe them.

I do not know so much about the complaint which comes from New Jersey, but I am told that in the northern part of New Jersey there are communities in the very shadow of New York City, whose banks belong to the New York City Clearing House, which have been told to cut off their relations with New York and to make their reserve deposits in Philadelphia. There may be a reason for that; I want to know what it is.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nebraska is speaking as if he had expected the new regional banks to accommodate the communities and banks surrounding them or tributary to them along natural business lines. Is that his belief? I ask that because there seems to have been a total abrogation of that idea in the location of the reserve banks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator goes too far in saying that. I think the reserve board had a very difficult task. I think it intended to comply with the evident desire of Congress when it asked the various banks to vote; but I do think that after they had taken the votes of the banks they disregarded them in order to carry out some preconceived notions, opinions, or convictions of their own. I want them to send to the Senate the reasons which moved them in so doing.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me to further interrupt him, what is his opinion as to the regional bank locations made in the great Northwest? It seems it will be left totally without its old banking connections if it is to be connected with the Kansas City regional bank. As to the State of Wyoming, there is not a hundredth part of the business, or perhaps a thousandth part of the business of Wyoming, banking or otherwise, which has natural connection with Kansas City.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is very true, and that is no doubt an injury to Wyoming. I realize that.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nebraska knows that the boundary of the district in which Wyoming has been placed, after it leaves Kansas City, goes across the line into Texas, and from there to San Francisco, and the whole territory northwest of there which does its business with Salt Lake, Denver, Omaha, and Chicago and other places is made tributary to some point with which it has no considerable business connections. I do not understand the reason why, and I should be glad to have some one explain why that entire northwestern territory is to be grouped with a locality very far away to the southeast, with which it has no business and no business connection. Certainly no bank in my State asked for that connection and no class of business asked for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, what the Senator from Wyoming has said suggests to me the propriety of reading an editorial which has just been published in the Kansas City Journal. It reveals the fact that Kansas City did not even claim and did not ask for some of the territory which was allotted to her and to her regional bank in the assignment made by the organization committee. The editorial is from the Kansas City Journal of a recent date and reads as follows:

> While Kansas City did not get the territory claimed as naturally tributary to this city, it was allowed new territory, in a rapidly growing part of the West and Southwest, which in time will help to develop here one of the big Government institutions of the country. For instance, the committeemen drew the dividing line in Missouri between Kansas City and St. Louis a little farther west than Kansas City expected, giving St. Louis the benefit of one or two tiers of counties north and south through the State. It also cut off the extreme western tier of counties in the State of Arkansas from Kansas City's claim, and cut Oklahoma and New Mexico about in half, sending the southern half to Dallas, Tex.

Here is the pertinent part of the editorial to which I desire to call attention:

> But Kansas City gets all of Nebraska, when it claimed but the southern half; all of Colorado, when it asked for but that part east of the Rockies; and the entire State of Wyoming is added also to this city's territory.

Thus showing that the bankers in Kansas City who made up their claims did not even expect to get a large part of the territory which was finally allotted to them. They knew that they had no banking connections with that territory, and they did not even desire to claim something which was so far from their reach.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I dare say that there was not a single individual—certainly not a single banker—in Wyoming who either indorsed Kansas City or had the slightest expectation that it was possible for the State of Wyoming to be annexed in that manner to Kansas City. It would have been better for the business interests of Wyoming to have had one of the Federal reserve banks located at Denver or Salt Lake City or in some city in the western part of the country where business lines are all harmonious, or at Omaha, which is in a direct line and receives a large portion of the business of the northwestern country, or at Chicago. We are farther off, in a business way, from Kansas City than we are from Boston, Philadelphia, or New York, and it would have been just as proper to make that entire section of country—in fact, it would have been more proper to make it tributary to the Boston reserve bank than to the Kansas City reserve bank. And I say this with no disrespect to Kansas City. We all admire the great growth and success of that enterprising city, but it is too far away or too remote for successful banking cooperation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I took no part in the effort to locate a regional reserve bank in Omaha. I had a number of motives for not doing so. I felt that it would not be proper to make a personal effort with the men charged with carrying out the law, and I made no such effort. I am therefore not greatly disappointed that a reserve bank was not located in Omaha; but I do feel outraged that my city and my State are directed to do business with a city with which they have no natural banking relations. I am frank to say that if the bankers of Omaha are compelled to place their reserves in the reserve bank at Kansas City, that money will be dead money. It will not lead to the doing of business with Kansas City. I have the word of the bankers in my State that business will still be done with Chicago, that drafts will be bought and sold on Chicago, and the great current of trade east and west with Chicago will continue. It will simply be a detriment and a damage to compel the banks of Nebraska to deposit their money out of their natural territory. So far as Nebraska is concerned, the reserve bank with which it must deal might as well be located at Dallas, Tex., as at Kansas City.

I am not going to speak of the other reserve districts as established. I understand some other districts also feel aggrieved. I have no particular sympathy with a city that is disappointed that it did not get a regional reserve bank, but I do feel a sympathy with a district or a community that is compelled to tear up and change the banking customs and, at great inconvenience, to disturb the business which has grown up. The law did not contemplate any such transaction. I therefore think that this information should be procured from the board, and there should be brought here not only the arguments of the various cities and the vote of all the banks but the reasons of the board for locating the districts as they did. I ask this with all respect for the members of the reserve board, for whose character and whose motives I have the highest respect.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state, in connection with what the Senator is stating, that the organization committee has provided that the upper peninsula of Michigan shall have its reserve bank at Minneapolis. When asked why that was done, they reported that the map showed that there was a railroad running from the upper peninsula to Minneapolis. The fact is that the whole upper peninsula of Michigan has direct connection with Chicago and does all of its banking business either through Chicago or Detroit. Its railroad connections with Chicago are ideal, and yet it is proposed to revolutionize the whole banking system by compelling a separation of Michigan into two parts and putting part of it in the Chicago district and the other part in the Minneapolis district, although both parts of Michigan as a whole do their whole banking business with the city of Chicago.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I imagine, Mr. President, that the board had a very serious difficulty there, and it made its work doubly hard when it started to establish 12 districts. It would have been an easy matter to establish 4 districts in the United States; it would have been comparatively easy to establish 8; but when the board undertook to establish 10 or 12, it undertook a task which was bound to lead to great dissatisfaction in all parts of the country, and it undertook to solve a problem in which the Senate should take an interest by calling for this information. I wish to renew my statement that I am not pressing the resolution in any spirit of antagonism to the board, but simply for the purpose of collating and bringing together all the information that can be obtained on the subject from an authoritative source.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield the floor, unless the Senator has some question to ask.

Mr. OLIVER. No, Mr. President; I desire to secure the floor in my own right. I think the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska or some similar resolution ought to pass. The Senate is entitled to all possible information concerning the faithfulness with which these three officials performed the duties prescribed by the act of Congress. As prefatory to what I shall say upon this subject I send to the desk, and ask the Secretary to read, a resolution which I have some thought of offering, although I do not wish to offer it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby directed to make an investigation as to the necessity of providing additional accommodations for the courts of the District of Columbia; and if, as a result of such investigation, the committee finds that a new courthouse is necessary, it shall report to the Senate as to the advisability of locating the same at Tennallytown or Chevy Chase Circle.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, there is just as much common sense in locating the courthouse of the District of Columbia at Chevy Chase Circle as there is in some of the locations of the regional reserve banks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Tennallytown would be a better place.

Mr. OLIVER. Tennallytown, the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, is a better place. I rather think it is. It is just as reasonable to expect the litigants and jurors and witnesses in the District of Columbia to go to the extreme borders of the District to transact legal business as it is to expect the bankers and merchants of Baltimore to do their banking at Richmond, or those of Jersey City to go directly against the course of business to Philadelphia, or those of Pittsburgh to go to Cleveland.

Mr. President, the great city in which I have my home is not complaining that a regional reserve bank was not located there. It is not necessary to the prosperity and the welfare of that community to have it. They were willing to be joined with any city where they could do business without going directly against nature. This board of yours, Senators on the other side, is engaged in the very interesting but rather difficult process of making water flow uphill. According to a table which I have here, the city of Pittsburgh is placed in a district containing two other large cities—Cincinnati and Cleveland—with Cleveland as the center. Of these three cities Cleveland has banks with a total capital and surplus of $41,635,000; Cincinnati's banks have a total capital and surplus of $31,813,000; Pittsburgh's banks have a total capital and surplus of $130,037,000—more than 50 per cent in excess of Cincinnati and Cleveland combined.

The referendum that was sent out by these officials to the banks in the district showed, as a result, that 842 banks favored Cincinnati, 840 favored Pittsburgh, and only 345 favored Cleveland. It must be remembered that this district, which has no homogeneity at all, included a large amount of territory away down in Kentucky with which neither Cleveland nor Pittsburgh has any business connection whatever, and which ought not to have been placed in the same district with either one of those cities. This Kentucky territory is naturally tributary to Cincinnati, and the banks therein would undoubtedly favor that city; otherwise the referendum would have been overwhelmingly in favor of Pittsburgh.

All I have to say is this: Pittsburgh did not expect to be one of the banking centers. It is not complaining that it was not so selected, but the Pittsburgh bankers, without exception, asked, if that city should not be designated as a center, that they might be placed in the same district with either New York or Philadelphia, with which they had natural and continuing business relations. That request was turned down, because without the assistance of the great banking capital of Pittsburgh you could not create a district with Cleveland as a center that would have the necessary capital; and for some unexplained reason it seemed necessary that Cleveland should be selected. I will state that even the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who lives in Cleveland, is reported in the newspapers—with how much truth I do not know—as having said that putting Pittsburgh in the same district with Cleveland was unreasonable.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I have said, and I think in fairness it should be said, that it is counter to the current of banking business. The natural affiliations of Pittsburgh would be with the East. The business relations between Pittsburgh and Cleveland are very close; but Pittsburgh naturally looks for banking accommodations to Philadelphia or New York.

Mr. OLIVER. That is as I understand it.

Mr. President, Pittsburgh is not complaining that it was not selected as one of the centers. It has nothing to say against Cleveland. It is a great city. It does complain, however, because it has not those relations with Cleveland which will make easy, so far as our city is concerned, the carrying out of the purposes of the act. It complains because its request to be put in with Philadelphia was turned down. In other words, it says to the reserve board:

> It was all very well to dissemble your love,
> But why did you kick me downstairs?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that there should be some feeling of disappointment among those who reside in cities that were not fortunate enough to have a Federal reserve bank located in their midst is very natural. Every city in the United States was afforded the fullest opportunity to present its claims. After mature consideration the board made its selections. It is perfectly natural that those who failed should be disappointed. It is equally natural that a certain percentage of those who failed should make an outcry. That happens in every contest in life. It is easy enough to object upon some specific ground which, taken by itself, disassociated from all other conditions, will make a prima facie case of wrong; but in settling the location of these banks the board had to take into consideration many conditions which, when all placed together, give a very different light than is reflected from simply one particular fact which is torn from its context and allowed to stand alone.

I undertake to say that if the Senate were to begin an independent investigation of the location of these banks it never would make a real investigation. There would be a lot of debating, there would be a lot of assertions, there would be a great amount of energy expended, and probably there would not be three men in the whole Senate able to take the time to study this problem in detail as the reserve-bank committee studied it.

In the first place one purpose the board had in view was the establishment at various points of financial centers. It was to minimize the tremendous centralization of capital and capitalistic power in a few places. It was to decentralize as far as possible, having in view at all times the justice and equities of the situation.

It may be said, and will be said, that the board should not interfere with natural conditions, but the centralization which has grown up in this country in two or three points is not a natural condition. It is a condition which has been forced by virtue of the power of the greater wealth at one point over the lesser wealth in another. It is the old story of power gathering to itself power, and as it increases in power forcing the yielding upon the part of weaker places.

So one problem confronting the board was this great problem of decentralization. If Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and all of the great cities of the East, with their enormous banking capital, had been put into a New York district, New York would have maintained under this new system the same supremacy to which she has now attained and to a large extent all of the evils sought to be corrected by this bill would have remained intact, and we would have added the force of law and the force of a governmental establishment to the present intolerable conditions.

Let me advert to one of the evils. It has been found upon examination that whereas the banks of Kansas City—I will use that city for illustration—gather large sums of money from the banks of the western and central portions of the country, they in turn loan back a very large percentage of that money, which goes into immediate circulation in the territory from which it was originally absorbed, and it remains there to transact the business of that section. I am not able at this moment to give exact figures, for I did not anticipate discussing the matter at this time—indeed, I did not know the resolution was pending—but I shall be prepared to give the figures in the near future. On the other hand, the city of New York, gathering in an enormously larger amount of money, had loaned back to the country only a very small percentage of it. If I were to speak now without the memoranda before me, I should say it is a fair statement that 85 per cent of all the country moneys deposited in Kansas City are loaned back to the country, while not to exceed 15 per cent of the moneys gathered into New York are loaned back again to the country.

It was to equalize conditions, to provide a means by which money would not all be congested in one overworked and overburdened financial center, that this bill was passed. That, at least, was one of its primary and fundamental reasons.

In carrying out that idea it was frequently necessary to turn back the tide of money that hitherto has been forced to New York by commercial and financial conditions, especially the latter, in order to create a bank of sufficient strength and power so that it could fulfill the functions contemplated by Congress when the bill was passed providing for the creation of the bank. Therefore it is not at all astonishing that some territory hitherto doing business with the great city of New York may find itself required to keep its reserves in some city farther west. Neither is it astonishing that some of the territory which hitherto has been tributary to the city of Chicago should be placed in a district cut off from Chicago. If that plan were not pursued, we should have enacted here a bill which would have resulted in the creation of one great center or head at New York, and a lesser head at Chicago, but still one completely overmastering in its power and in its resources, and the rest of the banks of the country would have been small, insignificant, subservient institutions. You would have had a sort of two-headed tadpole, a concern with two very large heads, an infinitesimal body, and an elongated tail; and you would have continued the same financial and industrial overlordship which has been established by New York and by Chicago, not because of natural advantages so much as through the power of accumulated capital to draw to itself.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order of business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Has the bill been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How does the bill get before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was made a special order by order of the Senate for 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Missouri requests me to ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside until he concludes his remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to hold that that can not be done. If the bill is laid aside it will go back to the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Then I can not accede to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Missouri desires to discuss the resolution on the bill, he can do so.

Mr. REED. I am very much interested in the bill the Senator from Montana has in charge, and I shall be glad to discuss it for a few moments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill first be read. The request has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. If this bill is not disposed of to-day, will it displace the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish simply to call the attention of the Chair to Rule X, on page 12:

> Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order—

I assume that that has been done and the bill has been made a special order—> and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day; and if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

I simply wanted to call the attention of the Chair to the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any difference between the rule and the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry? What do the last few words read by the Senator from North Dakota mean—the words "unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It means if there is no unfinished business and the special order is not disposed of at the conclusion of the day's business it will become the unfinished business for to-morrow. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as I have stated, I am greatly interested in the bill introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and I desire to say that I think it ought to have very serious consideration.

I was remarking a few moments ago, when I had the floor on the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, that the great purpose, or one of the great purposes, of the regional-bank act was to decentralize and do away with the artificial, abnormal advantages of two great cities in this country. That object has been constantly, I think, in the minds of the very able gentlemen who located the banks. It is, of course, impossible to locate a regional bank that will embrace all the business of any community, because every community does business with every other community of the United States.

If there were a regional bank located in the city my friend from Nebraska has the honor to reside in and to so ably represent, the fact would remain that the merchants of that city would be obliged then, as they are now, to do business with every other city, hamlet, or village of the United States. The major portion of their business may now be transacted in Chicago, but it is not true that they do not transact business in Kansas City, and great quantities of it. I call the Senator's attention to one fact. In the year 1912, you marketed of Nebraska hogs at the stockyards in Kansas City 230,988; in 1913 you marketed 137,067.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator seriously claim that that is a large business?

Mr. REED. It is a large business for Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My dear sir, there were marketed in South Omaha during that same year several million hogs.

Mr. REED. Yes, but notwithstanding the fact that you had stockyards there, notwithstanding the fact that you had packing houses there, you still marketed nearly a quarter of a million of your hogs in Kansas City. That I only speak of for the purpose of illustrating the fact that lines of trade cross and recross.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. REED. I have no doubt I can say to the Senator from Nebraska without any possible mistake that, on the other hand, we have sent from Missouri to the stockyards of Nebraska a very large amount of cattle, sheep, and hogs. But that only accentuates the fact that we are doing business with each other and that we are in the same general trade territory. I have not the figures before me because, as I stated, I had no notice that the resolution had been called up until some one advised me at my office and I came over here and found the Senator from Nebraska upon his feet, but I will undertake to say that there is a tremendous business of a general nature transacted between the people of Nebraska and the people of Missouri every year and that our relations are close and intimate. I trust they will become more so as time goes on.

Let me call attention to just one thing. If I am not mistaken in my figures, there are 13 trains running every day between Omaha and Kansas City. Some of those trains make the trip in about six hours' time. The trains are crowded with passengers. Omaha is not, therefore, required to go great distances to transact business. It is undoubtedly true that the major portion of its banking business has been done in the city of Chicago, and it is undoubtedly true that if, because the greater portion of Omaha's banking business has been done in Chicago, we should recognize that as a controlling fact, and therefore perpetuate the conditions, that same argument applied would result in keeping every particle of congestion which now exists of money in New York and in Chicago, and the dominance and control, which I claim is artificial, which I maintain is detrimental, would continue under the bank act.

Now, let me challenge attention to the further thought, if it be true, and it is true, and I think will not be gainsaid, that under our old system of doing business the dominance of the financial interests of New York and of Chicago has been maintained by means merely of the power of accumulated money, and if that is not a good thing for the general commerce of the country, then how is it to be met except by the establishment of new financial nuclei, if I may use that term? Wherever you locate one of these banks you are bound to the extent that bank does business to interfere with the present course of trade toward these two great centers. But if the doctrine be sound, if the argument be fair and logical, that it is well for the general country that we shall locate new centers, then certainly the State of Nebraska is to be benefited by having a bank located at Kansas City, because by the location of a bank at Kansas City you remove into the great Central West a portion of the financial power, and to that extent reduce the financial supremacy of the two great financial centers of the country as they now exist.

We have in what is known as the Missouri Valley a vast territory, the interests of all parts of which are almost identical with the interests of any particular part. I say to the Senator from Nebraska now that if the regional bank were located at his city and Kansas City and Missouri were placed in that territory it would be infinitely better for the State of Missouri than it would be to allow present conditions to obtain. If it be true that there is a general benefit to the great West and Central West to grow out of the decentralization of the financial power of this country, then the State of Nebraska will gain more by that than it possibly can by remaining tributary to the city of Chicago.

In this great valley lie Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, parts of Colorado, and New Mexico, and Wyoming. It is the most rapidly developing portion of the United States; it is a part of the United States that is rich in agricultural and mineral resources and that has not yet found one-tenth of its real development. It has grown with a rapidity that is almost beyond belief. Let me call your attention here to a few facts:

In 1875 the total bank clearings at Kansas City were $20,407,967. In five years' time they had mounted to $50,730,000, approximately a 65 per cent increase. In five years more they had gone from $50,730,000 to $223,389,419. In the next 10-year period they went from $223,389,419 to $520,870,447. In the next five years they went to $775,264,813. The next five years witnessed a jump to $1,197,905,558. In five years more—to wit, in 1910—the bank clearings had mounted to $2,634,557,738. In 1913 they had gone to $2,850,362,611.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment. Kansas City ranks a part of the time sixth and a part of the time seventh in the bank clearings of the United States, while Pittsburgh ranks a part of the time sixth and a part of the time seventh. It is a neck-and-neck race between the great city of Pittsburgh and Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not understand whether the figures just quoted by the Senator from Missouri are figures relating to the business of Kansas City or whether they represent what I think he said was the wonderful growth of the States west of Kansas City which were included in that district.

Mr. REED. I did make the statement that the country had wonderfully developed, and I began to illustrate it by the mere bank clearings of Kansas City alone, which is only a branch of what I intend to say. As to the rest of the country, I was coming to that later; but if the Senator wants to make an observation, of course I yield to him.

Mr. THOMAS. I prefer to make my observation concerning the country west of Kansas City after the Senator from Missouri concludes his statement.

Mr. REED. Since 1906 New York has actually shown a decrease of 9 per cent in its bank clearings.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. The matter before the Senate is Senate bill 4405. I supposed that probably I would be recognized by the Chair to have that bill laid before the Senate. I yielded to the Senator from Missouri assuming that he would require perhaps 5 or 10 minutes to conclude the remarks which he desired to make. I simply interrupt the Senator to say to him that under the rule I shall be obliged to give way at 2 o'clock.

Mr. REED. I did not know that, and I will conclude in the next three minutes. I was not aware of the fact that his bill was in the condition which he has stated, and I apologize for trenching on the Senator's time.

Boston shows a loss of 1 per cent, San Francisco an increase of 36 per cent, Pittsburgh an increase of 11 per cent, Minneapolis an increase of 36 per cent, Chicago an increase of 50 per cent, St. Louis an increase of 30 per cent, and Kansas City an increase of 113 per cent.

Mr. President, I had started to address the Senate upon the development of that entire section of country, but I realize since the statement of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that I can not, in justice to him, trespass further upon his time. I thank him for his courtesy, and shall resume my remarks later.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In view of the fact that the radium bill will take up the remainder of the morning hour at least, I ask that my resolution go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, for the further information of the Senate, I ask that the amendments reported by the committee be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, section 1, line 3, after the word "That," it is proposed to insert "hereafter."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I understood that the bill was to be read merely for the information of the Senate. I certainly want to be heard before I am counted as agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The request was made that the amendments be read first for the information of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what I understood. I do not want the amendments disposed of as being agreed to without having an opportunity to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be considered as pending. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "provided," to strike out "and all said ores hereafter mined from lands which were not located under the mining laws of the United States and the States wherein the same are situated prior to the passage of this act shall be so sold and delivered"; and on page 2, line 16, after the word "issued," to insert "for lands located under this act: Provided, That if the United States shall at any time fail or refuse to purchase any such radium ores of sufficient value to be merchantable, extracted from any such lands so located, whether patented or unpatented, upon the tender of the same for sale in carload lots at any railroad station, the exclusive right of the United States to purchase such ore or any ores thereafter extracted from the mining claim from which the same were mined and from all other mining claims contiguous thereto and held in common therewith as well as the right to enter upon the same for failure diligently to mine any of such claims shall thereupon cease and the unrestricted right of disposition of all ores within such claims or extracted therefrom shall thereupon accrue to the owner, lessee, or other rightful occupant thereof," so as to make the section read:

That hereafter all deposits of carnotite, pitchblende, or other ores containing radium in sufficient quantity for extraction, in lands belonging to the United States, and the lands containing same, shall be subject to exploration, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws upon condition that said radium-bearing ores shall be exclusively sold and delivered to the United States as hereinafter provided, and the exclusive right of the United States to purchase and receive said ores from the owners of such lands, their lessees and assigns, together with the right of the United States to enter upon the lands so patented and mine, develop, and remove said radium-bearing ores in the event that the patentee, his lessees or assigns, shall fail to develop and mine such ores with reasonable diligence, upon payment to such patentee, his lessees or assigns, of the market value of the said ores so mined and removed, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of section 4 of this act, less the cost of mining and removing same, shall be expressly reserved in any and all patents which may hereafter be issued for lands located under this act: Provided, That if the United States shall at any time fail or refuse to purchase and such radium ores of sufficient value to be merchantable, extracted from any such lands so located, whether patented or unpatented, upon the tender of the same for sale in carload lots at any railroad station, the exclusive right of the United States to purchase such ore or any ores thereafter extracted from the mining claim from which the same were mined and from all other mining claims contiguous thereto and held in common therewith as well as the right to enter upon the same for failure diligently to mine any of such claims shall thereupon cease and the unrestricted right of disposition of all ores within such claims or extracted therefrom shall thereupon accrue to the owner, lessee, or other rightful occupant thereof.

The next amendment was to strike out all of section 2 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease for the purpose of exploration and development of radium-bearing ores unallotted lands within Indian reservations now existing or hereafter established by act of Congress or Executive order in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That such radium-bearing ores when mined shall be sold and delivered to the United States as herein provided: And provided further, That all royalties derived from any such leases or rentals or other moneys paid on account of the same shall be deposited to the credit of the Indians entitled to occupy the reservation from which the same come to be expended for their benefit as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 8, after the words "radium-bearing ores," to insert "from lands located under the provisions of this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the sale, gift, or other disposition of said radium-bearing ores from lands located under the provisions of this act to any person, association, or corporation other than the United States shall be unlawful, and any violation hereof shall subject any location made of patent issued to forfeiture, and the person, association, or corporation so selling, giving, or otherwise unlawfully disposing of said ores shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than twice the value of the ores so sold, given away, or unlawfully disposed of: Provided, That when, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, special conditions arise which make such action necessary he may, by general order and public notice, permit the sale and delivery of said ores after or without tender to the United States, as he may deem advisable.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 3, after the word "at," to strike out "such prices, to be fixed," and insert "the market price to be determined"; and on line 5, after the word "year," to strike out "as will insure the prospecting for and mining of such ores," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to erect, maintain, and operate a plant or plants for the concentration and treatment of radium-bearing ores and the extraction of the radium and by-products therefrom; to purchase radium-bearing ores mined from lands occupied and held under the provisions of this act at the market price to be determined by him from time to time and published in advance on the 1st day of January and of July in each year, and, if need arises, to purchase or accept radium-bearing ores from other sources; to sell the by-products of such ores at the best prices obtainable; and he shall make such disposition or use of the radium produced as will best serve the need of the people of the United States.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 6, line 1, after the word "hereby," to strike out "authorized" and insert "appropriated," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That there is hereby appropriated for the erection and general equipment of a suitable building or buildings for radium extraction the sum of $150,000, and for the necessary expenses connected with the purchase and treatment of radium-bearing ores and the extraction of radium therefrom during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, the further sum of $300,000.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or abridge the right, in good faith, to locate or appropriate (under existing laws) any public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, not known by the locator or appropriator to be of value because of any radium-bearing ores therein, and any patent issued for such lands so located or appropriated shall be unlimited in character except as in such laws provided, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. Except as herein provided the general laws in relation to the disposition of mining lands shall be applicable to the lands in this act referred to containing radium-bearing ores.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana, who doubtless has given this matter much consideration, what information he can give us as to the curative properties of this substance in the treatment of cancer?

Mr. WALSH. I had intended to address myself to that feature of the matter in the very early part of the discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have noticed that Mr. Gifford Pinchot, who assumes to have in charge everything that tends to uplift humanity, and who has in special charge the morals and the decencies of the Senate of the United States, has in a recent article declared——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have the article in my hand, and was about to ask that it be read from the desk in view of the fact that it relates to the amendments which the Senate has just heard read.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will answer my purpose and will save me the trouble of making a very brief statement which I had intended to make. The article the Senator from Montana is going to put in the RECORD is a very illuminating article. In its criticisms on the Senate it goes beyond the line of common decency, and I think it ought to be put in the RECORD for the purpose of showing what kind of man Mr. Pinchot is.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the interview be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the heading be read also.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Tuesday, March 24, 1914.]

ASSAILS RADIUM BILL—GIFFORD PINCHOT SAYS SENATE AMENDMENTS ARE INFAMOUS—CITES LOSS TO GOVERNMENT—PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL CONSERVATION CONGRESS, DECLARING ORIGINAL MEASURE WAS OBSTRUCTED BY LOBBY OF GRABBERS, DECLARES SUCH DELAY MAKES OFFENSE OF FOOD POISONERS LOOK SMALL.

Gifford Pinchot, as president of the National Conservation Association, issued the following statement last night regarding the radium situation in Congress:

"More than two months have elapsed since a joint resolution was introduced in Congress to reserve to the people of the United States the radium-bearing ores on the public lands. During this inexcusable delay 500 additional claims have been located by private persons, so that their content of radium—the only medical remedy for cancer—may be exploited for private profit. This was the object of those who cause the delay.

PUTS GOVERNMENT LOSS AT $1,500,000.

"It is officially estimated that the loss to the Government on the radium needed for its hospitals and the profit to the grabbers, if the grabbers have succeeded fully in their purpose, will be more than $1,500,000.

"At present at least half of our radium goes abroad. Our Government hospitals need 30 grams of radium at once, while 2 grams is all we have. There are constantly in this country 200,000 persons suffering from cancer, of whom 75,000 die each year.

"The brutal callousness of the men in Congress and out who, by delaying this bill, have delayed relief to this army of sufferers makes the offense of food poisoners look small.

PREPARED SECRETLY, HE SAYS.

"Obstruction by the radium lobby and its friends in Congress could not, however, last indefinitely. After delaying for two months the grabbers saw that the bill must soon be acted on. Accordingly, secret preparation was made to have it passed in a form that would appear to give the public what it needed, and yet leave the grabbers in substantial control of the situation.

"On March 16 the Walsh bill was reported with amendments. One of these provides that if the Government fails to purchase radium ore tendered to it at any railroad station, and derived from any claim reserved for Government use under the bill just once, the Government loses forever all right to buy radium from that claim, and from all contiguous claims in the same ownership.

"IMPUDENCE COULD REACH NO FURTHER."

"It would seem as if the cynical impudence of monopolists could reach no further. Yet the bill contains another clause under which all that is necessary to take the radium ore in any claim out from under the provisions of the bill, out of the reach of the Government, and into the sphere of the grabbers, is for the locator of that claim not to know when he locates it that it is valuable for radium.

"Another Senate amendment requires the Secretary of the Interior to pay for radium ore not a just price, but the 'market' price, which is an excessive monopoly price to-day.

"The Senate amendments to the radium bill are simply infamous. They make it a weasel bill, which withdraws from the people the benefits it pretends to give. If this bill passes in its present form, every man who votes for it will write himself down the servant of special privilege in one of its most abominable forms."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he knows what is the exact position of Mr. Pinchot with reference to this matter. Does he insist that the lands supposed to contain radium ores should be absolutely withdrawn?

Mr. WALSH. I have no information concerning the position of the gentleman, except as it is disclosed in the article which the Senate has heard read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I judge from the article that that is his position—that he thinks all lands which are supposed to carry or are suspected of carrying radium ores should be withdrawn, which, of course, would be effectually to lock up the radium of which he thinks the country is so much in need.

Mr. WALSH. I might say to the Senator from Utah, however, that unfortunately the committee were not aided by any counsel or advice from Mr. Pinchot during their deliberations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that is quite fortunate.

Mr. WALSH. They conducted hearings extending over quite a period of time. The public were generally advised of the pendency of these hearings. I am very sure that the committee and every member of it would have been very glad to have Mr. Pinchot appear and give us the benefit of any ideas he had upon the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as the Secretary had a clipping from a different paper than that from which the clipping I hold in my hands was taken—mine having been taken,

I think, from a Philadelphia paper—I desire to read one paragraph that was omitted. It is in these words:

If this radium bill passes in its present form—

That is, in its amended form as proposed by the Senator from Montana—

every man who votes for it will write himself down the servant of special privilege in one of its most abominable forms. It is such cases as this that supply the reason, and, so far as they go, the good and sufficient reason, why so many people believe that the political power of private monopoly in Congress is stronger than the obligation of the public good, even when the saving of human life is at stake.

There are two or three other paragraphs from this remarkable article that I might read into the RECORD; but sufficient has already been disclosed to show the brutal animus of the author of the article.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this fulmination from the president of the National Conservation Association admits of no construction except that some or all of the members of the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining have been faithless to the public interest. It very plainly implies either a corrupt connivance with, or else a stupid yielding to, the purposes of some greedy interest to monopolize the output of radium and radium-bearing ores in this country.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether the committee determined to its own satisfaction that radium is a cure for cancer.

Mr. WALSH. There was no expression of opinion concerning the matter from the committee. I said to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that I hope to lay before the Senate, when I am permitted to go so far, so much of the testimony given to us as I think it is important for the Senate to have under consideration. If the Senator asks my own individual opinion about it, I should say to him that my own opinion is that of the medical world, that it is unquestionably a cure for cancer.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have not understood that it is by any means the sense of the medical world that radium is a cure for cancer. One of the objections I have to this bill—I do not mean to say that it is a controlling objection, but one objection——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. One objection, if the Senator will allow me a moment, is that we are practically indorsing radium as a cure for the disease of cancer. If we should be wrong about that, we shall be holding out false hopes, which might be very disastrous, to people who are suffering from this disease. We had a little experience of that kind not very long ago.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not care to yield further to the Senator from California. I had intended to lay before the Senate such evidence as the committee think ought to convince the Senate that radium is a cure for cancer. After that is done, I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator to advance a contrary idea.

Mr. WORKS. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. But I submit that inasmuch as I propose to do so, and have said so, the course of my argument ought not to be interrupted by an attempt to refute what I intend to say about it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is entirely unnecessary for the Senator to insist. A mere intimation from him that he does not desire to be further interrupted is amply sufficient.

Mr. WALSH addressed the Senate. After having spoken for five minutes,

TELEGRAMS OF SENATORS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 156, relative to telegrams sent by Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not accept the yielding, because my purpose, I state frankly, is to substitute another measure for the unfinished business. I will say, if the Senator yields to me for that purpose, that that is the purpose for which I am asking recognition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to say anything further upon the subject of the unfinished business now before the Senate. It is a very small matter and it is just awaiting a vote in order to dispose of it. The Chair had reached the point where the Chair had announced that the Secretary would call the roll upon the adoption of the resolution when the special order for that day interrupted the further proceeding. I should like very much to have a yea-and-nay vote right now and dispose of the matter, if possible; and I would for that reason, of course, resist any motion to displace the unfinished business. I do not think anything would be made by the motion the Senator suggests, because as far as I know there is no further debate to be had. The Senate has substantially decided the unfinished business by voting for a substitute which disposes of the original measure, and all it has to do now is to vote for the resolution as amended, which will produce no change in the result which it has already accomplished.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, upon information that I have from Senators, the resolution would not receive a vote at this time, as the Senator from Mississippi thinks. That being the case—and I leave it to the sense of the Senate—I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not believe that motion is debatable. Is it debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I made a parliamentary inquiry, but received no reply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did receive a reply, that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the President's pardon; I did not hear him. Very well, then, let us have a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays Senate bill 120 before the Senate.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Before proceeding further, I desire to inquire from the Senator from North Dakota if he desires to have the debate on his bill continued at this time?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do, Mr. President. Perhaps I did not understand the Senator, but I desire the debate to continue upon the bill which has just been laid before the Senate upon motion.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose that I might follow the course adopted a little while ago and go on and make my remarks for the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator give me an idea how long he desires to speak?

Mr. WALSH. I imagine that I shall take perhaps about an hour.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is a pretty long time. I have kept this measure going for a long time, and there are Senators here ready to proceed.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] wishes to speak on the bill this afternoon. He was momentarily called out of the Chamber, but will be back in a few minutes. It will be agreeable to let the Senator from Montana go on for a short time. The Senator from Illinois will be here very soon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate I presume that the Senator from Montana could even speak upon the other bill pending this one. I do not think that I could prevent him from doing that; and if the Senator will assure me that it will be for only a short time, it will not be necessary to lay aside the unfinished business for that purpose, but the Senator can proceed upon this bill.

[Mr. WALSH addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Johnson	Page	Sterling
Bristow	Jones	Perkins	Sutherland
Bryan	Kern	Pittman	Swanson
Catron	Lodge	Shafroth	Thomas
Chamberlain	McCumber	Sheppard	Thornton
Colt	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Vardaman
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Walsh
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	West
Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.	Williams
Gronna	Oliver	Smoot
James	Overman	Stephenson

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is absent on account of illness. I will advise Senators that he underwent a rather severe operation a day or two since, but is doing nicely, and his speedy recovery is expected.

Mr. PAGE. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are absent in attendance upon official duties in connection with the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. REED, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. LANE, Mr. OWEN, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. FALL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a motion?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Indiana for that purpose.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suppose that is a debatable question.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that it is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

[Mr. WALSH addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say very briefly that while Senators are exploring all the present unexplored places of the earth in search of radium, would it not be quite proper that we should now leave that subject and allow the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who has been waiting here for two hours to address himself to the particular subject in hand, to proceed with his discussion of Senate bill 120?

Mr. WALSH. The suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota is a very, very pertinent one. I feel that some apology is due to him for not yielding the floor earlier, and I want to do so when I remark, Mr. President, that we have all had the experiences which have been suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. We know that this deposit of radium-bearing ore exists and we may some time in the future find some other deposits. There is no doubt about that probability. The question is, What shall we do now with reference to the great commercial deposit of which we have the personal evidence and which, if exhausted, may possibly exhaust the supply that we will have until at some remote time in the future we shall be able to discover more?

I shall continue my discussion of the subject upon that point when I again have an opportunity to address the Senate.

[Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 13, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 10, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, our hearts go out in gratitude to Thee for the sublime manifestation of Thy love poured out on Calvary nineteen hundred years ago, which aroused in the heart of man a faith so sublime, a hope so inspiring, a love so profound and enduring, that the trend of life is heavenward. To live, to think, to will, to act in consonance with the eternal principles made manifest in the Christ spirit invites perfection. May it be ours thus to live that we may hasten the coming of Thy kingdom. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13765, the Military Academy appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the Military Academy appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 507).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13765) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18, 19, 21, and 31.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 4½, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, and 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in line 3 of said amendment insert "$600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES HAY,
K. D. MCKELLAR,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

Amendment No. 1 of the Senate increased the appropriation for the pay of cadets from $375,000 to $390,000, and the House receded with an amendment which fixed the appropriation for that purpose at $380,000.

Senate amendments 2, 3, 4, and 4½ change the title of instructor of military engineering to that of professor, makes the rank that of lieutenant colonel, and reduces the pay from $600 to $500, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 5 changes language and does not affect the amount appropriated, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 6 reduces the appropriation made by the House from $5,500 to $4,900, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 7 transposes the language from page 8 to page 4, providing for extra pay of noncommissioned officer in charge of Army service detachment mess, and the House recedes.

Senate amendments 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, and 29 add respectively to the amount appropriated 48 cents, 60 cents, 16 cents, 50 cents, 63 cents, 69 cents, 48 cents, and 50 cents, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 14 strikes out the item which was transferred to page 4 by amendment 7, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 15 strikes out 12 laborers and inserts 9, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 17 strikes out 30 and inserts 35 cents per day for extra pay of three teamsters; this was a clerical error, and the House recedes.

Senate amendments 20 and 22 correct errors in calculation, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 24 increases the appropriation $250, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 25 inserts the words "book of reference, scientific periodicals, and stationery," and the House recedes.

Senate amendments 26, 27, and 28 change punctuation and language, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 30 appropriates $1,000 for installation of steam heat and electric light in ordnance barracks and other buildings, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 31 adds $1,000 to the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 32 provides for the purchase of one fire engine and equipment, $2,500, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 33 adds the following words: "and for the enforcement of rules and regulations for the protection from contamination of the water supply," and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 34 adds $500 to the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 35 provides $800 for the cadet polo field, and the House recedes with an amendment providing $600 for that purpose.

The Senate added $19,909.79 to the bill as it passed the House, in conference $12,100 was deducted from the bill as it passed the Senate. The bill as agreed on in conference carries an appropriation of $996,099.54.

JAMES HAY,
K. D. MCKELLAR.
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not remember just what the Senate amendments 2, 3, 4, and 4½ are, but I notice the conference report says that they changed the title of instructor of military engineering to that of professor, makes the rank that of lieutenant colonel, and reduces the pay from $600 to $500. What does that reducing of pay mean?

Mr. HAY. That means that the officer who was appropriated for had the rank of captain, and in order to bring up his salary to the pay of lieutenant colonel, to which all of those professors are entitled, we had to appropriate in addition to his pay $600. The officer who will now have that place will have the rank of major, and we will have to appropriate to increase his pay to that of lieutenant colonel only $500.

Mr. MANN. Then what is meant is that you reduce the appropriation from $600 to $500?

Mr. HAY. Yes; and increase the rank from captain to major.

Mr. MANN. Reading it by itself it might give the impression that the pay of a lieutenant colonel was reduced. I did not know but that it was extra pay.

Mr. HAY. It is extra pay.

Mr. MANN. Extra pay from the pay of major?

Mr. HAY. Extra from the pay of major.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is the day set apart for the consideration of pension bills on the Private Calendar, and I call up the bill (H. R 14738) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I understand that there is no desire for general debate upon the bill, and I hope that there will not be any, as the legislative appropriation bill will come up again as soon as we finish these bills, and the gentleman in charge of it is anxious to hurry along with it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up a pension bill and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Catherine Beard, widow of Archibald Beard, late of Company A, Sixty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out, in line 7, the words "Sixty-second" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Fifty-second."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 3 to correct the spelling of a name

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 3 to correct the spelling of a name. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, on page 3, line 23, the name Bradock should be Brodock, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be amended in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to amend the bill by changing the spelling of the name in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANGLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15504) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of William R. Phillips, late of the Seventy-sixth Company, Coast Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the paragraph just read, lines 6 to 8, inclusive, page 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have always, as is well known to Members of this House, been in favor of paying pensions to those who are, in my judgment, justly entitled to them, and I would not now move to strike out this paragraph granting this pension if I did not feel that in this particular case the Government owed nothing in the way of pension to this soldier. When I read the report as given here, and I do not desire to place it in the RECORD unless it is thought best to do so, that reading convinces me, from the statements made by the physician in this case, that this man's difficulty is not due to his military services, but is due to his own vicious habits. I do not believe that in cases of this kind the Government should be expected to pay a pension to a man who, upon the face of the report, shows that such is the case, and so for that reason I have moved to strike this paragraph from the bill. I do it not with the idea of depriving a worthy soldier of a pension, because I believe thoroughly in the idea of paying a pension to those men who have volunteered their services in the defense of their country, for I believe in our country that when we depend largely upon volunteer soldiery we must provide for them in case they become incapacitated, or for their widows and orphans in case they lose their lives, but I can not stand here as a representative of the people and permit this kind of item to go into a bill without a protest from me, and therefore I move to strike it from the bill, and I think it ought to be done.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, as is well known in this House, I am in favor of the well-established policy of the Federal Government in reference to pension legislation, but upon reading the report to which my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] has referred, I join him in a request that the committee or the House strike out H. R. 472. The gentleman from Illinois has stated that he does not care to put this report in the RECORD, but a reading of the report, and especially the testimony of Dr. James I. Foster relating to this case, more particularly the last three or four lines of it, will give ample warrant to every man, whether he be in favor of the policy of pension legislation or not, to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. It has been said on the floor of this House time and time again that the pension roll was a roll of dishonor, and as often I and other gentlemen have stood upon this floor and denied that slander. Only on last Wednesday, when the Spanish War widows' bill was up, I called attention to the record of Charles Francis Adams, jr., a veteran of the Civil War, and, as was said here, the grandson of one President and the great grandson of another, who so far forgot the duty that he owed to his comrades in arms who are not so well provided with this world's goods as he is, and many of whom are dependent upon their pensions for the bare necessities of life, as to characterize the pension roll as a roll of dishonor. I shall challenge and deny that base slander whenever it is made, no matter how high the source from whence it comes. I am frank to say that if a bill similar to this one were put upon the pension roll that there would be some semblance of reason to support the statement made by Charles Francis Adams, jr. Since I have been in this House I have not voted for a pension bill of this character, nor do I intend to do so; and you know well that I take this action reluctantly. I dislike to oppose this committee, made up, as it is, of hard-working, conscientious gentlemen. My knowledge of the views on pension questions of some of the gentlemen of this committee, and particularly the acting chairman—I know he is familiar with pension legislation from three or four years' experience before the Pension Bureau, and I know that he does not favor this kind of legislation.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows, of course, I am not on the committee which reported this bill, and I know nothing personally about the facts, but I have read the report here, and I asked the gentleman if he noticed the statement in the report that the board of pension surgeons by whom he was examined says that the disability which the gentleman is evidently referring to did not contribute to the disease of rheumatism, of which the soldier is suffering, and that it also shows that there was other medical evidence in the case showing that he is wholly unable to work and can not walk without crutches on account of rheumatism; and the committee were of the opinion that the rheumatism was contracted in the service and line of duty, and so reported the bill favorably.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; I have noticed that; and I have likewise read the statement that it was because of this testimony of Dr. Foster that the Bureau of Pensions rejected the claim and held that rheumatism was not contracted in service, but existed prior to enlistment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. ANSBERRY. That is not the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, our colleague, who is an authority on pension legislation, particularly on the medical end of it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say that I regret the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS], who desired to be heard on this bill, has been called out of the Chamber. I wish he were here, as he has made a careful study of the case and knows more about it, perhaps, than any of us.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I will.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, this bill was very carefully considered by the members of the Pension Committee. It was not passed hastily. It was approved by the committee by what was practically a unanimous vote after very careful consideration. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS] who is a member of the committee, gave particular attention to this claim, and it was upon his presentation of the evidence that the committee waived a rule which it has enforced in the consideration of pension claims, and passed this bill.

Now, let us see what the facts are, Mr. Speaker. This young man enlisted in the United States Army. He was subjected to the usual examination. If he had rheumatism when he entered the service, that fact should have developed in the examination at that time, and the fact that it was not developed, and that he was given a clean bill of health at that time, estops us now from setting up the claim that he had rheumatism prior to enlistment. After he left the service and applied for a pension, alleging that rheumatism had been contracted in the service, the Pension Bureau referred him to a board of examining surgeons, and that board, after a complete examination, reported unanimously that the young man was entitled to a pension of $30 a month. And then a special examiner was sent into the field, and he succeeded in finding a physician who, relying on his memory, said that he believed he had treated this man for rheumatism prior to enlistment. And that was the only testimony submitted to refute the findings of the board of examining surgeons.

Now, when these facts were presented to the committee, together with the fact that the man is now in a soldiers' home in a helpless condition——

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. This Dr. Foster, as I see from the report, does not pretend to give any evidence from any memorandum of the case which he had.

Mr. KEATING. That is what the doctor says. I read that portion of it so that it can be in the RECORD properly. He said:

> I remember treating him for rheumatism, derangement of the stomach, etc., in 1900 or in 1901. Now that I think of it——

Mr. BARTLETT. That shows that he had not any record.

Mr. KEATING. Surely not. It was in 1900 that he treated him. That is the evidence that the Pension Bureau accepted against the findings of the board of surgeons, and the man who is a victim of that finding is now in a soldiers' home in a helpless condition. After all those facts were presented to the Pension Committee and thoroughly thrashed out at a full meeting of that committee the claim was approved. I think our chairman was the only man who voted in the negative.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. DIES. This man is in a soldiers' home that is maintained by the Government, and he is there cared for.

Mr. KEATING. And I will say to the gentleman in explanation that while the board of surgeons recommended that this man should have $30 a month, in consideration of the fact that he was in a soldiers' home we only gave him $12 a month. We did it because we thought he needed some tobacco and spending money. Of course, his board and clothing would be taken care of by the Government; so we fixed the pension at $12 a month. I regret that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS] is not here, because, as I say, he made a very careful study of this case and would be able to make a proper presentation. But, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to defend the action of the Pension Committee, and I resent the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] that we are bringing in cases without consideration, because we are doing no such thing.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman permit a statement?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I did not criticize the committee for bringing in a bill without proper consideration. I criticized them for bringing in a bill of this kind, whether they considered it for a minute or two days.

Mr. KEATING. And I criticize the gentleman for making a statement of that kind without the records in the case.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I stated it on the testimony of Dr. Foster.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman made the assertion in spite of the testimony given in this case by every physician who has considered it, with the single exception of Dr. Foster.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the official medical record, as furnished by the department, show all through the record that this very trouble that Dr. Foster testifies to appears time and again?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; and we are not pensioning him for that.

Mr. HOWARD. No; you are not pensioning him for the real cause of his disability, but you are pensioning him for some isolated disease—conjunctivitis—which means a swollen eyelid.

Mr. KEATING. I have a most profound respect for the gentleman's knowledge of this subject, but I have more respect for the board of examining surgeons who passed on this case, and who say that he was entitled to $30 a month.

Mr. LANGLEY. And that board of surgeons were the official representatives of the bureau.

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to consume just a moment or two. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] has seen fit to rather criticize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] for uttering a protest upon the incorporation of this particular bill in this omnibus bill.

I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] and I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], without any criticism on my part of the committee. I have just as much sympathy with the Spanish-American War soldiers as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] or the gentleman from Ohio or anybody else has.

But I think the criticism of this bill is justified in this case, I do not care what the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS] would say if he were here. I do not care what the gentleman from Colorado says about this bill. If you gentlemen can read, the merits of this case are evident to you. As the Speaker said upon one occasion, "Any man who can read can understand"; and I am very much tempted, in reading into this record upon this particular bill the reason why this claim is objectionable, and thus let the country know what sort of men the Pensions Committee of this House is seeking to put upon the pension roll as beneficiaries of the Government of the United States.

Here is a man whose present condition might elicit sympathy from some of the gentlemen on this committee, but what are we going to do about the worthy cases that are knocking at the door of Congress and asking for a pension—men who are morally fit to go on the pension roll of this Government? Here this committee goes out into the byways and hedges and into the woods of West Virginia and finds a moral offender, afflicted with an unmentionable disease, and throws him in the faces of men on the floor of this House who want intelligently to do justice to the country and to their constituents, and asks us to put him on the pension roll.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. It is only fair to say that this is not a West Virginia case, and that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS], in considering it, considered it simply as a member of the committee. He was not interested in it in a geographical way or otherwise, and I do not know where this man comes from.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not care where he comes from. If he comes from Georgia or from Kamchatka or from Ohio, he has no place on the pension roll of this Government. I am going to put the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY], the chairman of this committee, and the gentleman from Colorado and any other gentleman on notice that whenever they bring in a pension case of any character where the claimant is attended with the trouble that this man suffers from, they are going to get a fight from me on that item before it goes into this omnibus bill.

As I say, there are plenty of worthy comrades of mine that are knocking at the door of Congress, asking for pensions, and all know that burden is heavy enough for the taxpayers to bear. I took one case to the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Ohio, where a man in the discharge of his duty had his hands frozen off in the cold of Alaska. I have another case pending before the Pension Committee where an honorable man, suffering from varicose veins, lying upon a bed of suffering, is knocking at the door of this House for a pension and can not get it; and then you bring in here a pension for a man with this sort of a record and ask men to go home and look their wives in the face after voting to put such a claimant on the pension roll of this Government; it is a travesty and an outrage upon the real soldiers who fought in the Spanish-American War, or any other war. I say it is a shame and a disgrace to place in any document that will rest in the archives of this Government a report asking this Congress to give a pension to such a man as that. He is unworthy, and there is not a man on that committee that does not know it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. KEY of Ohio rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the acting chairman of the Committee on Pensions when this bill was considered, I feel that I ought to make a statement at this time.

I am placed in rather an embarrassing position. The report, however, speaks for itself. My understanding of the rules of this House is that no Member is permitted to disclose what has transpired in committee, but since by colleague, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] has stated that I voted in the negative, I will reaffirm what he has said, and further state that I do not favor bills of this character, and I refused to support the item in committee and reserve the right to vote against it on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at my friend from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY], and I am surprised at the chairman of the committee [Mr. KEY], that they should oppose this measure.

I can say to this House, from having made a very careful examination of practically all of the private pension bills that have been passed by this House in the last few months, that this bill, bad as it is, is no worse than numerous other bills which have been voted for and recommended by the various committees and passed by this House. The gentlemen now turn up their noses because this soldier had a venereal disease. Yet four weeks ago I called to the attention of the House and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the facts in the case of a pension based upon this precise disease.

Now, let me say to my friend from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] if you have lost control of this Frankenstein monster that you have nurtured so diligently, and he is about to strike at you and back at you and your system, it is what any gentleman may expect who builds up Frankenstein monsters and sets them loose to prey upon the taxpayers of the country. The fact is, we have passed pension bills of every known description. When gentlemen have called attention to them they have been derided and accused of sectional hate and prejudice, and I am surprised, though pleased, that we have at last discovered in some pension bill some peculiar statement of fact concerning a man not entitled to prey upon the taxpayers of the country that has aroused the opposition of my friend from Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that he will pursue this road diligently. I am glad to turn over to him the fruitless and bootless enterprise in which I have been so long engaged, in inspecting these and various other exploitations of the Treasury of the country. Coming, as he does, from a section of country that is more favorable to pensions than the section I come from, I know his sweet voice will carry farther than mine and his influence will be more potent to stop these raids than mine has been. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I turn over to you the new reformer of pension frauds, Mr. ANSBERRY, of Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has already spoken once, has he not?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. If anybody else desires to speak, the gentleman will have to wait.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, nobody else has evidenced any desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Does anybody desire to speak upon this bill? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, if no one else, in response to the Speaker's inquiry, addresses the House, will that preclude anyone from addressing it at this time after the gentleman from Ohio has finished?

The SPEAKER. Of course not. The spirit may move him after the gentleman from Ohio has gotten through. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I begin to doubt my own judgment when my position on pension legislation is indorsed by that arch enemy of all pension legislation the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], because the gentleman in his opposition to pension legislation upon this floor—and he has opposed all pension legislation—has shown that he was absolutely without information with reference to the bills he was opposing, whether they were special bills or general bills. Now, from the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, a man who ranked high in his chosen profession before he was called to another field of activity, all here who desire to do so can easily inform themselves as to why I am opposing this bill; and those whose good opinion I desire to retain know that my motives are of the best and that my position is inspired by a desire to promote proper pension legislation and not to retard it.

As I said in the beginning, when I find myself in the company of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] on a pension question I begin to doubt the correctness of my own judgment, and but for the fact that I have before me the last three lines of this report I believe I would be almost willing to withdraw the objection that I have to this bill. You gentlemen of this House must appreciate the effect that this report has upon me when, in spite of the fact that I find myself in the company of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] in opposing this bill, and despite the fact that I know the bad effect such association may have on my fortunes, I am going to stand by my original position and ask the gentlemen of this House not to make it possible for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to come in here week after week and month after month, when pension bills are being considered, and point to this bill as evidence of the truth of the charge of Charles Francis Adams, jr., that the pension roll is a roll of dishonor. Strike out this, and to that extent you disarm the enemies of all pension legislation; and despite the fact that the gentleman from Texas has said that other bills of a similar character have been passed, giving men pensions because of venereal disease, and that that is the ground on which some pension bills were based, I challenge the gentleman to show any such cases, because no such cases exist. It is not the practice of these committees, and it is not the practice of the Pension Bureau, to grant a pension under those circumstances, and I defy the gentleman to produce the cases to which he has referred.

[Mr. WINGO addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, our Committee on Invalid Pensions has never reported a bill like this since I have been a member of it, but I am going to vote to sustain the other committee, which I know does not deserve the criticism that has been made of it. I regret that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], the author of the bill upon which this paragraph is based, is absent from the House on account of sickness, because I am sure that he would desire to be heard upon it, and that he could convince the House that this amendment ought not to prevail. I regret also that this is a case that can not be frankly and fully discussed in the House. I fear that as a result of the veiled insinuations made by certain gentlemen the House may be led into error and, not fully understanding the case, may do the soldier a grave injustice by assuming that the soldier's present helpless condition is due to his own vicious habits, which is not true.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman says "veiled insinuations." I made no veiled insinuations.

Mr. LANGLEY. I had no reference to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. I made a frank, open, and unreserved statement.

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not refer to the gentleman from Georgia. He is always open, frank, and unreserved; sometimes too much so, I think, for his own good. As to this case, I desire Members of the House to know that the evidence clearly shows that the disability to which these "veiled insinuations" refer had nothing to do with the soldier's present condition. The evidence clearly shows that. Mr. Speaker, I know from observation and experience as an employee of the Government in pension work covering a good many years that there are hundreds—yes, thousands—of cases like this that have been allowed under the general law. It is purely a medical question, to be determined by medical experts, as to whether the unpensionable cause can be eliminated from the case. Rigid as they are in the Pension Office, they apply no such hard and fast moral test as is proposed here, and I do not think the country will approve of it either in cases of soldiers who have performed honorable service and are disabled as a result of it, as shown in this case.

There was a question in this case as to the existence of rheumatism prior to enlistment, and upon that question the bureau ruled adversely. But this committee, acting as a court of equity, has thoroughly considered the case and has decided that the great preponderance of evidence shows that the soldier is suffering from a disability contracted in the line of duty, and that he is helpless from that cause, and I believe the gentlemen who have criticized this case here to-day are too uncharitable.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, as a member of the Pension Committee, that that committee reached its conclusions in this case just as any jury in a court of law would—upon the evidence in the case. What was the evidence? Three reputable physicians said that in their honest judgment this man was entitled to $30 a month. The committee said, "We will give him $12 a month." I shall insist on the judgment of the Pension Committee being sustained. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to strike out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOWARD) there were 56 ayes and 38 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded and finished the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEATING, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PETER SCOTT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 3885, on the Private Calendar, to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Peter Scott.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3885) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Peter Scott.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman from Virginia call up a bill and have it considered in the House without anything further being said?

Mr. HAY. The bill has not yet been reported.

Mr. MANN. Bills are not reported further than by title in the House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against the military record of Peter Scott, late of Company K, Fifty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pension, emoluments, or allowance of any description shall accrue by reason of this act prior to the date of approval thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That in the administration of laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Peter Scott, who was a private of Company K, Fifty-sixth Regiment Ohio olunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 10th day of July, 1864: Provided, That no pension, emoluments, or allowances of any description shall accrue by reason of this act prior to the date of approval thereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOSEA STONE.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 6220 on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6220) for the relief of Hosea Stone.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, bills to remove a charge of desertion are in order in the order they are on the calendar, but bills for the relief of people are not bills to remove charges of desertion and are not in order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the bill, and I think the reading of the bill will show that it is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Hosea Stone, late of Battery A, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as of Battery A, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, on the 21st day of July, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Plainly, Mr. Speaker, that is not a bill to remove a charge of desertion.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for no other purpose. The gentleman from Illinois probably remembers that President Roosevelt vetoed bills which removed the charge of desertion specifically on the ground that they changed the records in the War Department, and that that could not be done. In order to avoid that objection the form of the bills removing a charge of desertion was changed. All bills now removing the charge of desertion, in order that the men may be allowed the privileges which they might have, are put in the form in which this bill is, and that form is that he shall be considered as having an honorable discharge. The reason why he could not receive a pension is that he is carried on the records of the War Department as a deserter. For the last three Congresses, at least, these bills have been put in that form, and they have been held in order on days when bills for the removal of the charge of desertion are in order. Of course, if this bill is not in order, then no bill for the removal of a charge of desertion will ever be in order on this day.

The SPEAKER. There is no need for the gentleman proceeding further unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has some good argument to present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The rules provide that bills for the removal of charges of desertion are in order on this day.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, is this bill practically a bill to remove a charge of desertion or not?

Mr. MANN. It is not.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Several Presidents vetoed these bills to remove charges of desertion. Here is this bill which comes in place of a bill to remove the charge of desertion. Of course it is in lieu of a bill to remove the charge of desertion, because the President announced some time ago that he would veto bills which did remove the charge of desertion. Thereupon this bill comes in granting to the soldier certain rights, as though he were honorably discharged, but the charge of desertion still stands against him in the War Department. It is not removed. Of course we have the power to grant a pension to anyone, whether he was in the Army or out of the Army, whether he served throughout the war or whether he deserted. We have that power. That power is proposed to be exercised here, but the charge of desertion is not removed. It still stands in the War Department. We authorize the payment of a pension, notwithstanding the charge of desertion. We say that, for the purpose of administering the pension law, this man shall be considered as having been honorably discharged. I have no objection to the passage of these bills; but here is a bill on the Private Calendar along with a lot of other bills on the Private Calendar reported from committees which do not have the right of way to-day. I can see no reason why we should take up these special bills out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The House has nothing to do with the records of the War Department. Is this bill practically a bill to remove a charge of desertion?

Mr. MANN. It is not.

Mr. HAY. In effect it is.

Mr. MANN. In effect it is to change the law as to this particular individual, which law provides that he can not receive a pension while the charge of desertion stands against him.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I will be glad to in a moment. The charge of desertion is not removed, but we undertake to remove this man from the provision of the law which forbids the payment of a pension while the charge of desertion stands. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, is it not true that a soldier who has deserted can not reenlist, and if the charge of desertion is removed only for the purpose of his receiving a pension, he can not, nevertheless, reenlist. In other words, is the contention correct that this is the equivalent of the removal of a charge of desertion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. It does not remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. GARDNER. And the man could not reenlist, even if sound, if we should pass this bill.

Mr. MANN. Nor can he get an honorable discharge. The War Department will not issue the discharge to him on this bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair desire to hear anything further?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to hear anything more. The Chair is ready to rule. The rule provides:

On the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims and bills removing political disabilities and bills removing the charge of desertion.

This is the second Friday. The bill under consideration provides:

That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Hosea Stone, late of Battery A, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as of Battery A, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, on the 21st day of July, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

This man stands charged as a deserter in the records of the War Department. There has always been a great prejudice against pensioning deserters. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] stated what the law is, but no one conversant with the facts believes that the records of the War Department are perfect. The Chair, as a Member of the House, has been trying for 20 years to get a pension for a green Scotchman who served four years in the Army, and who served in four different regiments, but who is marked as a deserter three different times. This man would get sick or would be shot and would go into the hospital and come out and reenlist in the first regiment that came along. It is just this session that the Chair has been able to get the charge of desertion against this man removed.

The bill under consideration is clearly, in the mind of the Chair, equivalent to a bill to remove the charge of desertion. To use a very common expression, it seems to the Chair it is sort of whipping the devil around the stump; but nevertheless and notwithstanding the opinion of the Chair is that it is a bill to remove the charge of desertion, as far as the House can do it. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is therefore overruled.

The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The bill has been reported. How does it now get before the House?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before that question is put I desire to be heard a few moments. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] a question or two. I am not opposed to this bill—at least, I do not think I am, if I correctly understand the case. The distinguished Speaker said a moment ago that he had spent 20 years trying to get removed an unjust charge of desertion resting against one of his constituents and is just now getting the bill through the House. I am not quite old enough yet to have had the privilege of working that long in Congress on a desertion case, but if my people honor me as long as they have him by a seat in this body the chances are, in view of the rate of progress I have made thus far, that I will take his laurels away from him by breaking his record of 20 years of effort in some cases in which I have been making a similar effort. No man, the honorable Speaker not excepted, has tried harder than I have to get passed bills giving the relief that is proposed by this bill to a number of old soldiers in my district who are unjustly charged with desertion. I have one case in mind—that of John F. Rudd, a splendid old citizen in Magoffin County, in my district, and one who has a record that any soldier should be proud of. He belonged to the Eighth Kentucky Infantry, the regiment which is entitled to the priceless honor of having first reached the summit of Lookout Mountain in that famous battle, concerning which Gen. Hooker, in his report, said:

Several regiments were detailed to scale the summit, but to the Eighth Kentucky must belong the distinction of having been foremost to reach its crest and at sunrise to display our flag from the peak of Lookout amid the wild and prolonged cheers of the men whose dauntless valor had borne them to that point.

John F. Rudd not only belonged to that immortal regiment but to the company of it which led in reaching the summit. He is said to have been, moreover, one of the first 12 to reach it. He served out his term of enlistment and reenlisted as a veteran volunteer, serving altogether two years and seven months. He was granted a furlough and went home. While on furlough disease of eyes developed, and when his furlough expired the disease was so severe that he had to be led by some one when walking, so nearly blind was he. Not only was he wholly unfit for military duty, but he was unable to do anything, and could not have reached his command if he had undertaken it. This condition continued until after the close of the war. Indeed, he has not yet recovered. These facts are proven by nearly a dozen witnesses, most of whom I know personally to be men of the highest character and entitled to the fullest faith and credit on oath. He was charged with desertion because he did not return to his command upon the expiration of his furlough and did not report the reason for his failure to return. The War Department declines to remove the charge, and properly, because of the utterly absurd limitations that Congress has placed upon the power of the department to remove such charges. I have been trying now for nearly eight years to get Congress to pass a bill for his relief. I had it up in the Sixtieth Congress and I have had it up in every Congress since that time. I have spent days and days on it. Time and again I have been before subcommittees urging a favorable report, and two or three times I have gotten a favorable report, but every time something would happen to prevent me from getting a report from the full committee so as to get it as far along as the case we are now considering is. And it has not been my fault, either. It is inconceivable that a soldier with such a record could be a deserter.

Mr. Speaker, I just happened to think of this case and mentioned it as a typical illustration of my experience on this subject. I could name a good many others in my district who are unjustly charged with desertion and in whose behalf I have worked just as hard as I have for my good old friend Rudd. This is my fourth term in Congress, and I have not been able to get a single bill of this character as far along as this one is. This case may be a more meritorious one than mine are, but I doubt it. I have met with no better results at the War Department. I know of cases in which soldiers were charged with desertion because of absence from their command when it was shown by other records that they could not return because they had been captured by the enemy and were held as prisoners of war, and yet it was impossible to get the charge of desertion removed in these cases. I have only been able to get one charge of desertion removed by the department. In that case the soldier was dead, and the widow was denied a pension because the soldier was charged with desertion because he did not return to duty after a battle in which he was engaged with his command. After I took the case up and called attention to the fact that the soldier was never heard from after the battle into which he marched with his company, a field hospital record was found showing that he was admitted to it from the battle field on account of wounds received in action, and that he died there.

The department actually deliberated for months on the question as to whether under the law it had power to remove this desertion charge. It finally decided that it had. I am not blaming the department. It is the fault of our ridiculous law on the subject, and that law was framed by gentlemen who did not understand conditions that existed during the war in the border States and who were unconsciously biased on the subject because they did not understand them and measured the question by their knowledge of conditions in their own sections. In the border States like Kentucky there was a constant guerrilla warfare going on, particularly in the mountain section. Soldiers went home under proper military authority, and before their leave expired they were cut off by the enemy and it meant almost certain death for them to undertake to return to their command, and before it was possible for them to return their command had moved away to some point where they could not reach it in time to be mustered out. They were charged with desertion. Again, a soldier might go home on furlough, as Rudd did, and after getting there he becomes physically unable to return. If he applies for a removal of the charge, the application is denied because the law requires him to prove not only that he was physically unable to return to duty but that the disability was contracted in the service and line of duty, and of course he can not prove that because it is not true. Such cases as these create the necessity for special legislation as is proposed in the pending bill.

When we undertake this, gentlemen howl about pensioning deserters. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to pensioning deserters, too, but I would rather a thousand times pension some of them than be guilty of aiding my Government in keeping against one brave, loyal old soldier the infamy of a desertion charge that is unjust, to say nothing of depriving him of the bounty of his Government he has so faithfully served and whose assistance he so much needs in his old age.

Those of you who have had occasion to examine the act of 1889 governing this question of the removal of charges of desertion know that it is inequitable, unjust, and ridiculous when applied to such cases as the ones I have described. I have tried to get it amended, but that seems impossible. The only other course is to pass these special bills. The trouble about it is that you do not pass enough of them. I hope that this soldier served two or three years, like Rudd did, so that——

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that this one served four years.

Mr. LANGLEY. So much the better, then. I am heartily in favor of the bill, and all I ask is to please let some of these old fellows in my district have the same sort of relief.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LUCIEN P. ROGERS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8688.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8688) granting an honorable discharge to Lucien P. Rogers.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge to Lucien P. Rogers, who served without enlistment as a private in Company F, Seventy-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from August 11, 1862, to June 27, 1864.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following: "That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Lucien P. Rogers shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a member of Company F, Seventy-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from November 1, 1863, to June 28, 1864, and to have been honorably discharged from that service on the last-named date."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the title be corrected to conform with the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Lucien P. Rogers."

WILHELMINA ROHE.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 11166.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11166) for the relief of Wilhelmina Rohe.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John Rohe shall be hereafter held and considered to have been drowned in Nagasaki Harbor, Japan, on the 20th day of March, 1901, in line of duty and while in the service of the United States as a private in Company M, Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time and passed.

JACOB BARGER.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 11256.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11256) granting relief and an honorable discharge to Jacob Barger.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Jacob Barger shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered as a private in Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry on the 20th day of June, 1864, and to have been honorably discharged on the 1st day of March, 1865; and that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to issue an honorable discharge to the said Jacob Barger in accordance with this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out all of lines 9, 10, and 11, after the word "sixty-five," in line 9.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out all of lines 9, 10, and 11, after the word "sixty-five" and insert a period.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the title be corrected in accordance with the text.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be corrected in accordance with the text.

There was no objection.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting relief to Jacob Barger."

W. D. M'LEAN, ALIAS DONALD M'LEAN.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1829.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1829) for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean.

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean, who was a sergeant in Company K, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and sergeant of Company F, Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of the last-named regiment on the 1st day of November, 1864.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Did they get unanimous consent to consider this?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

The SPEAKER. That is the man to whom I was referring awhile ago. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I heartily congratulate the Speaker upon his final success. I hope his case may afford him a precedent which will enable me to get like relief in several cases equally deserving in my district.

ALONZO D. CADWALLADER.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 1090.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1090) for the relief of Alonzo D. Cadwallader.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alonzo D. Cadwallader be, and he is hereby, held and considered to have served as a private in Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, from the 27th day of June, 1862, to the 30th day of September, 1862.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a statement made of the facts on which it is to be held and considered that this gentleman served. Did he actually serve?

Mr. HAY. He did; yes. I will state to the gentleman that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] can give him all the information he desires on this bill, and therefore I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, when this same bill passed the House——

Mr. MONDELL. I do not care about the bill. I would like to know about the service——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I am going to tell you about it——

Mr. MONDELL. The alleged service.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I am going to proceed now to tell you about it. This same bill passed the House on the 14th of February, 1913. Alonzo D. Cadwallader enlisted on June 27, 1862, and was mustered in in August of that year. He immediately went into the service and participated in the Battle of Antietam and the Battle of South Mountain. He was a boy under 15 years of age then, and, discipline having been threatened for some slight breach of duty, he and a companion started for Michigan. He was arrested and taken out of the custody of the officer by writ of habeas corpus, and afterwards received from the War Department an honorable discharge under the law. So there is no question of an honorable discharge involved here; but there are two records in the War Department, one that he departed on September 20 and another that he departed on September 30. He himself swears that he left on September 30. His companion on the trip swears that he left on September 30, and there is abundance of other testimony to the same effect. The records of the War Department, as I said, are conflicting.

Mr. MONDELL. And this is important in view of the fact that the gentleman would not be pensionable unless the date was as he has affirmed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman realizes the importance of it.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. He was just a boy, was he not?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; he was a boy under 15 years of age.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand it, he deserted immediately after the bloody Battle of Antietam?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; but he did not call it deserting.

Mr. HOWARD. Do you believe that anybody could blame this boy for deserting after the Battle of Antietam?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. If he had been a little older perhaps he would have stayed.

Mr. HOWARD. I say we should take into consideration the fact that he was a boy.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Just this word further. Just as soon as he could, he enlisted again——

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And they got him out again.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. He wanted to go to war.

Mr. SLOAN. Perhaps you can satisfy the objection of the gentleman from Georgia if you called it the Battle of Sharpsburg instead of Antietam.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is he pensioned?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. No.

Mr. LANGLEY. But he will get a pension as soon as you get this bill through.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARCUS L. PELHAM.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 5746.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5746) for the relief of Marcus L. Pelham.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Marcus L. Pelham shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a lieutenant in Company G, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, on the 29th day of December, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this is the removal of a charge of desertion?

Mr. HAY. No. I will state to the gentleman that this is a removal of penalties incurred by court-martial.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if I had known what I was up against a while ago, I should not have made the point of order. But I supposed the decision of the Speaker, for whose decisions I have the greatest of respect, covered cases of this kind, so that the rules ought to read, "Bills for removing the charge of desertion," "to remove the penalty of court-martial," and various other things that one could imagine, which separated men from the Army. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] with reference to this bill, if I may.

Mr. HAY. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he let the gentleman's bill go through.

Mr. MANN. There was no objection made to its consideration. It is before the House.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I tried to get it through last night. The calendar showed that it was reported from the Committee on Claims. Here is a bill reported, and the calendar shows that it was reported from the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Military Affairs called it up. It is alleged to remove the charge of desertion, and yet it seems there was no desertion. I think we ought to have the gentleman explain, so that we will know what it is, briefly. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill is to remove the charge found by a court-martial against Lieut. Pelham for violating the rules of the commanding officer; not for desertion, but for issuing an order for two canteens of whisky.

Mr. LANGLEY. Was it Kentucky whisky? [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, that was done 50 years ago.

Mr. MANN. What became of the whisky? [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, according to the evidence, it was drunk by some men who were plastering a building for the people in the camp. The officer was recommended for clemency by every member of the board who tried him—or seven out of eight—but notwithstanding that recommendation the commanding officer approved of the finding.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DONOVAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOWARD. These men who were plastering this house were cold and wet, if I understood the gentleman to say before the committee?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. And this officer, out of the kindness of his heart, gave them these two little canteens of liquor, and they tried him and court-martialed him for that?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. That is enough. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I will not say to the gentleman from Connecticut that I desire a quorum present. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE GARDELLS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 1291, Private Calendar No. 138. That is the last one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of pension laws George Gardells shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as private in Company B, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, on the 19th day of April, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the various bills be reconsidered and laid aside.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JOHN S. M'KINNEY.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3192, waiving the age limit for appointment as cadet engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States in the case of John S. McKinney. It is No. 35 on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to any of these bills being considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. ALLEN. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. No. I do not propose to go into the merits of any particular proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish the gentleman would reserve his right to object.

Mr. MANN. I know that. That is the reason why I do not. I have no objection to the gentleman's particular bill, but I do object to this class of bills.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand, the Speaker ruled a few moments ago on the occasion of a bill to remove the charge of desertion. Are not cases on this calendar to remove desertions and grant pensions in order on this day? After the desertions have been exhausted and all other bills that have been covered by that rule, are not other bills in order?

The SPEAKER. Yes. You have to take them in order, as they come. You have to resolve the House into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and go down the line.

Mr. HOWARD. I wanted to understand if that was in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if anybody had raised a point of order against the last bill that was passed here, the Chair would have sustained it. But nobody raised the point.

Mr. LANGLEY. What was the matter with the bill?

The SPEAKER. It did not remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. LANGLEY. I raised that question privately with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], and he said it was on all fours with the other bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not raise it with the Chair, and it was not on all fours with the others.

Mr. KAHN. That was the one before the last one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is talking about the court-martial bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. AUSTIN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of illness.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION OF SEA-FISHERY INDUSTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 894).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In view of a provision of law contained in the deficiency act approved March 4, 1913, that—

Hereafter the Executive shall not extend or accept any invitation to participate in any international congress, conference, or like event without first having specific authority of law to do so.

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress and for its determination whether it will authorize the acceptance of the invitation and communication from the Secretary of State with regard to the invitation from the Government of the French Republic to that of the United States to be represented by a delegate at an International Exposition of Sea-Fishery Industries, to be held at Boulogne-sur-Mer from June 15 to October 1, 1914. It will be observed that the acceptance of this invitation will involve no special appropriation of money by the Government.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 9, 1914.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 10, "Mints and assay offices."

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we have not reached that point yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not now in order. The paragraph has not been read, as the Clerk advises me.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. The gentleman has the right to offer to insert it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk advises the Chair that he had already begun to read the paragraph. Does the gentleman desire to offer his amendment after the words "mints and assay offices"?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 10, page 63, as a new paragraph the following:
"Mint at Carson, Nev.: Assayer in charge, $1,800; chief clerk, $1,800; in all, $6,600.
"For wages of workmen and other employees, $5,000.
"For incidental and contingent expenses, $5,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who desire to offer amendments of a like nature be now permitted to offer them, and that all the amendments be pending. I do that with a view to expediting the consideration of the bill. Possibly we can agree upon time for debate upon all these amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how would it do to read down to "government in the Territories," on page 66, with the agreement that after being read an amendment may be offered to any portion of the bill between "mints and assay offices" and "government in the Territories"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I think we ought to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Clerk read from line 10, page 63, to line 16, page 66, and that then amendments may be offered to any portion of the bill thus read. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are some amendments that will be offered proposing to reinstate certain assay offices that have been omitted from this bill that are appropriated for in existing law. All I desire is the understanding that this portion of the bill shall be read as indicated by the gentleman from Illinois, and then that it shall be in order to offer these amendments and discuss them.

Mr. MANN. Yes; any germane amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That the bill, from line 10, page 63, to line 16, page 66, shall be considered as one paragraph, and that amendments may be offered to any portion of it after it is read.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not understand that the gentleman's request is to treat this as one paragraph.

Mr. MANN. So far as the reading of it is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the reading of it is concerned. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to inquire if it is understood that the right to interpose points of order will be preserved?

The CHAIRMAN. It will. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including rent of building, $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLARK of Florida). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. On page 64, in line 10, the bill carries a provision for $4,000 for an engraver. The statute provides for a salary of $3,000. I make a point of order against the provision because there is no authorization of law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, before I will either concede or deny that the point of order is well taken I ask that I may make a short statement.

I regret very much that in the consideration of this bill so many points of order have been raised against the salaries provided for in it. Many of these salaries were fixed by statute more than 50 years ago. In many cases there has been no legislation changing the legal salary, but Congress, by unanimous consent, so to speak, many years ago, on account of changed conditions, increased the appropriations. So from year to year these salaries were provided for, not in the sums fixed by the original law creating the offices, but in the sums carried in the previous appropriation bill.

Wherever this committee has increased a salary over what it was in the last bill we are ready and willing to explain to the committee why we made the change, but the committee did not feel it incumbent upon it to go back 20 or 30 or 40 years and inquire what induced the Congress to change the amount of the appropriation at that time. I think it very unfortunate that these salaries have not been adjusted and provided for by law. I hope that before this bill reaches its final stages and becomes a law we will be able to fix in this bill or some other separate bill the salaries of all the Government employees provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

We speak of these appropriations as "current" and "permanent." A permanent salary is one that has been fixed definitely by law. The appropriation bill shows upon its face that it is operative from the 1st day of July, 1914, until the 30th day of June, 1915. It therefore follows, Mr. Chairman, that if we appropriate for a given salary or a given office, it only provides for that salary or that office for that particular period of time unless the word "hereafter" is used in the clause, and then it becomes permanent law.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. A permanent law fixing a salary may be passed in a separate statute, or it may be a provision in the current appropriation bill, with the word "hereafter."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. If I could get the word "hereafter" used anywhere in this bill before it becomes the law, then that would apply to all these salaries, not only for the current year but until Congress should otherwise provide by law.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is so much confusion about it that I wish the gentleman would explain whether the salary that a Congressman receives to-day is provided for by permanent statute, or is it simply provided in the current appropriation bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is a statutory enactment.

Mr. MURDOCK. When was that law enacted?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That law became effective March 4, 1907.

Mr. MURDOCK. Was it passed as a separate statute?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was passed in an appropriation bill. An amendment came back from the Senate, and that amendment was agreed to with an amendment, which was in the form of a permanent law providing that—

On and after March 4, 1907, the salary of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress shall be.

Mr. MURDOCK. And it was the inclusion of the word "hereafter" which made it permanent law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was the using of the words "on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation shall be." When that law was enacted it did not apply to the Congress which enacted it, but only to succeeding Congresses.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have had a good many disputes at different times with people on that proposition as to just how that increase was made. Would a point of order have lain against that proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; a point of order would have been good against it if it had been proposed in the House of Representatives, but when the Senate amends a bill, no matter what the amendments may be, the House must consider those amendments. We may reject a Senate amendment or we may agree to it with an amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. And the law raising the salaries of Congressmen and Senators never was subject to a point of order in the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. Mr. Chairman, that is the difference between what is called a statutory salary and a salary provided for in current law.

There are many bureaus of the Government that are provided for by law, but the law creating this bureau did not provide for the force and fix the salaries. In cases of that kind the law carried in an appropriation bill is what we call the current law and the law that fixes the salaries. In other cases offices have been created from time to time, and at the time the office was created the salary was fixed. For instance, when the office of the Third Assistant Secretary of State was created the salary was fixed at $2,500. Long years ago Congress began to appropriate $4,500, and the committee in making up this bill brought it forward at $4,500.

Now, I hope that with this explanation of the action of the committee all members of the committee will understand the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations—that we have not attempted to raise salaries, that we have taken conditions as we find them. It is a bad system, which ought to be remedied by legislation. Wherever we have increased or reduced a salary we feel that we are subject to criticism if any criticism will lie, and we are perfectly willing to explain our action. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to occupy 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations. That he is an honorable gentleman, an able gentleman, and a high-minded, conscientious gentleman goes without saying. [Applause.] That every member of the committee is of equal integrity, honesty, and ability I have no doubt. [Applause.] I could not confer a higher compliment on any other group of Members in this House than is justly deserved by the members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that the irregularities in this bill as a whole is an inheritance and does not lie at the door of this committee alone, but at the door of the Committees on Appropriations for the last 50 years as well. It has been the custom to increase statutory salaries in the annual current appropriation bills without authority and against the plain provisions of the statute. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, that such conditions confront us, and I feel that it is our plain duty to right these wrongs at the earliest opportunity. It will require time and talent to classify and equalize the salaries of all the positions in the public service. The distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations has just stated on the floor of this House that it is the honest intention of the Committee on Appropriations to classify and equalize the salaries of the various officers and employees of this Government by separate bill in the House during this session or by doing so in the Senate; and relying implicitly upon the good faith of the statement of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, I feel that all that can be reached in the further consideration of this bill by points of order to other irregularities has already been accomplished by the emphasis which I have made by points of order against the irregularities in that part of the bill which has been read, and that they will be cured by the revision of salaries by the Committee on Appropriations, as indicated by its chairman.

The points of order which I have interposed against previous portions of this bill relate almost solely to an increase of salaries above statutory provisions. I did this because I regarded it as my duty to do so. I promised my people in my campaign that if I became their public servant my conduct in this great body should be clean. While I can not vote for this bill with any irregularities in it, yet, Mr. Chairman, I feel, in the light of the statement which the gentleman has made, that there will be an honest effort for the purpose of classifying and equalizing the salaries, and that I have done my duty. I trust that we may soon see all irregularities in appropriations eliminated and the door closed against graft of every kind in the public service.

Mr. Chairman, I can not allow one matter which is in the press this morning to go without comment. It is stated in the Washington Post of this morning that I cut out of this bill by points of order all of the provisions for collecting the income tax. Such statement is without foundation and without any reason whatever, because that provision has been approved by the committee, and the bill carries now $1,000,000 for the purpose of collecting the income tax.

I have never complained at press articles heretofore. I have been praised by them and I have been lambasted by them, but I have always regarded that the one is as good an advertisement as the other. For that reason I have never complained. I say to the newspapers of this country, whether they are owned or controlled by predatory wealth or whether they represent the plain people of the country: Go on, boys; do as you please. Public opinion will right the wrongs in our Government and take care of the people of this country for all time to come.

Mr. Chairman, in the light of the statement which the gentleman has made, and for the purpose of getting through with the duties of Congress, I withdraw the point of order, with the understanding, Mr. Chairman, that there will be a sincere, high-minded, conscientious effort made to right the wrongs which have been pointed out in the bill and as exist in other parts of the bill not pointed out. I feel that I have discharged my duty. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment pending may be withdrawn in order that I may offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the pending amendment be withdrawn that he may offer the following.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment does not state in what part of the bill it is to go.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On page 66, after line 15.

On page 66, after line 15, insert a separate paragraph, as follows:

"Whenever an appropriation has been or is specifically made by any general appropriation act for the annual salary or compensation of any office, officer, or employee, the amount so appropriated shall thereafter be the legal annual salary or compensation for such office, officer, or employee, beginning with the fiscal year or other period for which such appropriation is made, whether less or greater than the annual salary or compensation theretofore provided by law and shall be so received by the person occupying such position."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that proposition. What is the object of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It seeks to make the salaries in the current law proper in this bill without being subject to points of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, if I remember rightly, and I think I do, a great many of these supply bills carry appropriations in words to the effect that the salary of a particular office shall be so much per year, but while the present occupant holds the office there shall be so much additional. Does this cover that in as permanent law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; that is legislation for a particular individual, and not for somebody who may come after him.

Mr. MANN. It would be only an amount additional while he held the office.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would it be permanent law for that period?

Mr. MANN. It would be permanent law as long as he held the office for the next appropriation act. In other words, under this amendment, if the office carried a salary of $3,000 and $500 additional while the present occupant holds the office, that would be in order next year on the bill, if the same man still holds the office.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman not reserve his point of order?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible by legislative statute to fix the salaries of officials in the Government service all the way down the line. It is impossible for various reasons. One is that it becomes necessary at times to increase or decrease a salary. Of course we can decrease the salary as we want to. Another reason is that in the growth of the Government service we keep adding officials, and every one familiar with legislation in the House knows that appropriation bills have the right of way and have to be considered, and it is impossible by legislative bills to bring in provisions to create 500 or 5,000 offices and fix the salaries for the same. So it is perfectly evident that practically the only way in which we can make provision for the ordinary offices of the Government service is through the appropriation acts. Most of these provisions are subject to a point of order, because there is no legislative provision outside of the appropriation act for the creation of the office in the first place.

When this particular bill was under consideration a number of years ago, at one time two gentlemen of the House started in to take everything out of it. Nearly everything did go out of it for a while. Those gentlemen showed at that time, as has been shown within the last few days, the impossibility of the House itself legislating and making appropriations except practically by unanimous consent, if anybody desired for any reason at all to make the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COX. If the proposed amendment be adopted, it will be permanent law.

Mr. MANN. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. COX. I wish the gentleman, in connection with that inquiry, would inform the committee whether or not if the amendment be adopted it will apply to employees appropriated for in the other appropriation bills, or does it apply only to employees carried in this bill?

Mr. MANN. We come now to the proposition of whether there is any legislative method by which Congress can give itself the right to provide for these offices, without such a change of the rules as will prevent men making points of order on matters where a point of order ought to be made, or will prevent their reserving points of order. What does this proposed amendment seek to do? It simply proposes that if Congress last year or this year makes an appropriation for an office providing a salary for it specifically, it shall be in order—that is what it amounts to—next year to consider that item. If this amendment becomes a law this year, then an appropriation, whether in this bill or any other appropriation bill, fixing an office at such a salary is to be considered as the law next year. Of course, it is the law for the current year. As soon as an appropriation act becomes a law, there is a law for the current year for the office and the salary. Years ago we reached the conclusion that where the salary was not permanently fixed, and it was by arbitrary ruling of the Chairman and has been followed ever since, we would consider the salary fixed in the current law. The effect of this amendment is that each successive year the law of the previous year fixing an office and a salary shall be considered a warrant for doing it again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of practice it only brings it before the House. If we fix an office and a salary in this year's law at $5,000, and it be changed in the next year's law, then the next year's law remains the law until it is changed. It merely gives the House a chance to consider the proposition under the rules of the House. Of course, as a matter of fact, when we provide for one of these offices—say, the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, at a certain salary, on which a point of order was made yesterday—the amount we fix is the law for the current year; but under the rules of the House—and I doubt whether there is any way of changing the rules without depriving Members of the rights which they ought to have—that office, so far at least as two of the salaries are concerned, not being provided for by specific law, is subject to the point of order. Anyone can make that point of order, and the House then, if the point be made, has no chance to consider the proposition. Under the proposed amendment, if it becomes a law, the House will have a chance to consider the matter. It will not authorize an increase in salary. An increase in the salary would still be subject to a point of order. The House might still decrease the salary; and if decreased, that would be the law for the next year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And in that connection I would suggest to the gentleman that it would be in the power of the House to abolish the office.

Mr. MANN. Oh, entirely.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It would give the House absolute control of the situation at any time.

Mr. MANN. Entirely; and if abolished, it would go out of the law.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The statement has been made here within the last few days that points of order from session to session have been made against increases in salaries, where the statute provided a lower salary, and that in nearly every instance the salary which went out on a point of order was restored in the Senate, and that consequently all of the time devoted to the matter in the House was wasted.

Mr. MANN. That is correct. That has always been the experience of the House ever since I have been a Member of it. For instance, in this bill we have stricken out of the bill entirely the provision for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the paragraph for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the paragraph for the Life-Saving Service, so far as general officers are concerned. Of course we know they will either be restored here by unanimous consent or they will be restored in the Senate. We have got a very complex proposition. Under the rules a point of order, being good against an office that is not provided for by law, may be made against an office, although it has been in existence for 50 years, because the rules do not contemplate that the appropriation act itself is the law beyond the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made. Now, the rules could easily be changed, but if you change the rules and cut out the right to make points of order against new legislation or against matter which is not authorized by law, you would deprive Members of a very useful privilege in the House, and one of frequent use and very much in the interest of the public service. Now, my friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] asked a while ago if this House would make permanent law where you provided an increase of salary in some place while the present occupant held the office. Take for instance—I think it is still carried—our very efficient clerk to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not remember now, but I think we made an extra provision while the present occupant held the office. If this provision went into the law this year, he would be paid the $3,000 or $4,000 and the $500 or $1,000 extra while the present occupant held the office, and that item in that form would be in next year's appropriation bill if the same person held the office. You do not have to make the appropriation unless you desire to, but it would be in order; and while on that subject it is sometimes a good deal cheaper for the Government and probably more efficient in the service to increase——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Just one moment—to increase the salary temporarily while the present occupant holds it than it is to increase it permanently, so that the new man who comes in shortly after the other man gets the same salary of the very efficient man who went out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Kansas make the point of order, or has he been convinced?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order. As I have observed the operations of the House, Mr. Chairman, there are two kinds of salary appropriations. One is permanent law and the other is current law. Wherever the appropriation is made in keeping with the provisions of permanent law no point of order lies, but where the committee exceeds the amount provided for by the statute a point of order does lie. In a service here extending over 10 years I have seen on two occasions committees meet some hardship because of that provision in the rules. Years ago the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Prince, made such a fight, if I remember correctly, upon the military appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. On this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have always believed it was made on the military appropriation bill, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Go ahead.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The moving cause on that occasion on the part of one gentleman who took that course grew out of a bill before the Committee on Military Affairs, but the points of order were made upon the legislative bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Whatever the motive a great number of years have passed since there have been any disturbances of that kind here in the Committee of the Whole. This legislative, executive, and judicial bill has never had hard sledding before in the experience of the gentleman from South Carolina. Until now it has had the ordinary course that an appropriation bill usually follows. This year the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has challenged each item which exceeded the statutory amount, and he was entirely within his rights in doing so. He did delay the bill. But we are now half through with it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], who is not here now, made a statement that he had ceased to make these points of order, and having made that statement he retired from the Chamber; and I take it that he does not intend to make any further points of order against increases over permanent law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I just want to remind the gentleman that he made that statement with the expressed understanding that some provision either of this kind, or in a separate bill, would be adopted.

Mr. MURDOCK. That does not, however, go to the point I am making. This bill, as has been the case with appropriation bills in scores of instances before, will probably go on through the Committee of the Whole now without any very serious obstruction. But if you pass this amendment you make a change of great importance in the practice here. And I say seriously, there is not 2 per cent of the men now present who know what is in the amendment and what it accomplishes, let alone the entire membership of this House. This amendment here attempts to make a permanent change in the rules of the House when there is not a quorum present in the Committee of the Whole, when there are less than 100 men here. The total membership of the House is 435. Now, I do not know how serious the impairment the amendment offered would work to the rights of Members here. It certainly would infringe materially the right of each individual Member, because it covers in every item in this bill and makes it, for at least one year's time, permanent law. I do not think a matter of this kind and of this moment should be disposed of with dispatch and with this small attendance, and I propose to make the point of order, and I hope it will lie.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will.

Mr. MANN. It is the most expensive point of order the gentleman can make.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not yield to the gentleman from Illinois, and I call the gentleman from Illinois to order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa, that there is no disposition on my part to delay this House, and in my experience in the House I do not think that I have delayed the House one-hundredth part of the time that the gentleman from Illinois has.

Has my time expired, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MANN. It expired some time ago.

Mr. MURDOCK. I can, I suppose, in order, without being interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], out of order, make a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] make the point of order or reserve the point of order?

Mr. MURDOCK. I made the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One moment. I hope the gentleman will permit me to make a brief statement. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] undertake to protect me from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if I would like to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not protect anybody but myself, and I have a lot of trouble doing that, Mr. Chairman. If the gentleman wishes to ask a question, I will yield to him.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to yield to the gentleman from New York if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me——

Mr. FITZGERALD. One moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Does the gentleman from Kansas reserve the point of order at the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. MURDOCK. Conditionally. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield to me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, if I am not——

Mr. FITZGERALD. He can not make terms with me.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to make the point of order or reserve it. And after it is reserved the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] can make it at any time.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have made the point of order once, Mr. Chairman, and I now renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. FITZGERALD. What amendment was offered by the gentleman from Nevada?

Mr. MANN. Let us go ahead with the other matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] desire recognition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; not just at present.

Mr. MANN. I would like to make a suggestion. There are a number of these amendments to be offered on both sides of the House with reference to assay offices, and so forth. Could we not agree upon length of debate in the committee so that we will know about it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. We want about an hour and 10 minutes. That time will be divided up mostly in 5-minute speeches, and a few 10-minute speeches.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You mean an hour and 10 minutes on that side?

Mr. MANN. Yes; including the gentlemen on that side of the House who wish to support the amendment, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] also.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. We would like to have the amendments voted on as they are offered, however.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not believe we will occupy more than 10 minutes on this side of the House.

Mr. MANN. I do not care how much time the gentleman may occupy if he will yield an hour and 10 minutes to some one on this side to yield to those Members whom I have on the list here. I do not want to control the time. I suppose the amendments will be offered in alphabetical order, probably, and separately, and then the amendments can be voted on as they come along, without further debate, and the time for debate be fixed only.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Did I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to say he wanted the hour in favor of the amendments?

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen desire this length of time, which makes an hour: Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, 10 minutes—this is not the order in which they are—Mr. SMITH of Idaho, 10 minutes; Mr. FRENCH, 10 minutes, Mr. JOHNSON of Utah, 5 minutes; Mr. HOWELL, 5 minutes; Mr. BRYAN, 5 minutes; Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada, 5 minutes; Mr. EVANS, 5 minutes; Mr. MONDELL, 5 minutes; and I have not the length of time the gentleman from Washington, Mr. HUMPHREY, wants.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Those gentlemen will occupy about 50 minutes?

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen whose names I have read will occupy 60 minutes, I understand, and then there will be 10 minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on these amendments with respect to the assay offices be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled——

Mr. MANN. One hour and 10 minutes, if you please.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One hour and 10 minutes, to be controlled by whom?

Mr. MANN. Anyone who will take charge of it. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is on the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One hour and 10 minutes to be controlled by myself, if I see fit to use it.

Mr. MANN. With this understanding, that these amendments will be offered and debated by the gentlemen who are in favor of them, and by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], if he desires, against them, and then the vote taken upon the amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly. In other words, each side will have 1 hour and 10 minutes for debate, if it cares to use it.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina now submit his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on all the amendments restoring the mints and assay offices be limited to an hour and 10 minutes in favor of the amendments and to a like period of time against them, if I see fit to use the time—the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to control the time in favor of the assay offices, and I to control the time against them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the debate on all amendments seeking to restore mints and assay offices be limited to 2 hours and 20 minutes, 1 hour and 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and 1 hour and 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] himself.

Mr. MANN. That is, with the understanding that the amendments are to be offered and voted upon as we go along.

The CHAIRMAN. With the understanding that the amendments shall be offered and voted upon as we proceed. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that these amendments are to be voted on exactly as we go along and thereafter the debate on them is to be closed?

Mr. MANN. Yes. If we stated we would have 2 hours and 10 minutes' debate here, there would not be anybody in the Hall within 15 minutes. The fact is that the gentlemen who want to be heard on these propositions want to be heard by the Members of the House; and I suppose that what the committee does in one case will probably be done in the other cases, although there may be some special advantages in one case over another.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be recognized now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member of this House who has a higher regard for the personnel of the Committee on Appropriations than myself. I realize something of the work which they have to perform, and I realize how diligently they have gone about it. But I believe that in failing to make an appropriation for the mints and assay offices in the West they have striven to economize along the lines where they did not fully understand conditions in order that they might make appropriations along the lines with which they were more familiar.

We do not ask these assay offices in the West for the purpose of keeping men in office. We do not do so for the purpose of bringing money into the Government Treasury. We do so for the purpose of keeping assay offices open to the miners of the West and to promote a great industry. In the assay office at Carson City there were over 800 different deposits made during the last fiscal year. Why, the State of Nevada has produced, gentlemen, something like a billion and a half dollars of gold and silver for this country since it was admitted into the Union. Where is there another State that can come forward with such figures? And yet members of the Committee on Appropriations bring in here bills for appropriations to erect monuments to the memory of dead men. [Laughter.] You can not walk around the great city of Washington without bumping into monuments on all sides.

I do not believe you should throw aside a great industry like the mining industry and at the same time erect your monuments. If you have any monuments to erect, erect them after you have provided for the industries that need protection. I do not object to going ahead and erecting a monument in behalf of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and John Ericsson and those others. It is all right. But let us legislate for the industries first. You spend thousands of dollars to go out and catch bugs. You spend thousands of dollars to send men down to South America and elsewhere abroad to find out agricultural and trade conditions. At the same time what are you doing for the workingmen out in the West?

Take it in Carson City, where I live. There you have an assay office. First it was a mint. You destroyed that. Then you made it an assay office, and now the Treasury Department has so hampered the officials in that office that they can not handle the money that would come in there if they had proper guards there to protect it.

Look at our State to-day. It is the greatest silver-producing State in the Union. Still we have to send our products to Denver and San Francisco. Why cry over the expenditure of the few thousand dollars necessary to maintain that assay office? Why, the money we are asking for and which you refuse to appropriate to us for the mining industry would not buy gasoline for the automobiles that are used here to-day by the "great commoners" and "economists." [Laughter.] Why, it would not buy gasoline for your Democratic Members who are in favor of economy.

Gentlemen, I say it is a mistake, and I say it not only with reference to the assay office in my own State, but I say it also in behalf of every other assay office. We ought to have more of them. I am glad you left poor old New Orleans something. You made a little provision for her. I am glad you did. This matter is not sectional with me. I am glad also that you took care of some of these other States. But do not forget Nevada. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, is it desired to use any more time on that amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. Not on that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, these assay offices perform no governmental function. They simply furnish a market to people who are engaged in gold mining. In other words, a person who has bullion to sell can carry it to an assay office, the Government pays him for it, and then the Government bears the expense of transporting it to the Treasury in Washington or to some mint.

We have a Bureau of Mines. We endeavor to encourage mining. We expend large sums of money to help people to study the mining industry. But the only people who are provided with a governmental market for their products are the people who produce gold bullion. Assay offices relieve owners of bullion from paying transportation charges to the mints.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right at that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much these transportation charges amount to on the part of the Government from these various assay offices, either to the United States mints or to the United States Treasury, per year, or approximately the amount?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have here figures for Carson City. The expenses of operating the Carson City Mint were $14,160.53. The earnings of that office were $3,072.10. The freight upon the bullion which they shipped was $1,103.13.

Mr. COX. The Government, lost, then, upward of $11,000 last year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The loss was between ten and eleven thousand dollars. I have made the calculation hurriedly.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, gentlemen, you understand that every mint is an assay office. Any person who has gold bullion to sell can send it to the mint at Denver or San Francisco or Philadelphia, and the Government will assay it and pay him for it. I repeat, these assay offices serve as markets where miners sell their bullion, and the Government pays the cost of transporting the bullion from the assay office to the mint.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Is it not a fact that the Government of the United States, especially in the last few years, has been aiming to abolish all of these assay offices, and has it not even gone so far as to try to do away with the San Francisco Mint? And is it not a further fact that Congress did not make appropriations enough to allow the Goldfield mines in my district, the richest in this country, to send their money to Carson, where it can be properly protected? You made an appropriation of $2,000 or $3,000——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, if the gentleman wants to ask a question, let him ask it. I did not yield to him to make a speech. The gentleman has had his own time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. It is all a part of my question. I put a question mark after it now. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we have not tried to abolish all the mints and assay offices. We have never tried to abolish Philadelphia or Denver. We never tried to abolish San Francisco as an assay office, and we made a mistake in trying to abolish it as a mint. If we had not had that provision in the bill, we would have carried it through.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman has stated the earnings of the office at Carson as compared with the receipts. Will the gentleman kindly enlighten the committee as to the earnings at New Orleans in comparison with the receipts, inasmuch as the committee are retaining New Orleans in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are discussing Carson City now.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I know; but I am asking the gentleman about New Orleans.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When we get to New Orleans we will discuss it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This is an opportune time to furnish the committee with the information.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have not stricken New Orleans from the bill because the Director of the Mint has said he needed it, but he has said he did not need the others at all. Let me tell you. At Carson City they handled $735,000 worth of bullion at a cost to the Government of $14,160, and the Government paid the transportation on the bullion from Carson City to San Francisco or Denver or Philadelphia, wherever it was necessary to send it.

Gentlemen, these assay offices do not perform any governmental function. Let us do away with them.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman inquired as to whether there were any others who desired to speak on this amendment I did not know of anyone, but the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] desires to be heard on this particular amendment. I realize that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has the right to close the debate, but I should like to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] if the gentleman from South Carolina does not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have no objection. I do not care how you use your time.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to agree with what the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] has said in regard to the mint at Carson City. It is but a short distance from the large territory adjoining California that is very productive in gold and silver. A great part of our product goes to the Carson City Mint, particularly that on the east side of the mountains, and from there over the ridge to San Francisco. In fact, Carson City is a convenient place to handle the business, and it has been a very valuable Government function in the mining territory that has produced so much wealth for this country in times of need and stress, and to-day it is an aid to the operation of those mines. Everybody familiar with that country is clearly in favor of developing the mines and in seeing that they produce the greatest possible output, and that the bullion, washings, and meltings may be disposed of at these assay offices.

The small producers take their little amounts of $50, $100, and $200 worth of mineral to the assay office. It is deposited there. They get their checks upon the United States subtreasury at San Francisco or elsewhere, and the assay office is a place where the small miner may exchange his product and advance the interests of the country around him, as well as the country generally. I believe that Congress ought not to do away with these assay offices. You ought not to give these prospectors and miners less opportunity than you give to so many other people in this country. In giving them a place where they can dispose of their product no one is injured, and it adds that much to the wealth of the country, and aids in the distribution of money and in the development of the country. The retention of this assay office at Carson City is detrimental to no one, but is an advantage not only to Nevada but to California. It is not only an advantage to the Western States, but to every State and every individual in this country, and instead of curtailing these assay offices, it seems to me, we ought to extend them. You ought not to handicap this industry when you are encouraging and advancing others. You spend millions upon rivers and harbors, to give cheaper transportation to the people, so that they may get cheaper and better articles; but when it comes to a product that goes all over the world, you say we ought to put a handicap upon it and begin to close down, to shrink, to tie up this industry. Instead of doing that you ought to develop it still further. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as a statement of the Treasury Department in the hearings, says that this appropriation ought to be allowed. On page 305 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the Director of the Mint says:

> If these offices are to be maintained at all, the appropriations should be sufficient for the employment of competent assayers and helpers to safely and promptly care for the bullion. The assayers are authorized to buy all of the gold bullion offered and to draw checks on the Treasury of the United States in payment therefor. This is an important responsibility, and should only be trusted with men of technical ability and substantial character. The estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1914 are made upon the lowest possible basis consistent with the proper administration of these offices.

He goes on and recites the efforts of Congress to abolish these offices, states in his report that they are necessary, estimates for the amount, and then states that they should be properly provided for.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this House has gone on record heretofore on the question of abolishing these assay offices. If my memory serves me correctly, a year ago there were not over half a dozen or a dozen votes against the proposition to abolish them. The Senate placed them back in the bill, and in conference between the House and the Senate the appropriations were greatly reduced. The gentleman from South Carolina has referred to the fact that there is not an assay office in existence to-day, outside of those where mints are in operation and possibly the Seattle office, that is not costing the Government to-day more money than it brings in by way of earnings.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For a question.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does that statement apply to the assay office in New York City?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it does not.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I think the gentleman will find that it does. I think if he looks at the record he will see that it runs behind $75,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is an entirely different reason why the assay office should be maintained in New York City. The same argument will not apply to New York City that applies to the assay offices in the interior of the country. As a matter of fact, the Director of the Mint stated that not only ought the assay office to be in New York, but that if the mint was not already located in Philadelphia the mint should be there also.

Now, as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada with reference to Carson City. The value of the gold and silver deposits in 1913 was only a little over $735,000. The earnings were $3,072 and the expenses to the people of this country were $14,160.55. Now, what real good does an assay office perform, so far as the people are concerned? It is nothing more nor less than a convenience and saving to those who mine the gold; it saves them the expense of paying the cost of carrying the bullion to the mint.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Is it not a fact that mining is an industry and that the Agricultural Department in this country costs the Government a good deal of money?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman talks about what the Government ought to do for the miners. The Government is spending more than $662,000 every year for the benefit of the miners—not the corporations which mine the gold, but for the benefit of the men that work and dig in the mines. So when the gentleman undertakes to say that this appropriation is for the benefit of the miner, I deny the proposition. It is for the benefit of the gold-mining corporations in most cases, because the Director of the Mint stated, with reference to one of these assay offices, that five-sixths of the gold mined in the vicinity of that office was mined by one great gold corporation. I refer particularly to the office at Deadwood, S. Dak.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Taking the assay office and the mint together, does not the Government come out the better by $500,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman takes the assay offices and the mints together; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that they are wholly separate and distinct, and it is hardly fair for the gentleman to favor maintaining the Carson assay office merely because the mints at Denver and Philadelphia and San Francisco bring in a great profit to the Government by way of seignorage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 29 and noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to report my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by inserting as a new paragraph, after line 7, page 66, the following:
> "Assay office at Boise, Idaho: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all $4,700. For wages of workmen and other employees, $3,000; for incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have offered this amendment in the language of the estimates for the assay office at Boise, Idaho. It is my judgment that the estimate is short of that which the office really should require, but in view of the fact that the committee has cut the office entirely from the bill, I have deemed it best to offer an amendment in the language of the estimates that the department has made. For several years the Committee on Appropriations of the House has endeavored to abolish the assay office at Boise and other assay offices in the country, and as regularly the Congress has emphasized its opinion that these assay offices ought to be maintained by reinserting them in the bill.

I think it was about two years ago that the committee reported a bill abolishing not only the assay offices that the committee now proposes to abolish, but, as well, proposing to abolish the offices at Seattle, San Francisco, and New Orleans. These are States represented by large delegations on the floor of the House. The assay offices that you now propose to abolish are represented by States that have from one Member on the floor, as the case of Nevada, that we have just considered, to three from the State of South Dakota. The other States all have a representation here of but two Members. The idea is suggested by a member of the committee that these assay offices must be abolished in the interest of economy, because they do not pay the operating expenses. Go, if you please, to the assay office in New Orleans, and there we find that the assay office is being operated at a greater loss to the Government than the loss in the assay office at Boise, and yet the committee says, "Well and good, we will retain that office, but we will abolish the office in Boise." Go to the New York assay office, and that is maintained only a few hours' travel from the mint at Philadelphia, and yet there is an assay office maintained at a loss to the Government of $25,000 annually. Yet you say that a different condition obtains there than in my State. New York has the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. New York has a large delegation on the floor of this House, and Idaho has but two Members and not a Member upon that committee. I shall not suggest that there has been expediency in planning and retaining in the bill several assay offices, including the one at New Orleans.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. For a question.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made a statement in respect to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, with reference to the abolition of the assay offices. The very first assay office to be abolished was in my State, and I happen to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman will hardly compare the returns to that office—the amount of bullion placed there to be assayed—with the bullion in the office in my State or in any other State of the West.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; nor would the expenses incurred be at such great variance in reference to the receipts as they are in the gentleman's State.

Mr. FRENCH. That is probably true; but they handle a very small amount of bullion in North Carolina, and the expense necessarily would be much less.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In answer to that statement, the State of North Carolina produces more gold than any State east of the Rocky Mountains, and Charlotte had as good a case as is the gentleman's, or as possibly any other assay office in the West.

Mr. FRENCH. And after all, that assay office, or the locality around there that produces gold, is not far away from Philadelphia. In my State the assay office is situated in Boise, a distance of a thousand miles from Denver, a distance of some thousand miles from Seattle or from San Francisco. It is situated in the heart of a district that last year brought to the office to be assayed upward of $1,000,000 of bullion.

The statement made a few moments ago by a member of the committee that the assay offices are maintained in the interest of the big gold companies does not hold true in my State, least of all. In that State there were separate deposits of nearly 1,000 last year, and of the entire amount of upward of $1,000,000 of bullion deposited, 90 per cent was deposited by those who brought less than $1,000 each. More than 95 per cent was deposited by those who brought less than $2,000, and only 5 per cent deposited by producers who produced in excess of $2,000, if you will count those who, through convenience, placed their deposits in the hands of some merchant or some one in the locality to send to the office at Boise.

Gentlemen of the House, you are appropriating millions of dollars annually for the encouragement of other industries and for the encouragement of many of the resources of this country. Mention was made a few moments ago of the paltry sum of a little over a quarter of a million dollars which has been appropriated for the encouragement and betterment of the mining industries. Turn to the Agricultural appropriation bill and there you will find $400,000 appropriated in the last bill which was passed for the eradication of the cattle tick in the Southern States. For the investigation of the dairy industry there was appropriated $250,000. For an experiment station a few miles from this city you appropriated $16,500—more than it costs to operate the assay office in my State. There is a total of two and a quarter million dollars appropriated for the animal industry department. Go next to plant industry. You will find there for the investigation of certain diseases, for the control of orchard pests, etc., an expenditure of thousands of dollars. For the control of the boll weevil in the South, $378,000—a total in that one department alone of upward of $3,000,000. For the Bureau of Entomology there was appropriated $850,000, and for the Biological Survey, $230,000. You can go through the Agricultural Department and you will find these generous appropriations—appropriations that ought to be made—but I submit that we should be as jealous of the mining industry of this country and encourage it even as we encourage the agricultural industry.

We are appropriating millions of dollars for the improvement of our rivers and harbors, and why? Because it means convenience to the people living along the river. It does not net the Government any profit. If you rest your appropriations upon the basis of profits to this Government as a government, considering the Treasury of the United States as a receptacle of those profits, you would not appropriate for the Agricultural Department and you would not appropriate for the improvement of rivers and harbors, nor for the Post Office Department, nor many of the departments that are maintained for the pure convenience of the people alone. Here is a section of country that is accommodated by an assay office. The people, as I have indicated, who bring their bullion there represent the small producers. They are people who, if required to send their bullion to the mints at Denver or San Francisco or other points, would be required to handle bullion by bringing it to the banker or some business man, who would necessarily for his own protection have to make a charge for conducting that business. As it is, the bullion is handled largely in my section of the country as a matter of convenience on the part of the business man extended to his customers. Abolish the assay office, and you will need to place the handling of bullion on a strictly business basis, and these producers, hardy men as they are of the western country, men who are laying the foundations for still greater development, will be required to go to those who act as middlemen and pay them something for their work and the responsibility they assume in sending the bullion produced to the big mints of the country. I appeal to the House to continue this great convenience for the accommodation of the people I represent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Carolina have more than one speaker on this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is all.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I desire to enter my earnest protest against the action of the Committee on Appropriations in eliminating from this bill the provisions for the assay offices in the Rocky Mountain country, and while I speak especially for Boise I think they all should be retained.

Mr. Chairman, it is the policy of every civilized country to offer every encouragement toward the development of the material resources within its borders, and the United States is no exception to the rule. For that reason the Government in the early history of the western country sent expeditions at great expense across the continent to discover its extent and its agricultural and mineral possibilities with a view of bringing to the attention of the people of the country the opportunities which that section offered. Among these expeditions authorized by the Government was the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1804–1806, the Bonneville expedition in 1831–1833, and the expedition of Gen. Frémont, in 1843–44.

After the discovery of gold in California, in 1848, thousands of hardy, adventurous men in the eastern country flocked to the Pacific coast. Many of them struck out into the interior of the country on prospecting tours, and some of them located valuable gold and silver deposits in the Rocky Mountain States. With a view of encouraging these prospectors the Government established several assay offices, most of which have been in successful operation for over 40 years, and which aided materially in the rapid development of the mineral resources of the western country by affording a convenient place for the prospectors and miners to secure the exact value of the gold ore which they were able to locate and extract.

It is now proposed on the part of some of our eastern Representatives who are evidently unacquainted with the western country and the importance of encouraging the development of its mineral resources to abandon these offices by withholding the appropriation for their continuance.

The only objection which has been urged against continuing this appropriation is that these offices are not quite self-sustaining. If that argument were applied to every appropriation, many of the bureaus of the Government could not remain in existence.

It has always been the policy of the Government to deliver the United States mail to any point where there was a comparatively small settlement, with a view of encouraging the people to strike out into the frontier. In many sections of the Rocky Mountain country every piece of mail that is delivered costs the Government many times the amount of postage required. In the remote sections of Alaska it is authoritatively stated that each letter costs $2 to deliver, and yet no one seriously objects to this expenditure. If this liberal policy had not been pursued by the Government, many of the settlements in the remote sections would have been abandoned, as civilized people insist on having open communication with the outside world.

In order to remind the House of what is being done to encourage the development of the resources of the country in other directions, attention is invited to the following appropriations authorized in the Agricultural appropriation bill as it passed the House. I am heartily in favor of all of these appropriations, believing that the money is well expended and that great benefits will result from the service to be rendered the various lines of industry which it is proposed that these appropriations shall benefit.

United States Weather Bureau Service	$1,668,270
Bureau of Animal Industry	2,245,026
Bureau of Plant Industry	2,320,455
Purchase and distribution of seed	257,000
Bureau of Chemistry	1,076,481
Investigation of soils	359,235
Bureau of Entomology	450,370
Prevention of the spread of moths	207,540
Investigations relating to the habits of birds, animals, etc.	230,090
Bureau of Crop Estimates	274,180
Office of Experiment Stations	1,901,020
Office of Markets	200,000
Experiments in production of live stock in the cane-sugar and cotton districts	50,000

None of these appropriations are reimbursable. We hear of no arguments against these expenditures on the ground that the various bureaus are not self-sustaining. They are intended to advance the general welfare of the people of the country at large, with special reference to the best interests of those who earn their living through the cultivation of the soil. There are many other similar appropriations made annually for the benefit of the people. We expend thousands of dollars in the employment of special agents and business experts who traverse nearly all the civilized countries to study trade relations with a view of widening our export trade.

Large appropriations are made in the employment of hundreds of physicians in the Marine-Hospital Service who cooperate with other members of their profession in combating various diseases. We have constantly employed at a large expense agricultural experts who are scattered all over the country, especially in the Southern States, delivering lectures to the farmers and assisting them in getting the largest possible returns from the cultivation of the soil. This money is all well expended for the general good of the Nation, but none of it comes directly back to the Treasury.

Why should you demand that the assay offices throughout the western country, which are almost self-sustaining, be discontinued? Why should not the prospector and miner be afforded a convenient market for his products as well as the farmer, the horticulturist, or the stock raiser?

It seems to me, in view of the fact that the prospector and miner incurs a much greater risk than those engaged in the other industries mentioned, that he should have special consideration. He may work an entire season with his pick and shovel without any remuneration. In his efforts to locate pay ore he risks his health and his life in traversing the mountains, frequently alone and hundreds of miles from civilization, depending upon the food he can carry with him or the game he may be able to kill for sustenance. But for his defiance of the elements, his fortitude, and his intrepidity millions of dollars which have found their way into the wealth of this country would still be in the bowels of the earth. It would be more sensible, in my opinion, to offer him an incentive by a direct appropriation double the value of the gold which he may extract, rather than to discourage him by not providing markets for the results of his toil.

These assay offices are in existence to-day because of a law placed upon the statute books nearly a half century ago authorizing and defining their functions. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it is unfair to attempt to put them out of existence by withholding the necessary appropriation for conducting them. If it is honestly believed that they should be abandoned, why do you not introduce a bill providing for their abandonment and have it regularly considered by the Committee on Mines and Mining, which, under the rules of this House, has all matters in charge affecting the mineral resources of the country, when an opportunity would be afforded those who are really advised in regard to the necessity of continuing these offices to appear before the committee and submit arguments, which I am sure would appeal to those who are not prejudiced.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it is no part of the functions of the Committee on Appropriations to arbitrarily attempt to abandon these offices, which are regularly authorized by existing statutes. It is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations that this law be practically repealed by withholding the necessary appropriations to continue these offices in effect. The Committee on Mines and Mining is largely composed of western men, who are fully advised in regard to all matters affecting the mineral resources of the country, while the Committee on Appropriations, having this bill in charge, has but one member from west of the Missouri River.

It is not right, it is not fair, to proceed in this manner, and you are not observing that degree of consistency in regard to the best interests of the country which should characterize every Member of this body.

It is rather singular, Mr. Chairman, that it is proposed to continue the assay office at New Orleans, at an expenditure of $19,969.60, while the earnings are only $3,704.60. This office is described in the law as a "mint," for the purpose, evidently, of making it appear that there are reasons for its continuance which do not apply to the continuance of offices in the Rocky Mountain country, regardless of the fact that no minting has been done at New Orleans since July 1, 1911. It is, as everyone knows, hundreds of miles from the mineral section of the country producing the precious metals.

If it were proposed to abandon that office, I venture to say that every Member of Congress from that section of the country would arise in protest, and yet there appears to be no more reason for its existence than those it is proposed to abandon.

Is there a single Member here who would not oppose the curtailment of the appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry, the Bureau of Plant Industry, the Office of Markets, for experimenting in the production of live stock in the cane-sugar and cotton-raising districts, or for the eradication of the boll weevil? Why, then, should you not be willing to extend to the mining States the small consideration which we are demanding in connection with the retention of these assay offices?

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the mints and assay offices throughout the country are a source of profit to the Government when taken collectively, as the seigniorage represents an income of nearly $5,000,000 per annum over expenditures. The assay offices throughout the country gather up the silver and gold and it is concentrated at the mints, just as the mail is gathered up at the small post offices for the larger cities.

If the plan suggested by the committee were to be followed out with reference to the Post Office Department, you would be abandoning thousands of offices where the expense of carrying and distributing the mail does not equal the receipts, and have the mail handled only at the larger towns and cities where it can be handled at a profit.

In view of the fact that the gold supply was $5,000,000 less last year than the previous year, it is certainly a wise thing to do to offer every encouragement to the prospectors and miners to continue their explorations into the mineral sections with a view of finding new prospects and developing new mines. I feel confident that if the members of the Committee on Appropriations who insist on abandoning these offices were to make a careful study of the effect of their action upon the prosperity of the country by personally visiting the mining States, they would not, in order to save a few thousand dollars per annum, strike this cruel blow to the mineral industry of the country at large and the Rocky Mountain States in particular.

Mr. Chairman, the people of my country feel very deeply in regard to the question of abandoning these assay offices, and, as an indication of their interest in the matter, I desire to call attention to the fact that at a recent convention, held at Boise, Idaho, by the members of the Idaho Mining Association, strong resolutions were adopted urging the support and maintenance of these assay offices in the mining States, which I will submit for your consideration. [Applause.]

The commercial clubs of the State have also given the matter careful consideration, and have passed resolutions urging that these offices be continued, some of which are as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Idaho Mining Association in convention at Boise, Idaho.

Whereas it is a permanent and well-established policy of the United States Government to assist in the development of the natural resources of the country; and

Whereas the wisdom of this action is proven beyond all doubt by the upbuilding and establishment of the greatest Nation and the most progressive Government; and

Whereas in the aforesaid development and assistance our Government is now appropriating and expending millions of dollars in extending and perfecting the agricultural production. In fact, the Agricultural Department was established for the sole purpose of the betterment and increasing the products of the soil; and further, many millions are appropriated every year for the assistance, comfort, and protection of the citizens of the whole country; and

Whereas the mining of the precious metals is one of the most necessary and important industries of the United States, because it produces the basic value of wealth and the medium of circulation which is the life of all business transactions; and

Whereas the forerunner and pioneer of all mining development is the rugged and worthy prospector, who endures the hardships and who reaps such a small reward for his labor, and who gives more to the world with less recompense than any other class of citizens; and

Whereas the United States assay offices located in the mining States are a most potent factor for the protection and aid of the prospector or small miner, who would otherwise be at the mercy of the refinery and private assayer in disposing of his small product of precious metals; and

Whereas this Government can ill afford not to maintain and support these assay offices, when the appropriation of so small a sum as $100,000 is all that is required: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Idaho Mining Association, in convention assembled, That all Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested and urged to use all honorable means to secure the appropriation for the support and maintenance of the assay offices in the mining States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives.

Resolution of the Idaho State League of Commercial Bodies.

At the convention of the Idaho State League of Commercial Bodies, held November 6 and 7, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Believing that the abolishment of the assay office at Boise would be a serious blow to the mining industry of the State at large, owing to the fact that the majority of deposits are made by prospectors and miners in small amounts, these persons suffering by the abolishment thereof: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we indorse the efforts being made by our representatives in Washington in the interests of the assay office."

R. N. CHILDS, Secretary.

Resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club, Payette, Idaho.

Whereas the Government assay office in Boise, Idaho, which has been maintained for many years and which is of great accommodation and usefulness to prospectors, is in danger of being abolished by the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas the usefulness and convenience of this assay office and others in the western mining States still exists and their maintenance is an encouragement to the miners and mining industry: Be it

Resolved, That this club do all in its power to further the maintenance of this assay office, and that the secretary of this club be instructed to communicate with Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH, our Congressman, asking that he use his efforts in having this office continued.

Resolution.

POCATELLO, IDAHO, January 12, 1914.

We, the members of the Pocatello and Bannock County Commercial Club in body assembled pass resolutions:

"Whereas it being the contention of eastern Members of the Congress that the western people are not interested in the retention of the assay offices: Be it

"Resolved, That it is the sincere desire and wishes of the people of this county to remonstrate against the efforts of abandoning these assay offices, which have been established for the past half century and which have been and always will be a source of great convenience as well as encouragement to the prospector, as well as to the public at large, giving them benefits in numerous ways, as well as inducing to bring forth from mother earth its unlimited wealth."

Resolutions of the Elmore Development League, of Mountain Home, Idaho.

MOUNTAIN HOME, IDAHO, January 16, 1914.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH, M. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of the above league the following resolution was adopted and a copy ordered transmitted to you:

"Resolved, That we view with disappointment the attempt on the part of certain Members of Congress to abolish the assay office at Boise, Idaho, as also the movement to deny said office a sufficient appropriation to maintain it."

There appears to be a misapprehension by these Members advocating the abolishing of said office as to its patrons and its usefulness to the public. Hundreds of miners and prospectors who spend their summers in the mountains and along the streams of Idaho and eastern Oregon working small claims, panning out small quantities of gold, bring the results of their season's work to the assay office and convert it into cash, said assay office being the only place where they may obtain pay for their product without long delay in shipping to distant mint stations.

To abolish the office would prove a hardship to these miners and prospectors, and particularly to Elmore County, a large percentage of whose population is engaged in mining, and in our opinion would do much to discourage the search by the individual for the precious metals.

It is not the mining companies that need the office, but rather the individual miner and prospector who goes out and pans the streams and scours the mountains in search of the metal of ultimate redemption.

We therefore urge each Senator and each Representative in Congress from the State of Idaho to use his eloquence and best efforts for the retention and maintenance of said assay office.

Resolutions of the Rupert Commercial Club, Rupert, Idaho.

JANUARY 26, 1914.

The Rupert Commercial Club being in regular session this day, and a quorum being present and the consideration of the matter of the discontinuance of the Government assay offices in the Western States coming up for consideration by the club at this time, and the members of the club being in possession of the knowledge of the facts in the premises and of the attitude of some of the Members of Congress on the subject; and

Whereas there is a disposition on the part of some of the Members in Congress to favor the discontinuance of the assay offices in some of the Western States; and

Whereas we believe that these assay offices are a great inducement to the prospectors and a great convenience to the mining interests: Now, therefore,

We the members of the Rupert Commercial Club, in regular session assembled, do hereby resolve, That the said Government assay offices should be continued for the benefit of the mining interests of this country and as an inducement to the prospector to assist in the development of this great western country, and we do most earnestly remonstrate against any action being taken toward the discontinuance of these offices, and that we do most heartily commend the action of our Congressman, the Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH, in his attitude in Congress on this matter.

STATE OF IDAHO,
County of Minidoka, ss.

I, W. R. Hyatt, the regularly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of the Rupert Commercial Club, do hereby certify that, among other things, the Rupert Commercial Club did pass the foregoing resolution at a regular meeting of the club on said date.

W. R. HYATT, Secretary.

Only a few days ago I received a telegram from the committee on resolutions of the Boise Chapter of the Idaho Mining Association, calling attention to the fact that no country has ever been prosperous under a declining production of gold, which is appended hereto:

BOISE, IDAHO, April 2, 1914.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Boise Chapter of Idaho Mining Association calls your attention to the fact that no country in the world has ever been prosperous under a declining gold production; that our gold production declined $5,000,000 during 1913; that abolishing of western assay offices will accentuate this decline by making mining conditions more rigorous; that it would be better to abolish New York City assay office than abolish any assay office in any gold-producing district. Your attention is also called to the fact that excess of earnings over expenditures at the Boise assay office for the last nine months were over $31,000. Kindly give copies of this telegram to Representative FRENCH and Senators BORAH and BRADY and members of the appropriate committees of the House and Senate.

I also submit in connection with my remarks an editorial from the Mining World of December 27, 1913, containing splendid arguments in favor of the continuance of these assay offices which it is proposed to abandon:

MINOR ASSAY OFFICES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

It has been urged as an objection to the minor assay offices that they are not self-sustaining, but as a matter of fact there is no reason why they should be. The mint service, like many other departments of the Government, was not established primarily as a profit-making business, but for the accommodation of the public, and the net cost to the Government for the maintenance of the six offices now in existence is less than $100,000 per annum. These so-called "minor offices" are located at Boise, Carson, Deadwood, Helena, Salt Lake City, and Seattle. The office at St. Louis was discontinued June 30, 1911, and that at Charlotte June 30, 1912.

The excess of operating expenses over fees collected during the fiscal year 1912 at the New York assay office was $117,098.96, while at the seven other offices—Boise, Carson, Deadwood, Helena, Salt Lake, Seattle, and Charlotte—at all these combined the excess was only $90,228.51, a difference against the New York office of $26,870.45.

The Philadelphia Mint, the most splendidly equipped institution of its kind in the world, is only two hours from New York, and anyone having business with the latter city could with almost equal facility transact that business with Philadelphia. Yet for the sake of the trifling convenience it is to the New York banks to have an assay office there, we are called upon to expend more than is required to maintain seven assay offices, the two nearest of which are not less than 400 miles apart, and which are scattered among the gold-producing States, just where they are needed, and which accommodate thousands of people. It should be remembered also that the poor man is the one who is benefited by these small offices; they make it possible for him to continue the business of prospecting, and it is the prospector who in the first instance has discovered the great mines which have added so much to the wealth of the Nation.

If, then, the offices which fail to collect enough in fees to offset their operating expenses should be put out of business, the New York office should be the first to go, since that costs more than all the rest combined. But it is said that that office is worth the cost because of the accommodation it affords to trade; then if this justifies the expenditure, we are even more justified in expending whatever sum may be necessary to maintain a sufficient number of smaller offices to accommodate the men who are taking wealth out of the ground at the risk of life and limb and at great uncertainty of any return upon their investment, particularly when it is remembered that by minting their product the Government makes a direct profit of $5,000,000 annually, and that the sum required for their maintenance is less than $100,000. One would scarcely argue that the New York banker is entitled to more consideration than the western prospector.

It has been said that the New York office can not be compared with the smaller offices; they certainly can not be compared to the advantage of New York. But if it is still insisted that the minor offices should be self-supporting we find, taking the reports of the Director of the Mint for the last 10 years, which we have—1903–1912, inclusive—that the Government has made an average annual profit on the mint service of $5,429,005.10. It is evident that were the minor offices credited with a share in this profit proportionate to the amount of bullion handled by each all of them would be self-supporting.

As, however, it may be urged that the Government would receive as much bullion and make this profit if all the smaller offices were discontinued, it is proposed that the charges to be collected be so increased as to cover all operating expenses and leave this profit intact.

During the 10-year period mentioned the purchases of bullion of all kinds averaged annually $207,668,838.71, and the operating costs $1,637,949.77, or 0.78 per cent. But during the first half of this period it cost 0.86 per cent, while during the latter half it fell to 0.71 per cent, and for the last year mentioned—1912—it was only 0.69 per cent. Most of the reduction was made in the minor offices, and there were further reductions made in the years (fiscal) 1913 and 1914.

The present method of computing charges on bullion purchased is so complicated that neither Congress nor the public generally understand it. It is proposed, therefore, that whenever bullion is presented at any of the mints or assay offices it shall be melted and assayed and the value computed as at present: from the total value of gold and silver thus ascertained shall be deducted a flat charge of $2.10 on all deposits below $300 in value, and at the rate of 70 cents for each additional $100 or fraction thereof. That where the deposit consists of very impure bullion an additional charge shall be collected sufficient to cover the cost of additional treatment, but that with this exception no charge shall be made at any of the mints or assay offices on bullion deposited to be purchased by the Government, save and except the above-mentioned charge of 70 cents per each $100 in value.

This change in charges shall not be understood to affect in any way the so-called bar charge made at the mints and at the assay office in New York when the bars are sold to the public.

This charge of 70 cents per $100 in value is ample to cover all the cost to the Government of taking the bullion from the miner and making it into coin, including the cost of transportation from the assay offices to the mints. The miners in the gold-producing States and the traders in New York will be accommodated as at present, and there will remain to the Government an annual profit of over $5,000,000 to pay interest on capital invested and wear and tear on plant.

Annexed is a table in support of these figures taken from the annual reports of the Director of the Mint:

Year.	Reference page.	Total bullion operated upon.
1903	7	$159,700,469.83

Mr. Chairman, if this ill-advised action on the part of the Committee on Appropriations is sustained, it will result in irreparable injury to the mining interests of the West and to thousands of prospectors and small mine operators in that section. The prospectors would be especially injured, as this worthy class of men depend upon an immediate return from each clean-up, with which to secure funds to purchase needed supplies. If they are required to send their gold a long distance, with consequent high carrying charges, they would be greatly handicapped and probably forced to cease operations. In several sections of Idaho and other Western States the mining industry is reviving. Some recent good discoveries have been made which have stimulated the prospectors, and they are preparing to enter into explorations in increasing numbers, and these assay offices are as much of a necessity to-day as they were when first established.

If they are abandoned, these prospectors and miners must ship their ores to a private refinery or be obliged to send them to a mint or assay office a long distance off, and to wait weeks for returns or sell their ores to a private dealer at a price fixed by him. If those who are determined to abolish these offices on the ground of economy, and who will not accept the recommendations of the Representatives and Senators from the mining States, will take the trouble and time to thoroughly investigate the matter I am confident that they would not insist upon the arbitrary action which is contemplated.

The members of the Committee on Appropriations would doubtless resent the suggestion on the part of the western Representatives that they are not advised in regard to the needs of their own respective districts or localities, and yet they insist upon disregarding the arguments and appeals made by these western Representatives in behalf of an industry which is peculiar to that section of the United States.

I realize that the Committee on Appropriations must exercise great discretion in framing an appropriation bill, but it is a singular fact that the reductions proposed apply to the western country, which is not represented upon the committee, and not to the East and South.

I appeal to the Members of this House to support the amendment providing for the continuance of these assay offices and not to follow the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations in this instance. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Wyoming going to use any more time on this amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the same reasons apply for the abolishment of the assay office at Boise City as apply to Carson City. Practically there is no difference in the amount of deposits received at the two places and practically no difference in the amount of expenditures, and also as to the earnings. There were 957 depositors at Boise in the year 1913 as compared with 891 at Carson City. The value of the gold and silver deposits was $1,022,087.29 as compared with $735,000 at Carson City. The earnings of the assay office at Boise were $3,908.21, while the expenditures were $14,868.80.

Mr. FRENCH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. FRENCH. Is the gentleman acquainted with the fact that the earnings of the assay office at New Orleans are $5,250, while the expenses are $18,500, and that the expenses over the receipts are greater than they are at Boise, and yet you retain the one at New Orleans?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will be patient for a moment, I was coming to the question of stating the reason for the action of the committee in retaining the mint and assay office at New Orleans. That was done at the instance of the Director of the Mint, and I desire to call the attention of the committee to the hearings, on page 246, in which he makes this statement:

> If you are going to consider the offices individually, the three that are entitled to more consideration than the others are Seattle, New Orleans, and Deadwood. That is my judgment. The Deadwood office comes so near paying its own way that I include it. If there should be an increase in production, or as much increase as there was last year over the year before, the office would be self-sustaining.

Now listen:

> New Orleans is an important port, and with the completion of the canal will be more so. Its deposits are chiefly from Central and South America. Moreover, there are $22,500,000 in silver dollars stored in its vaults which can not be conveniently moved, and must be guarded.

Mr. HOWELL, Mr. FRENCH and Mr. SMITH of Idaho rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not just at this moment. And it was because of that statement of the Director of the Mint that it is necessary to maintain this office in New Orleans for the reasons stated and also because of the storage of this immense amount of silver dollars that the committee decided that it would be proper to maintain that office.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For a brief question.

Mr. FRENCH. This was for the accommodation of the producers of Central and South American States in preference over the producers in our own United States?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, not by any means. What the Director of the Mint meant to convey to the committee was that it was for commercial reasons that that place should be maintained, just as we maintain the assay office at New York, but of course for a much greater and more important reason. It is, of course, important to encourage the importation of gold into this country, whether it comes from South America or Europe.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the Idaho case have a stronger standing if the depositors were those who send their deposits from outside the United States?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have just said it is important that gold be imported into this country for commercial reasons. As a matter of fact, these assay offices are used almost entirely by corporations mining gold.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not now. These assay offices do not benefit the miner in the mines, but it is for the benefit of the corporations which mine the gold, and saves them the expense of sending their bullion to the mint, as they should do, rather than to ask the people of this country to send it there at their expense. Now, there is no reason why the gold miners of Idaho can not send their gold bullion to Denver. I do not know how many miles it is, but it is not a great distance, and it would not cost them very much. As a matter of fact, the cost of shipping from Boise was $1,103.13, and I have just stated the depositors were 957 during the year 1913. Now, so far as I can see, that is the only benefit that can be derived from the continuation of these assay offices in the interior of the country, simply to provide free transportation to these corporations and individuals who mine the gold.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 7, on page 66, insert a separate paragraph, to read as follows:

"ASSAY OFFICE AT HELENA, MONT.

"Assayer in charge, $2,000; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,400; assistant assayer, $1,500; in all, $4,900.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $3,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered proposes to restore an item providing for the assay office at Helena, Mont., and involves an expenditure of not to exceed $6,000. I sincerely trust and hope that on the vote on this amendment we will make as much progress as we did on the last amendment, and if so, we will at least retain this one assay office for all that great western country. We will spend under this proposed amendment less than $10,000. The receipts of this office last year were $4,000, so the net expense to the Government, if this office is maintained, will be approximately $6,000 a year. In the Helena assay office last year they took care of approximately $2,000,000 worth of bullion, at a cost of about $9,000 to the Government.

It has been suggested here so often that I dislike to repeat it that you are spending millions of dollars in the Agricultural Department, you are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for the eradication of hog cholera; you are spending millions upon millions in commerce, in the improvement of rivers and harbors, and in a hundred other ways, yet you seem to begrudge us a few thousand dollars for the mining interests of the country.

The State of Montana, which is represented, as has been suggested, by only two Members here, has produced in its territorial and statehood days about $400,000,000 in gold. The assay office in Helena has handled more than $80,000,000 of that amount, and only at a cost of three-fourths of 1 per cent for the handling thereof.

Now, we sincerely feel that the maintenance of that office is not in the interests of the corporation or the miner of gold in large quantities. There were eight hundred and some depositors at the Helena office last year. The big fellow can take care of himself. It is the small man; it is the man who brings there $200 or $500 that we want to assist. Those men go out into those little canyons and mine four or five months with their sluice boxes and gum boots, and there is one place where they can get their money without delay. They want to deal directly with the Government and get all that they are entitled to.

The average individual has not the opportunity or the facilities for testing for fineness, or weight even, and if he does handle the prospectors' gold he wants a profit for it, while the Government does not. And I want to impress upon you gentlemen who believe that this particular assay office and all assay offices are maintained in the interest of the big miners that you were never so mistaken in your lives. The man who does not receive any attention at the hands of the people of this country is the fellow who goes out and mines and prospects—the fellow who takes a burro and a pick and shovel, a side of bacon and some beans, and endures the hardships of a rigorous climate and a wild country and the absence of civilization, who sleeps out on the mountain side or under some protecting tree or in some improvised cabin. He is the fellow who profits by this business, and not the big miner. The miners at Anaconda and Butte and Great Falls, who have big works, have means to send their gold, and probably do send it, to Denver or San Francisco.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. With pleasure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Montana tell us whether or not the prospector he has been describing can go to one of these assay offices and have his samples assayed at Government expense, or does he have to pay for it?

Mr. EVANS. I think, so far as assaying is concerned, he has to pay about $2.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not that the same price you would have to pay if you went to a private assay office?

Mr. EVANS. I think our average assay is about $3 in the State of Montana.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be of some advantage, then, to the prospector, because it would be cheaper than he would have to pay to a private party?

Mr. EVANS. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But, then, it is supposed to be a better assay and one on which he can rely?

Mr. EVANS. It is an honest, square assay. Oftentimes the individual assay—and I do not say it in disparagement of people engaged in that work—will show less than it really should, and will enable certain parties to acquire property which they should not acquire.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I see no reason why a prospector, in order to better his condition in life, should not be aided by the Government just as much as the man who is following the plow or is herding cattle on the range.

Mr. EVANS. Gentlemen, the prospector made that western country. We have discriminated against him from time immemorial, as far as that is concerned. For the last 10 years we have treated him niggardly in connection with our Forestry Service out there. We have excluded him from great opportunities. We are getting along better now.

For 10 years the prospectors and small miners in my State have been harassed and annoyed by a swarm of special agents and Forestry Service men, who, knowing nothing whatever about mines and mining, have assumed to dictate to and regulate the affairs of every man who had the courage, ambition, and energy to go out into the mountains and seek to wrest from nature the precious minerals which the Almighty placed there. These prospectors, who for years have traversed the hills and valleys of all that mountainous country, seeking its hidden treasures, have found themselves in recent years made the object of attack by a lot of inexperienced, young, college-bred fellows, drawing a salary of $1,000 or $1,500 a year. They, by reason of the power of the Government behind them, have harassed these men, until prospecting is becoming a lost art with our people.

Again, the rules and regulations governing the Forest Service and the rules and regulations of the Interior Department pertaining to mining claims and the right to prospect upon the public domain have been so framed, construed, and enforced as to be a burden upon these people. Even the Congress of the United States has been hesitating and dilatory about the enactment of laws which would encourage and promote the mining industry, particularly in the West. There are bills pending to-day, both in this House and the Senate, looking toward a revision of the mining laws, and all of them are apparently being opposed by men coming from other sections of the country, who know nothing whatsoever about the mining industry or the wants, needs, hopes, and aspirations of the people of this rich mining region. And when we come here asking for only a mere pittance of an appropriation, amounting, as I suggest, to an expenditure of less than $10,000, we are told by gentlemen in control of this bill that the assay offices serve no useful purpose and are used only, or very largely, by the large mining concerns, who are seeking to burden the Government with that expense rather than bear it themselves. Such a statement shows only the absence of information on the part of the speaker.

If you will turn to the report of the hearing on this very bill, on page 244, you will find that Mr. Roberts, Director of the Mint, testified, in answer to a direct question, as follows:

The small depositors care more for the services of the assay offices than the large ones do; they get returns more promptly than they would upon shipments to the mint.

That statement should refute the suggestion repeatedly made upon the floor of this House that these assay offices are maintained in the interest of the large mining companies.

Take the office under consideration, which handled last year $2,000,000 worth of bullion, with 827 depositors, and assume for the sake of the argument that half of that bullion was deposted by 10 large mining companies. Each of those companies would then have deposited on an average of $100,000—surely you would not consider a company which deposited less than $100,000 in a year's time a large concern—and you still have left 817 depositors, whose business aggregated $1,000,000, or a little more than a thousand dollars apiece. Certainly you would call a man who in a year's time does only a thousand dollars' worth of business a small business man, and you would not rate him as a big mining man or concern.

The report of the Director of the Mint shows that $80,000,000 worth of gold has been handled through this office in the past 40 years at an expense of less than three-fourths of 1 per cent. Now, if you abolish this office the resultant cost to the man who produces this gold will be multiplied many times. So long as this office remains in existence a man with a few hundred or a thousand dollars' worth of gold can take it there, and within the course of 24 hours have its fineness tested and receive a draft upon the Government of the United States for its value, less a very meager charge, which, as I remarked, amounts to less than three-fourths of 1 per cent. But abolish this office and the man who has a few hundred or a thousand dollars' worth of gold must ship it to Denver or San Francisco, pay the transportation charges and wait many days for his returns. The result will be that the small miner, after having endured the hardships of a summer's toil, must take his gold to the pawnbroker or the small merchant and there dispose of it. Neither the pawnbroker nor the merchant is qualified to test the fineness of this metal, nor is he prepared to correctly weigh and give to the producer its actual value. In his transactions with the miner he is looking for a profit, he is going to be on the safe side, and he is therefore going to pay to the miner 2, 3, or 5 per cent less than its real value in order to make himself safe in the transaction. And I say without fear of contradiction that in the handling of the $2,000,000 worth of mineral which passed through the Helena office last year the cost to the producer under the circumstances I have related would be from $40,000 to $100,000. And here we are in the Halls of Congress anxious and willing, in an effort to save the Government six or eight thousand dollars—we are willing that those 827 miners and prospectors shall sacrifice the sum of from $40,000 to $100,000.

Ah, but we are told by the gentlemen who have charge of this bill that in maintaining this and similar assay offices we are perverting the functions of the Government, that at the expense of the Government we are furnishing a market for the product of the western miner, and that to do so is a perversion of the real functions of government. Why, my good friends, if you will turn to page 122 of the very bill we have under consideration you will find that the committee has reported an appropriation of $75,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce to further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States. If we can disburse $75,000 to find a market for the manufacturers of the manufacturing States, can we not in all fairness and justice expend the pittance of $6,000 to find a market for the products of the hardy pioneers and prospectors of that great western country? And the $75,000 mentioned in this bill is only a fractional part of the money which is annually expended by the Government for the express purpose of finding and furnishing a market for our products. We maintain a consular agent to promote the commercial welfare of this country in every part of the world; we spend millions of dollars on statistics and crop reports for no purpose in the world except to enhance the market value of the product of the producer.

At the risk of repeating some of the things I have tried to tell you, I desire to read a statement from the assayer in charge of the Helena office:

These offices are so vital to the mining industry in the West that it is nothing short of a crime to abolish them.

The great injury would come to the small miners, who bring their gold to these offices and within a short time receive payment for its value. They depend upon an immediate return from each clean up to meet their pay rolls and purchase needed supplies. To force them to send their gold a long distance, with consequent high carrying charges, would mean that a number of small properties which are now conducted under decent profit would be compelled to shut down, throwing a large number of men out of employment, making a general stagnation in various small camps.

The mining development of this section of the country served by these offices is now entering upon a revival, which means a great deal to the country if it is properly fostered and aided instead of being hampered by attacks of this nature.

The uses of these offices to the miner are best shown by the records. Take the assay office in this city, which has been in existence since 1874. Since that time it has smelted and paid over $80,000,000 in gold bullion. The cost to the Government for handling this immense sum has been a little less than three-fourths of 1 per cent, or at the rate of about $15,000 a year.

The convenience of the local office has been of untold benefit. Eleven counties in the State of Montana sent to the Helena office last month gold bullion of the amount of $136,695.55. A very large percentage of the producers of this gold bullion is composed of small miners, who bring to the office anywhere from 1 ounce to a thousand dollars, and they consequently would suffer the most if the office was abolished. When these small savings are melted and the value determined, the owner is at once given the cash for his gold. The cost for this service is about $2. If he were obliged to resort to a private refinery, the expense would be prohibitive.

This is a matter of vital importance to the entire West, not only to the people engaged in the industry but to the wholesale, mercantile, and manufacturing industries furnishing supplies and machinery.

If the men who are attempting to abolish these offices on the ground of economy would come here and make an honest investigation, they would not only cease this campaign but would inaugurate one for the enlargement and support of these assay offices.

The committee in charge of this bill proposes to continue the assay office at New Orleans, in a territory which does not produce an ounce of gold, and the reason assigned for such continuation is as follows:

We have an assay office at New Orleans because we expect it to be an important port in our business relations with Central and South America when the Panama Canal is opened.

If that statement be correct, and use is to be made of this assay office, it must be used by people mining gold in Central and South America, and I submit to the membership of this House that if it is important that we should look out for the welfare of the miners of Central and South America, then it is at least equally important that we should look out for the welfare of the miners of Montana, and, in short, of all that great Rocky Mountain country, which has produced the great bulk of the gold that forms the basis of our circulating medium in the United States. Indeed, if I had the power, I should establish in every metalliferous mining State of the Union a Government experiment station, as we have established agricultural stations, to the end that the Government might use its good offices in teaching men how to mine and how to save these metals when once taken from the earth. As a member of the Mines and Mining Committee of this House, I have joined with my associates, and we now have before this body a bill asking for the establishment of at least eight of these stations. The amount of gold, silver, copper, and zinc and other metals which annually goes into the dump heap for lack of knowledge of treatment is simply appalling. There are hundreds of mines to-day in our western land where the tailings of the dump of 20 years ago are now being worked over and returning good compensation for the workmen.

We are an extravagant and wasteful people, but in the matter of this amendment I can not bring myself to believe that we are extravagant or wasteful when we allow this pittance of an appropriation that will redound to the benefit of so many worthy men who are serving the Nation so well, and who now need, if not the hand of charity, at least the hand of justice extended to them.

One of the members of the committee in charge of this bill has displayed some acrimony and has in effect charged that this is a raid upon the Public Treasury, and that Members who are joining with me in an effort to retain this office are unfaithful to the party pledges and their country. He argues that the party now in control of this House pledged the country an economical administration and a reduction of the appropriations. In this last statement I heartily join with him. I believe the party should be faithful to its pledges; that the country should have an economical administration; and that the appropriations should not be larger this year than last. But I suggest to the gentleman that if he will readjust his appropriations in such a manner that equity may be done to all parties, then our party pledges may be carried out to the letter. For instance, if the appropriations made for the Agricultural Department, or the Interior Department, as the case may be, for the support and maintenance of some of the special agents who carry on a system of espionage against the men trying to reclaim a 160-acre lot of land as a homestead or trying to secure patent to a mining claim, he can soon save ample money to maintain this office. I assume that one of these special agents must draw a salary of at least $1,500 a year. His expenses in the field probably amount to $1,000 more. Release three of these men and you will have done a real service to the people of the West. Nothing is more distasteful to that great, generous, free-hearted people of the West than to have some one representing the Government continually dogging them, spying upon them, and otherwise hampering them in their efforts to make a living. That very system sent into Canada last year 130,000 men, taking with them the best blood, brawn, brains, and citizenship of this country, not to mention the $130,000,000 they also took.

But, Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to talk of the hardships of the homestead entrymen. I hope to make that the subject of some brief remarks to this House at a future time. I am dealing now with the prospector, that unique character known nowhere except in the great Rocky Mountain States and the Pacific slope. He is the man who has produced the gold of this country during the last 50 years, and a most worthy and remarkable character he is. The country, and the West particularly, are indebted to him more than they can ever repay. Generous, hospitable, self-reliant, and always optimistic, he has been the forerunner of civilization everywhere. No storms have been so fierce that he would not brook them; no region has been so inaccessible, so barren, or so desolate that he would not explore it; no mountain has been so high that he would not cross it—always cheerful, always hopeful, always sure the phantom which he seeks lies just beyond. His efforts often terminate in failure, poverty, and distress, and yet he never complains. With the coming of another season he takes his pack horse, his pick and shovel, his meager supply of provisions, and once more explores the lonely fastnesses of the mountains and the gulches, to bring back at the end thereof a few hundred dollars. And now we, the great Congress of the United States, representing a rich, munificent, generous Nation, begrudge the poor prospector the right to get the face value for the product of his weary months of toil, and ask that he be compelled to sacrifice his gold over the counter of some grasping money changer.

I therefore appeal to you, gentlemen of the South and East, to give me the benefit of your votes and pass this amendment, which means so much to these people. Gentlemen, I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Chair notify me at the expiration of five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is urged in opposition to these amendments and to the retention of these assay offices that they do not perform a necessary and essential governmental function. That is true to but a very limited extent. If it were true, the fact would not justify abolishing these offices, for of all the great volume of our appropriations as a Government a very large proportion of them are for purposes not necessary in the administration of government, but for the encouragement of enterprise and development useful and helpful to all of the people.

But these assay offices do perform a valuable governmental function, and a governmental function which we propose to shift from these various assay offices to the mints. The shifting of these functions from the assay offices to the mints will not relieve the Government from all of the expense that the assay offices entail. It is my opinion that with the transfer of these duties from the assay offices to the mints we shall find a demand for enough additional help at the mints practically to cover as large a sum as the expense incurred at the assay offices. In addition to that, by abolishing the assay offices we shall lessen the Government's revenues.

The presence of these assay offices in the mining communities prompts and encourages the individual miner in sending his individual bullion to the mint and in seeking assays, and so we have a much larger return than we would have if these shipments were consolidated and sent to the far-distant mints. So that the abolition of these offices will result in but very little saving to the Government on the one hand, and, on the other hand, it will very considerably reduce the income which the mints now have.

A gentleman suggested a moment ago that these assay offices were maintained largely for the benefit of large mining corporations. Gentlemen familiar with the situation know that that is not true. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] has just called attention to the fact that there are few large precious-mineral mining operations in his State, and that practically all of the business at the Helena assay office is with prospectors, men operating small mines, largely men producing gold by the labor of their own hands. That is true also with regard to the Boise office, and it is true to a certain extent with regard to all of these offices. A million and a half of bullion was received last year at this particular office at an expense of about $10,000, or two-thirds of 1 per cent, a net expense to the Government of about one-tenth of 1 per cent of the bullion handled. And yet it is proposed to do away with and abolish this great encouragement to the miners of the country in order that we may save possibly a few thousand dollars in the maintenance of this particular assay office.

Why, gentlemen know that we are appropriating all the time for numberless services for the people in many lines for the encouragement and development of industry. These assay-office appropriations are largely for the same purpose and along the same lines. There is no appropriation proposed in this bill or that will be suggested as an amendment to the bill so useful, so beneficial, in encouraging the development and production of the precious metals as the amendments now proposed.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to take up much time on this proposition. The Government appropriates a large sum of money to encourage agriculture. Large appropriations are made to encourage commerce. The Government appropriates much money to aid mining. It encourages manufactures. But nowhere, except in gold mining, is it claimed that it is necessary for the Government to appropriate money in order to make local markets for the people to dispose of their products. The Government does not appropriate money to purchase the products of the farmers, in order to save the farmer the cost of transporting his products to the markets. It does not appropriate anything to transport the manufactures. It does not transport coal or copper. But when it comes to gold mining we are told that we ought to appropriate about $100,000 a year to maintain local markets for the owners of bullion. That is the whole situation.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. How much are we appropriating now for the Bureau of Markets under the Agricultural Department for the very purpose of securing markets for the farmers?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. My dear sir, we are appropriating a sum of money, not for the purpose of establishing markets, but for the purpose of teaching people methods of marketing. But you know how to market your gold. All you have to do is to put it an envelope or a box and send it to a mint.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. I just wanted to correct the gentleman from South Carolina in his figures. He made the statement that it cost $100,000 a year to maintain these assay offices. As a matter of fact, it costs something like $50,000 to maintain them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman interrupted me before I got through. The total expense of the assay offices that we omit from the bill was about $95,000 in 1910. The earnings of the offices I have not stated, but they are insignificant.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee. The Committee on Appropriations, replying once for all to all the charges of discrimination, desire it understood that we have not discriminated against anybody. We left the office at Seattle for commercial purposes. It is important that we should encourage the importation of gold. Therefore we have an assay office at Seattle to receive gold brought from Alaska; otherwise the Alaska gold might go to Canada. We have a great assay office in New York City, because it is the commercial center of the Western Hemisphere. We have a mint at New Orelans, because we expect it to be an important port in our business relations with Central and South America when the Panama Canal is opened. And besides that, the Director of the Mint needs the New Orleans mint on account of the deposits of more than twenty millions of money there.

We think that these other institutions are not necessary. We appreciate the earnest advocacy of gentlemen who are interested in them, and I wanted to see their statements go into the RECORD, showing that they made a splendid fight. But their contention can not be maintained.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman made a statement just there that is not borne out by the facts when he said that the cost of these assay offices that are proposed to be abandoned is about $95.000 a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I calculated the cost in my head. Here are the figures for 1913. I will put them in the RECORD if you want them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. As a matter of fact, you must subtract the earnings of the offices. If that is done, the expenses are reduced very materially.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What place are we discussing now; Helena, Mont.?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. All right. I will give you the figures for Helena. The earnings were $6,438 and the expenses were $18.500. It cost $12,000 more than the earnings.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. EVANS, Mr. RAKER, and Mr. MONDELL demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 32.

Mr. EVANS and Mr. MONDELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. EVANS and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 27.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 32, the noes are 27, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 15279, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, in accordance with the rule, and reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-eight Members—a quorum—have answered to their names. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that the Chair had announced the vote on the amendment before the gentleman from South Carolina made the point of no quorum. Am I correct?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair had announced the result before the gentleman from South Carolina made the point of no quorum. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard the Chairman announce the vote yet, but I was on my feet trying to get recognition to make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he sought recognition from the Chair when the vote was announced?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have not heard the result announced yet. I was on my feet trying to make the point of no quorum. If the Chair says he announced the result before I made the statement, I do not deny it; but I made the point as quickly as I could.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman comes within the spirit of the rule at least, if not within the letter of it. The Chair realizes that in trying to expedite the consideration of the bill he sometimes announces the result very quickly. In this instance he may not have recognized the gentleman from South Carolina when he was on his feet.

Mr. MONDELL. I am surprised that the gentleman from South Carolina did not hear the result announced. Everyone else heard it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. EVANS) there were 81 ayes and 72 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. EVANS and Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 91 ayes and 67 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

On page 65, after line 12, insert the following:

"Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; clerk, $1,000; assistant assayer, $1,200; assayer's assistant, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

"For wages of workman and other employees, $2,000; for incidental and contingent expenses, new machinery, etc., $500."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered proposes to restore an item providing for the assay office at Deadwood in South Dakota. I regret exceedingly the absence on account of illness of my distinguished colleague [Mr. MARTIN], who for so many years has been an able and faithful Member of this House, because Deadwood is his home; if he were here, I am sure that he would present the reasons why this amendment should prevail in a more intelligent and convincing manner than I can.

I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, to see that this House, as usual, whenever a matter is presented that has merit, usually recognizes and adopts it, as the amendment that was just adopted which restored the item for an assay office at Helena demonstrates that fact. The gentleman from Montana, in the brief time that he had, convinced the House of the merit of his proposition. I shall hope to be able to convince you of the merit of the amendment that I have offered to provide for continuing the assay office at Deadwood, and will say that the amendment is the existing law and the amounts named are less than the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury for this office for the next fiscal year.

Deadwood is located in the Black Hills, in the western portion of South Dakota, and is said to be the richest hundred square miles in the world. There are employed in mining thousands of employees, and a population of 50,000 people is dependent upon the mining industry.

The annual gold production of the Black Hills is between seven and eight million dollars, and South Dakota ranks fourth in the gold production of the States of the Union. I have a statement furnished by the Director of the Mint, being the preliminary estimate of the Bureau of the Mint and the Geological Survey of the production of gold and silver in the United States during the calendar year 1913, which is interesting, and I will incorporate it in my remarks. The statement is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, the members of the Committee on Appropriations, attempting to justify discontinuing Deadwood and other assay offices, argue that their only function is to provide a home market for the bullion that is mined in the locality of the offices. I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Montana stated, that there are functions performed by these assay offices as of great importance as that of providing a market for the bullion, and I also want to corroborate him in his statement that these offices are not for the convenience and accommodation so much of the large mining companies as for the prospectors and small producers.

It happens that I was in Deadwood last month and visited the assay office and also talked with many people interested in mining, and I am able to express first-handed reasons why the assay office should not be discontinued. It does provide a home market for the bullion as has been suggested, and the miners receive quicker returns from the sale of their bullion than they could by shipping it elsewhere. I learned that the office serves hundreds of individuals in the matter of ore assay, and that it has requests for assays not only from the locality but from different parts of the United States. The maintenance of the office is of great value to the prospectors who are seeking for new mines. I found that the Government officials employ the assaying department in investigating applications for mineral patents on public lands, mining operators who ship their ores to custom mills; and in case of a difference between the miner and the miller the assaying office is frequently requested to make the "umpire" assay upon which settlement is based. Prospective investors in mining properties go to the Government assay office knowing they will get a reliable assay, and persons owning mineral land feel that they are protected by being able to get a Government assay, which is not only more reliable but much cheaper than can be obtained from a private assayer. It not only inspires confidence in the investor, but is a protection to the mine owner.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the functions that, in my judgment, justify the maintenance not only of the Deadwood office but the other assay offices proposed to be discontinued, if this bill is not amended. Another argument—and the principal one made by members of the Committee on Appropriations—why the assay offices should not be continued is that they are not self-supporting. There is no justification for such an argument; and when we consider the large amount that we are annually appropriating and expending in the Agricultural Department and other departments for experimental purposes, obtaining information and conducting certain surveys, and doing other things from which there is no direct return, something can certainly be expended to encourage the great mining industry of this country. The Deadwood assay office happens to be one, and about the only one of all of them, that is self-supporting. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], in reading from the hearings, read as follows:

If you are going to consider the offices individually, the three that are entitled to more consideration than the others are Seattle, New Orleans, and Deadwood. That is my own judgment.

While they leave out Deadwood, they include Seattle, and yet that office is maintained and operated at an expense of something over $34,000 per year to the Government; they also provide for New Orleans, yet it is operated at an expense to the Government of over $16,000; and both of these offices appear to be continued largely on account of gold imported from foreign countries; and it would seem to me if we maintain assay offices for bullion mined abroad, and at great expense to the Government, we certainly ought to continue an assay office that is self-supporting and that accommodates our own producers.

While at Deadwood I also obtained from the assay office the figures showing the earnings for the last fiscal year and also showing what it cost to operate the office. I found there were over 800 deposits, and that it purchased gold bullion of the gross value of $7,511,662; the earnings of the office were $12,526.90; its operating expenses were $10,589.99, showing a profit to the Government of $1,936.91. This may not include the expense of freight and transportation, which, if charged, would show that it cost altogether a little more to operate the office than it earned; but I submit the amount is a mere bagatelle. As already stated, Seattle and New Orleans are maintained at considerable expense, while Deadwood is practically self-sustaining; and this, I submit, destroys the argument of the gentlemen who are attempting to discontinue this office, and justifies beyond any question that it ought to be maintained, and therefore I hope my amendment will prevail.

The Committee on Appropriations, in a report submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], only last year, in reporting the legislative bill, included a provision for the assay office at Deadwood, thereby recognizing that the office ought to be continued, and conditions are no different now than they were then, and I am surprised that the item was omitted from this bill, and had hoped, when the matter was brought to his attention, that he would accept the amendment I have offered.

In conclusion, I ask the members of this committee to be consistent. You have just voted to put in an amendment for the assay office in Montana. You were justified in doing so, and your action was based upon a meritorious showing; and the merits of this case being much greater, I again appeal to you to be consistent and vote for the amendment I have offered, which provides for continuing the assay office at Deadwood.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read some telegrams received by me in relation to this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., April 4, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of the whole mining industry in the Black Hills and its indirect connections, we urge you to try to have the House grant the full $9,200 appropriation, as per Secretary of Treasury's estimate, for assay office here. This will put it on a basis that will help hundreds of small prospectors who lack funds for private assays, and will greatly stimulate the industry by increasing prospecting.

H. W. TROTH,
Secretary Deadwood Business Club.

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., April 6, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of the Wasp No. 2 Mining Co., I desire to protest against the proposed discontinuance of the Deadwood assay office. It would work a great injury to the mining interest of this section. Our company produces about $300,000 gold per annum, for which we have been getting prompt return at the assay office here. Its discontinuance would work a great disadvantage to us, as it would, indeed, to every producer and prospecting concern in the Hills. Do your utmost for its retention.

D. A. MCPHERSON,
President Wasp No. 2 Mining Co.

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., April 6, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Urge appropriation of $9,200 for maintenance of Deadwood assay office. The mining industry of the Black Hills will be greatly crippled and inconvenienced if the office is abolished.

TITANIC GOLD MINING CO.,
W. S. EDLER, President.

LEAD, S. DAK., April 4, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Lead citizens join with Deadwood in asking that strong effort be made to retain Deadwood assay office, with proper appropriation, as requested by telegram of Deadwood Business Club. We sincerely feel that mining interests of this section are entitled to that much recognition.

CHAMBERS KELLAR.

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., April 7, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge you to bring strong argument before the House in favor of retaining Government assay office here, discontinuance of which will involve additional expense and inconvenience to mining companies.

NEW RELIANCE GOLD MINING CO.

M. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the last remark made by the gentleman from South Dakota in his appeal to the Members of the House to be consistent must be music to the ears of the House. We have already voted down a proposition to put an assay office in Nevada and we have voted down a proposition to put an assay office in Idaho. We voted in a proposition to put an assay office in Montana.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman means to continue an office in Montana, not to put one in.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, the committee left it out. So far as the Deadwood office is concerned, I desire to call attention to the testimony on page 243:

Mr. JOHNSON. The next assay office is at Deadwood. Deadwood does a fairly good business, does it not?

Mr. ROBERTS. Deadwood really makes a very good claim for consideration.

Further on we asked him:

As a matter of fact, Mr. Roberts, most of the bullion received at Deadwood is from one great corporation, is it not?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir; the Homestake Mining Co. is the big depositor at that office.

Further on he asked what proportion this great corporation furnished to the Deadwood office, and his reply was that he should say that five-sixths of the deposits come from that corporation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, gentlemen, if you want to take the responsibility of putting a market at Deadwood, S. Dak., for the benefit of a great mining corporation, in order that that corporation may avoid the expenses of shipping its bullion to the mint, you have that privilege; but that is all it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. For a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming that most of this bullion is furnished by the Homestake Mining Co. does not change the fact, does it, as stated in the hearings, and the gentleman did not read that part of it, that this mining company or the miners generally paid $13,208 for the privilege of using this assay office, which only cost the Government $1,000 more?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask a question, and I yielded on that condition.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask the gentleman if it is not——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I decline to yield further, if the gentleman takes that long to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In other words, he testified it did not cost very much to run this office over and above its earnings.

Mr. MONDELL. Less than $1,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the assay offices perform no governmental function. They are markets for bullion. I can not see any reason why, if the Government is going to establish markets to buy bullion, it should not establish markets to buy wheat, cotton, corn, and cattle and pay the transportation charges to the centers where those things are needed. That is the whole question, and it is not necessary to say anything more about it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it may seem somewhat strange, but I hope it is not out of place, to remind Members on this side of the House that the Democratic platform pledged us in favor of economy and to the abolishment of useless offices; but it did not declare, Mr. Chairman, that the party favored economy at the expense of Republicans and the abolition of useless offices in territory represented in this House by Republicans while favoring a different doctrine wherever a Democratic Representative would be affected. In a few months I shall be called upon in the discharge of my official duties to review the record that this Democratic House shall have made in its authorization of the expenditure of the public moneys. Whenever I think of the horrible mess that I shall be called upon to present to the country on behalf of the Democratic Party [laughter on the Republican side] I am tempted to quit my place. I am looking now at Democrats who seem to take amusement in soliciting votes on the floor of this House to overturn the Committee on Appropriations in its efforts to carry out the pledges of the Democratic platform. They seem to take it to be a huge joke not to obey their platform [laughter and applause on the Republican side] and to make ridiculous the efforts of the members of our party who do try to live up to the promises they made to the people. I know that some Members on this side are voting continually for appropriations because they fear the wrath of the public if they do not vote out of the Public Treasury assistance for everything anyone suggests. I have in my hand a letter which is somewhat characteristic of the correspondence which I receive daily.

If I placed my political fortunes above my sworn duty under the law, I would not attempt to carry out the promises of the Democratic platform, but I should place myself at the head of this band of Treasury looters upon every occasion. Here is a letter from one of my constituents complaining that an increase of 700 per cent had not been made for one of the public services in the Federal Government. He writes that the failure to make the increased appropriation—is a blow aimed straight at one of the most beneficent works now carried on by our Government, and I take pleasure in assuring you that unless this action is rescinded those responsible for the iniquity will be made to suffer by thousands of men who are wide-awake on this question and know what is what. I personally pledge myself to use all possible means as an individual and as minister of a New York church, and as a citizen generally, to strike at you, and strike good and hard, unless you move heaven and earth to make good on this proposition. The time has gone by when such nonsense as this can be taken lightly. Hoping to hear from you favorably upon this matter, and at an early date, believe me.

Think of a minister of the Gospel at this Eastertime writing a letter couched in such language to a public official! [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if I were to be affected in the performance of my public duties by such communications from misguided and misinformed ministers of the Gospel, it would be a sorry day for this country. [Applause.] No one can picture the difficulties and the troubles of men who, fortunately or——

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer not to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not well. It is some effort for me to speak, and I should not attempt to do so if I did not feel that my colleagues upon the floor seem either to be so indifferent to a very perilous situation for our party, or else, which I do not wish to believe, have so far forsaken Democratic practices and Democratic principles as not to deserve to continue in control of this Government. I would not attempt to speak under these circumstances if I did not hope, Mr. Chairman, to awaken them to a realization of what the situation is. Few men can realize the difficulties and the troubles of those who under our system of Government, either fortunately or unfortunately, are compelled to pass upon the recommendations of officials charged with the administration of public affairs. Every man in every branch of the Federal Government, every man at the head of a branch of the Federal Government, naturally believes that his work is the most important work to be done. If he were not an enthusiast for his work he would not be worth while being connected with it. Upon us, however, as the direct representatives of the people, upon us as the guardians of the Public Treasury, devolves the important duty of scrutinizing and reviewing requests made by those officials and the determining of the extent to which appropriations shall be made. If we are to be swayed from our duty by the appeal of every misinformed or misguided man, or if we are to vote appropriations merely because some popular, well-liked, attractive Member of the House urges us to do so, then we shall surely, Mr. Chairman, make such a record in this House as not only to invite but to deserve the condemnation of the country.

We charged the Republicans for 12 years of my service in the House under Republican administrations with being grossly extravagant and reckless in the expenditure of the public money. I believed that charge to be true. I believed that my party, when placed in power, would demonstrate that the charges we had made in good faith were true. We are entitled to the help and to the support of the Members on this side of the House in honest efforts to carry out the pledges of the Democratic Party, and in our attempts to show that what we charged in order to get in power was true. We have not had that support. Our Democratic colleagues have not given that support to us thus far during this session of Congress. They have voted against recommendations they should not have voted against. They have unnecessarily piled up the public expenditures until the Democratic Party is becoming the laughing stock of the country.

I appeal to them now before it is too late, I appeal to them now before we have gone beyond recall, to stop the conduct of which they have been guilty. Do not continue to vote for these improper and improvident appropriations. Those who propose to continue to do so should at least have the courage openly to assert upon the floor of this House that they believe that the professions of the Democratic Party have not been made in good faith, that they can not be carried out, and that we are not entitled to power because of those professions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the Chair inform me when five minutes have elapsed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I thought the gentleman said that he had not any further speech to make.

Mr. MONDELL. I had not expected to say anything, except in case the gentleman from South Carolina mentioned Deadwood.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The "gentleman from South Carolina" has not mentioned Deadwood.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to talk of Deadwood, if the gentleman will allow me. Of course, if the gentleman is afraid to have anything said in regard to this item, I will sit down.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is all. You said you did not have anything further to say.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], for whom I have the very highest regard and respect, appeals to us on the ground of economy, and I want to say to the gentleman he need not confine his appeal entirely to that side of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did confine it to this side of the House, I will say to the gentleman. I did not address my remarks to that side of the House at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it will be hearkened to, no doubt.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not address myself to that side of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. It will be hearkened to within reason; and as a member of the committee over which the gentleman so ably presides, I have followed him, and shall continue to follow him, in all reasonable economies, even when he uses his pruning knife to a point that I think is somewhat dangerous, and where I think it likely that it may mean possible harm to the public service.

I desire to call to the attention of the House the fact that the passionate appeal of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is all about a matter of one thousand one hundred and eighty-six dollars and some odd cents. In other words, this great public institution, established at Deadwood, in the center of the famous Black Hills of the Dakotas, a great many years ago, maintained there and doing useful and beneficial work all these years, is to be discarded. We are to close its doors and terminate its usefulness simply because it costs $1,186 more than it takes in.

Why, the gentleman from New York himself within a year, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported this item in an appropriation bill, and it can not be possible that conditions have so changed in a short twelvemonth that the Treasury is in serious danger on account of the very small net outlay at this office.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] did not read all that was said respecting the Deadwood assay office in the hearings. He did not call attention to the fact that the Director of the Mint stated that this was one of the assay offices that came nearest paying its way; that it cost but a little more than a thousand dollars above the receipts, and that it was performing a useful public service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that the Treasury is in any danger by reason of the maintenance of this useful institution.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman if the Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, did not say that the only reason he had for including Deadwood with New Orleans and Seattle was that the expenses of Deadwood were a little more than the earnings.

Mr. MONDELL. And the only argument that the able chairman of the committee made was on the ground of expense. As a matter of fact, there is no expense involved except the sum of $1,186.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken. He misunderstood the argument of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MONDELL. And the Deadwood Assay Office, long established, is useful and helpful to the people of that great mineral region, and should be maintained. [Applause, and cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 70.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOWELL: Insert after line 7, page 66, the following:

"Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,700.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL] is recognized.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, in the face of the proceedings in the House this afternoon I have great hopes that in time the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] in charge of the bill will come to take a broader view of the principle involved in the establishment of these assay offices than the few dollars of expense that now so completely blinds his larger vision. I say that I am hopeful, for he has shown considerable progress, as I shall show, in that direction. Two years ago, following this same shortsighted and mistaken idea of economy, the committee proposed to destroy, by refusing the necessary appropriations, not only the assay offices in the five gold and silver mining States now marked for destruction, but included the mints at San Francisco and New Orleans and the assay office at Seattle. This was a heroic and a large effort at economy from the viewpoint of the committee compared with the petty economy now recommended.

The reversal of their action on the mint at San Francisco, the mint at New Orleans, and the assay office at Seattle lends substance to the hope that the committee is making progress toward a broader view of the whole question. It would be ungenerous to say that the numerical strength in the House of the States whose mints and assay offices have not been disturbed had weight with the committee. Even though the facts and figures give some color to the suggestion, I prefer, however, to see in the new attitude of the committee the evidence of light and progress. But while yet conceding their former mistake, the committee strongly persists in an effort to destroy the assay offices in five of the great gold and silver mining States. It is true that the numerical strength in the House of these five States is not large, but the cause they represent will be found to be invincible.

This question is not a new one. This is not the first time the Representatives from these States have been ridden over roughshod in the House on this question, only to see their efforts later succeed by a gracious yielding to similar demands of the Senate. If the committee is now withholding the appropriation for these five assay offices merely for trading purposes in adjusting differences in the bill, which I strongly suspect, it is a shameless humiliation of their colleagues in the House for the purpose of magnifying the Senate in the eyes of the States concerned.

These five assay offices have been established for many years. Their creation was based on sound and just principles of national policy. The five gold and silver mining States, now so flagrantly discriminated against, pour into the lap of the Nation annually a gold and silver stream of more than $60,000,000, imparting a stimulus to and quickening of all the arteries of commerce. In this vast region, comprising more than 500,000 square miles of rich mineral territory, the Government is maintaining five assay offices, many hundreds of miles distant from each other. The purpose of these assay offices is to enable the miner to turn his precious metal over to the Government at a reasonably convenient place to be converted into basic money. But to maintain these assay offices for the convenience of the miner and to enable him to receive the value of his production promptly and without the intervention of middlemen, and to transport the bullion deposited thereat, will require an appropriation of from $60,000 to $70,000 per annum, and this is the issue before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I beg the House to consider this question in its larger aspects and not be blinded by the specious arguments for a penny-wise and shortsighted policy. The Government rightly exercises the sovereign and exclusive right of converting gold into the form in which it is chiefly used as money. The miner who produces gold is denied the right of converting it into this form. Why should the Government require the miner to send his gold to New York or Denver or San Francisco and bear the expense of transportation? His gold takes on no added value by this process. Its value is fixed and determined and is worth as much in money at the place of production as at any place in the country. The Government, exercising the exclusive and sovereign right of converting this gold into money, ought not to force the producer of it to suffer an unnecessary loss without any added value given in sending his product to points far removed from the place of production. The Government should justly recognize this burden as a part of the expense attending the exercise of its sovereign and exclusive right to coin money and regulate the value thereof. Why harp upon the trivial expense of transporting the gold by the Government? With the inauguration of the parcel-post system an arrangement can easily be effected by which the bullion from the various assay offices can be sent in this way to the mint, and the cost would only amount to taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another.

If you destroy these assay offices you impose upon the miner's gold a tax which deprives him of its full value in the place where it is produced, to which he is justly entitled. Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] brings up what he considers an analogy in wheat and corn and oats, and iterates and reiterates the argument that, inasmuch as the Government does not convey those products to the great centers of consumption free of charge, there is no reason why the Government should pay for the transportation of gold to the mints. In answer to such fallacious and specious pleas, I need only say that if the Government fixed a permanent and uniform value on farm products in all sections and monopolized the privilege of converting them into the form in which they are chiefly used, then I would say that the Government should establish markets where such products are produced. It would be absolutely unreasonable to ask the farmer to transport wheat thousands of miles if the Government exercised the sovereign and exclusive right of converting it into flour. But in the matter of gold the Government exercises the sovereign and exclusive right to coin it. If the owner had the privilege of converting it into the form in which it is chiefly used, he would have no occasion to send it to the mint.

So I contend that the Government should accept the gold in the place where it is produced by reason of the particular and exclusive rights which it reserves in the matter of coinage. Gentlemen who have preceded me have made citations showing the appropriations annually made for the encouragement and development of agriculture. We all agree in the wisdom of this policy, yet in many instances the appropriations are plainly for the benefit of particular sections. In comparison with what the Government appropriates for agriculture, this small contribution, even conceding for the argument no obligation on the part of the Government to receive gold at convenient points of production, is clearly insignificant. There is one item, however, in the agricultural bill that is strikingly analogous to the purpose of the appropriation for assay offices, viewed even from the standpoint of the gentlemen from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]. The House has established in the Department of Agriculture a Division of Markets. We have appropriated this session $200,000 to aid the farmer in marketing his product. Is there any more reason or justice in spending public money to find markets for farmers' produce by bringing the consumer and producer in close touch with each other than in spending $70,000 to eliminate middlemen and enable the producer of gold to deal quickly and directly with the Government? But there is another feature of this question that I desire the House to consider. The committee which has refused the necessary appropriation to maintain assay offices in the mining States where gold is produced, because of the petty expense involved, have continued the mints at New Orleans and at New York. The former is maintained at great expense, ostensibly for the convenience of the producer of gold in Central America. That is, foreign producers, regardless of expense, must be accommodated, but our own States, for petty, small, parsimonious, and niggardly economy, are completely ignored. Is this Democratic economy? Is this fair to our own citizens? Again, in the face of the tearful appeal of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] for economy's sake to sustain the committee in striking down these assay offices, I want to remind the House that only a few days ago we appropriated $600,000 to enlarge the assay office at New York City. We are maintaining an assay office in that city at an expense of more than half sufficient to maintain all these other offices it is proposed to abolish. Gentlemen of the Congress, has it come to this, that hundreds of thousands of dollars are freely given for the convenience and benefit of the traffickers in bullion, but not one dollar for the producer of the gold? [Applause.]

Gentlemen, the men engaged in mining deserve well of their country. The brave, undaunted men who go out into the wilderness, climb the mountains, and scale the peaks and wrest from the miserly rocks this wealth, the commercial lifeblood of the Nation, do not deserve this unjust discrimination. They are engaged in one of the great industries that demands pluck and energy and an unfaltering hope. The treasures of the hills are securely locked from the weak and the faint-hearted. To unlock the door of nature's treasure vaults and bring forth her glittering wealth demands the most sterling qualities of manhood.

The assay office at Salt Lake City was established by act of Congress May 13, 1908. Scarcely had it begun operations when its existence was threatened by adverse legislation. This has retarded its usefulness and discouraged business connections with it. Its equipment has been removed from premises first leased for it to suitable quarters in the Federal Building. This removal diminished its volume of business for the year. Now there will be no further expense for rent. The amendment I have proposed is in accordance with the estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and includes only $4,700 for assayer, assistant assayer, and clerk. These offices require men of character and ability, and the salaries are placed at the very lowest point at which proper and efficient officers can be secured. With the probable earnings of the office at present there is involved the trifling sum of about $6,500 to maintain it. I am confident that, when firmly and permanently established, its business will so increase as to make it nearly self-supporting. Salt Lake City is the geographical center and metropolis of an extensive mining field embracing all of Utah and reaching out into adjoining States. Two transcontinental railway lines furnish quick and ample communication east and west, while the Oregon Short Line and connecting lines, extending from Los Angeles to Portland, bring it into close and intimate communication north and south. A system of branch lines radiate from it to all the leading mining districts. Its location in the center of a vast and marvelously rich section of diversified resources destines it to be the future metropolis of the West. Upward of fifty millions in metals is produced annually from the mines of Utah alone, not mentioning other mining regions naturally tributary to it, of which nearly five millions is gold. You ought to establish a mint, but I am asking the retention of an assay office.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to register a protest against the discontinuance of the assay office at Salt Lake City and also the other offices of the surrounding States. These offices I believe to be performing a laudable public purpose. They are important, so far as the mining industry is concerned. The Government assay office located in close proximity to where the precious metals are produced tends in no small degree to the promotion of that great industry. It enables the miner to ascertain the value of his product and to find a place where he can dispose of it and obtain its just value.

It is not the fact that the principal patrons of the assay offices, especially the one I represent, are the large corporations and institutions, but it is a fact that they serve the man who takes his pick and his shovel, his blankets and his provisions and goes to the hills, to the mountains, and there digs into the sides of the mountains, or goes into the streams and erects sluice boxes and washes out the gold. When he shall have done so, in a week or a month he cleans up his little earnings, takes them to the assay office near by, ascertains the value, receives his money, and renews his stock of provisions and returns to the hills in search of more. That is the class of men that is benefited the most by the assay offices.

The assay office furnishes him a market near at hand, where he can ascertain the value and dispose of his product. It obviates the necessity of his going to the banker or commissioner and paying not only the expenses of the transportation of the metal to the mints, but the percentage or commission, which is considerable, for transacting the business for him in order that he may obtain a market for his product.

Now, gold produced from the mines and by the prospectors are not on a parity with products of the farm and many other industries, where there is a large competition for profits. The Government of the United States is the principal purchaser in this special commodity. The Government of the United States coins it into money and puts it into the channels of trade. It is that article that must stand at the back of every instrument of credit in the land. I contend that these assay offices are a great national benefit, that this industry should be kept up, that they should be promoted, and that the Government should extend to them such aid as may be reasonable by the establishment of reasonable assay offices where it is found that they will be of benefit. I think it is a false economy to abolish these offices and thereby discourage the prospectors, discourage the men who go into the hills and dig out this precious material.

There is no class of men that are benefited more than the man of small means, the lessee of mines who goes into the mine, gets his carload of ore, conveys it to the mills where it is reduced, and then when he gets the bullion takes it to the assay office, ascertains the value, and disposes of it.

Mr. Chairman, in extending my remarks on the amendment of Mr. HOWELL, of Utah, to make provisions for the continued operations of the assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah, I wish to say that to discontinue said assay office will greatly discourage the prospectors and miners in a small way in my State; it will be regarded by them as a direct blow at their industries. It will place them at the mercy of the money changers of the land. It will deprive them of the Federal protection from extortion, which they have heretofore enjoyed, and place the product of their labor at a discount. It is legislation which directly affects the pioneers of the mining activities of the Western States, which have done so much in upholding the credit of this Nation by contributing large amounts of gold and silver to the Government's Treasury. And the only argument against the continuation of said assay offices is "that they do not pay running expenses; that the receipts from the fixed charges of the offices are not equal to the expenses incident to their operations," and "that public money should not be expended in the protection or promotion of any special enterprise or undertaking, or to any special section of our country; that there should be equal rights to all and special privileges to none." That is genuine Democratic doctrine, but let us examine just how you are applying your doctrine in this case. The New York assay office does not pay running expenses; there is a deficiency for last year of over $26,000. Why do you not apply your doctrine to that office? Why not abolish it for the very selfsame reasons upon which you propose to abolish the Salt Lake and other offices? What about the New Orleans office, where the deficiency is yet greater? Why not abolish it upon the same principle? Why not abolish the Seattle office, where there is a deficiency? What reason can you advance for the retention of the Helena office, in the State of Montana, where there is also a deficiency?

The majority of this House know that there are other and deeper reasons why they dare not abolish these offices, and yet they stand upon the same grounds that the Salt Lake office occupies. As to other industries, you spend millions of dollars each year to promote agriculture, and to which I do not object; you spend millions of dollars each year for rivers and harbors, for bridges, and many other local improvements, all in violation of your principles as above announced; yet you discriminate against the miner in some sections and in his favor in others. What reason, may I ask, do you find for maintaining an assay office at Helena, Mont., that does not equally apply to the office at Salt Lake? The same question may with equal propriety be asked as to the offices at New York, New Orleans, Seattle, and Helena. I am at a loss to understand how, upon principle, a Member of this House can justify a vote for any one of these offices and against any other of them. It seems to me that you are playing directly into the hands of stock gamblers and monopolistic banks by such action.

In the year 1912—I have no later figures at hand—Utah produced, in round figures, $12,500,000 in gold and silver, the greater part of which found its way into the Government mints and was coined and at once become a national asset, stimulating credit and trade; became at once taxable and contributed its proportion to the support of the National and State Governments. The Government fixes its own price at which it will purchase this commodity, and it has but little, if any, competition in its acquisition, because it reserves to itself the exclusive right to coin it into money, the principal use to which it is applied. Why should it not maintain stations or assay offices in close proximity to where it is produced, and thus facilitate its production and disposition? Such would be the policy of private business engaged in the purchase of a commodity. Why not of the Government? But if you have determined upon the abolishment of these assay offices, why do you not repeal the act by which they were created, and thereby do directly that which you are now accomplishing by your indirect action, so that the people might know just what your intentions were?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This is the weakest and the most indefensible of all the weak and indefensible propositions we have discussed.

Mr. HOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. For a question.

Mr. HOWELL. I want to give the gentleman one item of information about the assay office at Salt Lake. It was only established about three years ago, and its life has been in jeopardy ever since. It has not been able to establish the business that it would if it had not been threatened.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman is not asking a question, he is making a speech. There were just 300 deposits during the last fiscal year, not one for each working day.

Mr. HOWELL. Let me make one more statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; I can not yield. Now, the idea of keeping an assayer and an assistant assayer and not have one deposit a day! In 1913 they earned $1,761.69 and they spent $14,648.87. Gentlemen, I do not want to burden the committee by stating anything further on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 38 ayes and 59 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. I believe there are five minutes remaining, and I want to make a statement.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the city of Seattle, which was taken care of so nicely by this committee, we want to tender our thanks. It is true that the Representatives of the city of Seattle, two of us on the floor, and my colleague from a neighboring city of Washington [Mr. FALCONER] have been standing by the other westerners who have lost their assay offices. In doing this, however, we have been following a Democratic doctrine.

Eighteen years ago a great and peerless Democratic leader startled the Nation with a speech which contained this sentiment:

> The miners who go 2,000 feet into the earth or climb 2,000 feet upon the cliffs and bring forth from their hiding places the precious metals to be poured into the channels of trade are as much business men as the few financial magnates who, in a back room, corner the money market of the world.

And so, as we looked over these estimates here and we saw that the city of New York, with its Wall Street, its trust magnates, and its monopolists, was going to retain an assay office and mint, and that Philadelphia and the great cities of the East were going to retain theirs, notwithstanding the New York office lost annually $30,000 for the Government, we thought we would stand by our neighbors and associates from the great Northwest, and so we have voted to-day with Arizona, Montana, South Dakota, and Utah.

Seattle is a great city. We lost the regional reserve bank that we thought we were entitled to; but after all, since this great committee is going to save us this assay office where we can dump our tons of gold into the Government's lap and have it coined into money of the United States of America, we will get along all right. Seattle, the queen city of the Northwest, is a thousand miles away from the Golden Gate, and we have to send millions of our money down there to the regional reserve bank; but we will not miss it, because we have this assay office, and out from the gold mines of our State and from the mountains of gold in Alaska will come on the Government railroad that you have ordered constructed tons upon tons of gold.

Our assay office out there has received since 1898 435 tons of gold and it has been coined into $218,612,649.14, and in 1913 it handled $8,255,580 in pure gold, so you could not very well take our assay office from us, and we are glad of it. We are able to take care of ourselves without a regional reserve bank, but we could not spare this assay office. We have a habit in Seattle of going out into our back yards when we need money, taking a shovel, and digging down and getting a shovelful of gold, putting it into a bucket and taking it to the assay office. We could easily send a few millions to San Francisco to help the bankers down there, but if you took away our assay office we would have to establish one of our own.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Would there not be more remuneration in digging up dirt in the back yards of Seattle than serving as Members of Congress?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, we serve in Congress through pure patriotism. [Laughter.]

My colleagues, I wish I could tell you a part of the beautiful and thrilling story of Seattle. Why, we have 300,000 people, and the next time you take the count we will have a million. We can send our gold to the South and to the East, but we would not part with one of our loyal and happy citizens for all the regional reserve banks in the country. We are not all rich, but we have no slums; no wearied laborers do piecework on man-killing machines out there; we do not have paupers and a dependent population. Say, men, they do not go to sleep there when they work, and eight hours is the limit. The children do not work in factories; they go to school. The working women are busy only eight hours, and then they go to their homes. I am sorry for that part of the country for which we appropriate $300,000 to stamp out some kind of ticks that pester the cattle, but we do not have ticks or mosquitoes or bedbugs or jiggers in Seattle. I cheerfully and with sympathetic heart voted for the $400,000 to check hog cholera. Our hogs are healthy, and we can pay our part without missing it.

Seattle! Why, it is the healthiest city in the United States, barring none, and we are getting healthier every year. In 1911 the death rate was 8.87 per thousand; in 1912 it was 8.52; and in 1913, 8.31.

How the people of Seattle do love the light! It is the best lighted city in the world, and the people enjoy city light in their homes furnished by the municipal lighting plant at less than one-half the price charged in your eastern cities.

Our schools excel those of the Capital City and are free, from kindergarten to postgraduate. A recent report on various American cities developed the fact that Seattle had less illiteracy within its borders than any other city in the country.

Why, we are now taking charge of the street-car systems, and the city will before long own its own trolleys and charge a 3-cent fare.

Would you like to know about our parks? Well, we have 1,803 acres of parks bought, owned, paid for, and maintained by the people. Your parks in this city are entirely unfit for comparison, except for your statuary. You have more marble men in these little cramped-up playgrounds. We have parks, and we have lakes and drives and flowers and fountains. But that is not a start of what we have out there besides this assay office. We have 94.47 square miles in our city limits, with a harbor frontage of 140 miles. We have 57 steamship lines and 400 street cars in service. Six transcontinental railroads—six, mind you—haul freight and passengers to our city, and they do not everlastingly holler for higher freight rates, either. They are entering upon a great era of new building just outside the city and up and down and over and across the State.

Just a few more things, and I will stop. We have 70 public schools, and 155 teachers in our university—all free, too. We have 31 miles of boulevards, 178 miles of paved streets, 737 miles of planked and graded streets, 950 miles of cement walks, 5,816 incandescent street lights, 960 arc street lights, and 1,671 cluster-light poles.

Oh, I am always ashamed of the Nation's Capital when I get back to Seattle; and the Government does not pay a cent of taxes in Seattle or help in any other way; no Washington, D. C., half-and-half policy there.

But I have not told you near all. We have 225 churches and 27 banks in Seattle, the tallest building in the world outside of New York, and, would you believe it, we have the longest dock in the United States—2,580 feet long.

Just think of this: Roses bloom all the year round, and the average temperature is 52°. It never gets hot in summer and rarely ever freezes in winter.

Do you know a city like that does not have to have a regional reserve bank? In Seattle the women vote, the people think, and everything moves. We have the gold, and plenty of it; and, as I said at the outset, I thank the committee for leaving the assay office with us, for if we had no assay office what would we do with our gold? My friends here insist that I must wind up these remarks with the closing words of the Chicago speech to which I referred, so I insist that if you took our assay office and left on our hands all these tons and tons of gold, we would have to say:

You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold.

[Laughter and applause.]

[By unanimous consent, Mr. FRENCH was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 64, the following language:

Mint at New Orleans, La.: Assayer, who shall have general charge of the institution as under section 3560, Revised Statutes, and who shall be a practical assayer, $2,500; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, who shall perform the duties of cashier, $1,500; in all $5,500.
For wages of workmen and other employees, $5,350.
For incidental and contingent expenses, $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, strike out the following language, beginning on line 1:
"Mint at New Orleans, La.: Assayer, who shall have general charge of the institution as under section 3560, Revised Statutes, and who shall be a practical assayer, $2,500; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, who shall perform the duties of cashier, $1,500; in all, $5,500.
"For wages of workmen and other employees, $5,350.
"For incidental and contingent expenses, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 36, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. A Democratic stronghold is safe.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 64, line 1, by striking out the word "mint" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "assay office."

As a matter of fact, there is no mint at New Orleans and there has been no money coined there for nearly four years; but it looks more important to call it a mint.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, line 1, strike out the word "mint" and insert in lieu thereof the words "assay office."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is not in order, and I make the point of order against it. They have already moved to strike out that paragraph and you can not offer a further amendment to perfect it.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is this: The law fixes a mint at New Orleans and not an assay office, and this is a new proposition, which is a change of law.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, is it not too late to make the point of order after the Chair put the affirmative vote?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no discussion on the amendment——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, that this is a change of existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. After the gentleman offers an amendment and discusses it——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not discuss it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to take advantage of the gentleman from South Carolina——

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair is of opinion that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let us vote it down; but the Chair put the question before you can make any statement.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from South Carolina will indulge the Chair, he is trying to make a statement. The gentleman from Idaho offered an amendment and discussed the amendment, and the Chair put the question and declared the result and then started to put the other side and the gentleman from South Carolina made the point of order. The Chair thinks the point of order came too late, and the question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending on page 52, line 6.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman let that go over?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, Mr. Chairman; I want to get through with this business to-day. We have been all day on one proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I hope, it is now 6 minutes of 6 o'clock——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I desire to finish this thing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 6, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understood this amendment was to be considered with the others, and debate was at an end upon the proposition.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no; that is not it. I do think, however, the gentleman ought to consent to let this go over. I am almost inclined to make the point of order. I hope the gentleman will let this go over until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The agreement entered into was only as to the assay offices, and the gentleman is entitled to five minutes if he wants it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask the gentleman if he will not let this go over and the committee now rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the committee for a moment.

In the hearings, on page 234. I find that the chairman asked this question of the Director of the Mint:

Mr. JOHNSON. You are now asking for $30,000 for freight on bullion and coin for the year 1915. You were given only $10,000 for the current year. How are you getting along with $10,000?

Mr. ROBERTS. We are not getting along at all. We had to practically cease receiving bullion at some of the assay offices.

And then, further down, Mr. Roberts said:

We presented the matter to the committees at the session last summer, and nothing being done, we discontinued the purchase of bullion at these assay offices except on condition that the depositors would pay the express charges to the mints.

And then, further down, the chairman of the committee said:

The only difference between that condition and the present condition would be that instead of the Government paying the express on it to the mint the owner would pay the express himself?

Now, I submit to the committee that they ought not to take the position that practically closes these assay offices. Inasmuch as Congress has seen fit to retain them, they ought not to attempt to abolish them indirectly. Mr. Chairman, I will wait until the gentleman from South Carolina gets through talking, as I wish his attention. I was in hopes I could induce him to listen to some things I had to say. I do not think the gentlemen of the committee intended to be placed in the position of doing indirectly what the Congress had decided they should not do.

Now, the result of it has been that these assay offices—and in speaking for Seattle I am speaking for all of them—were practically compelled to close their doors because of the fact that they had no money to transport this bullion, and under those circumstances they refused to take it. I do not know whether they had a legal right to do it or not, but they did it.

In the city of Seattle, for illustration: A miner returns from Alaska. He has already paid from $4 to $10 a thousand to get his gold to the city of Seattle. He takes it to the assay office, and they demand $1.50 more a thousand, and he either has to pay that or send it to San Francisco and pay the expressage, and then pay the cost of the exchange if he has the money sent to him at Seattle. The result of that will be that the miner will go over to Vancouver, British Columbia; and the only reason that gold has not been going over there—several million dollars of it—instead of coming to Seattle was because the people of Seattle themselves paid the cost of the transportation of this bullion. The miner who comes from Alaska can stop at Vancouver on his way and have his gold assayed without costing him one penny.

The question comes as to whether or not the committee ought to place itself in that attitude, not only antagonistic to the interests of the miners of Alaska and the others who bring their gold to the city of Seattle or any of these other assay offices, but they are placing themselves directly aganist the will of Congress. I admit they have a perfect right to make a fight on these assay offices and abolish them if they can—and perhaps from their standpoint, at least, they ought to be abolished. But I do not think the gentlemen want to be placed in the position of attempting to do indirectly what Congress says they shall not do directly.

If the gentleman is willing to give me some assurance, in case these assay offices remain in the bill, that they will have a reasonable amount carried for the transportation of this bullion, I do not care to press this amendment. All I want is that this matter should be taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will place in the RECORD a statement relative to this matter from the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle:

SEATTLE ASSAY OFFICE.

The maintenance of a gold-purchasing institution at Seattle by the Government answers a twofold purpose; it not only provides a place for the Alaska miner to dispose of his product at the nearest permanent location possible, but it places the proceeds from the sale of his gold at the point desired—the place where he purchases his supplies.

It would not be practicable for the Government to purchase the gold in Alaska, for the reason that there are several large producing districts, and no one institution could serve the needs of all, as the districts are widely separated, namely, Juneau, Nome, Fairbanks, and Iditarod; besides, the proceeds from the sale of Alaska bullion are not required at any of these points, but at Seattle, where nearly all the Alaska supplies are procured.

If an assay office were not maintained at Seattle, it would mean that Alaska bullion would have to be transported 1,000 miles farther for disposition than at present, and that extra distance wholly by rail—Seattle to San Francisco or Denver—with a transfer from water to rail at Seattle in any event. This would mean an additional cost in transportation, the loss of at least five days' interest on the value of the Alaska product, as that is the least time possible to get bullion from Seattle to San Francisco and the proceeds for same returned to Seattle where it is needed. Further, if the bulk of the Alaska bullion should go to Denver or San Francisco and the returns sent to Seattle in Denver or San Francisco exchange, the Seattle banks, undoubtedly, would be compelled to impose exchange on same, which they do not impose on the Government drafts now issued in Seattle for assay office purchases, all of which would fall on the Alaska miner. Further, we should not overlook the fact that any material increase in cost of marketing the Alaska product might divert it to the Canadian assay office at Vancouver, British Columbia.

If anything needs encouragement at the hands of the Government, surely it is the Alaska mining industry, for the prospector there has to undergo great hardships; a rigorous climate to combat, high cost of food, frozen ground to be thawed out before digging, and, after all these, the chance of a shortage of water with which to extract the gold from the soil he has so laboriously dug out. These conditions are hardly conceivable to one not personally familiar with that Territory, and are unknown in other mining localities in this country.

It is astonishing to think that an institution that affords the benefits as does the Seattle office should be forced continually to offer reasons for its right to exist. Since the opening of that office in July, 1898, to the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1913, there have been received deposits of bullion amounting to $211,363,034.76. The total appropriations received for its installation and maintenance amount to $681,665.98; of this amount there has been returned to the Treasury of the United States, unexpended, the sum of $45,527.48, leaving a net disbursement for the period of $636,138.50; the total earnings of the office for charges, etc., collected during the period were $343,553.81; the amount of the property on hand, according to the inventory taken June 30, 1913, was $21,920.46, showing the net cost to the Government for operating the institution from July 15, 1898, to June 30, 1913, a period of 15 years, to be $270,664.23.

The appropriation of $41,550 for the current year is ample to properly take care of all the Alaska product that could possibly be sent to an assay office for purchase. There undoubtedly will be returned at the close of this year to the Treasury of the United States unexpended balances of the current years appropriation amounting to $8,500, as the receipts of the office for the year will fall below the normal amount; due to the shortage of water in all the Alaska mining districts during the past season the entire appropriation will not be needed this year.

As to the further expense to the Government for transporting bullion from the assay office to a mint subsequent to purchase, it seems unjust to add this further cost to the heavy burden the Alaska miner already has to bear. It is hardly to be believed, yet it is a fact, that the Alaska miner has to pay from $4 to $10 per thousand to get his gold to the Seattle office. Were he to pay the further transportation charge for having his bullion shipped from the assay office to either the mint at Denver or San Francisco it would mean the addition of $1.50 per thousand to the already heavy transportation charges which Alaska bullion has to stand, if instead he did not divert his bullion to the Canadian office at Vancouver, British Columbia.

From $12,500 to $15,000 annually will cover the cost of transporting the Alaska bullion from the Seattle office to a mint, and this amount should be allowed by the Government, if that office is to be maintained, for the benefit of Alaska.

It would not be necessary to ship to a mint the bullion purchased at the Seattle assay office if that institution were furnished with a refinery, for then the Alaska bullion could be melted into refined certificate bars instead of unparted bars as at present, and stored in Seattle to be used for commercial purposes or for shipment to the Orient.

Attention is called to the fact that, according to reports of the Director of the Mint for the fiscal year 1912, the latest received, the eight assay offices of the mint service, exclusive of the institutions at Philadelphia, San Francisco, Denver, and New York, cost the Government only $102,493.51 net to maintain, including cost of transportation of bullion from the assay offices to the mints during the year 1912.

All of these institutions undoubtedly are beneficial to the mining interests of the various localities in which they are situated. This Government expenditure for the year, of $102,493.51, in behalf of the mining industry is small compared with the amounts appropriated for the agricultural interests, Forestry Service, etc.

It may be interesting to know that the amount expended by the Government for the Philadelphia Mint during the year 1912 was $487,- 315.21; the earnings of that institution, exclusive of seigniorage, were $133,192.28, leaving a net expense to the Government for the year of $354,122.93, or more than three times the amount expended during the same period for the eight assay offices.

When one stops to consider the fact that the expenditure of the $102,493.51 for the eight assay offices undoubtedly resulted in great good, serving as a stimulus to the mining industries in the various localities in which these offices are located, while the expenditure of $354,122.93 at Philadelphia is for an institution not located in or near a mining locality. The work performed there might just as well be done at New York. It is surprising that these assay offices should be harassed continually and this other institution and other branches of the service continue to receive bountiful support from the Government.

The discontinuance of the Seattle office would benefit the Wells, Fargo Express Co and a private smelter at San Francisco, as follows: Any bullion deposited at the Seattle office now goes to Denver and the Wells, Fargo Express Co. has to compete with three other express companies for the business; on shipments of bullion and coin out of Denver it can only get a portion of that business. If the Alaska bullion went to San Francisco, where it would very likely go if the Seatle office should close, unless it went to the Canadian assay office at Vancouver, British Columbia, the Wells, Fargo Express Co. would have the exclusive haul to San Francisco and would handle all shipments of coin and bullion out of that place, as it controls the express situation in that city. Any diversion of gold bullion from Seattle to San Francisco would benefit the smelter there, for that concern would then be able to purchase gold which it can not get now, as the gold received at the Seattle office is consigned to the Government.

This office receives the largest quantity of virgin bullion of any office of the Government outside of the mints, not excepting the one at New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in 1913, when all these assay offices were in operation, the amount used for freight was $23,000. We have dispensed with four of them. After this we will have to transport less bullion from New York to Philadelphia, and, unless something shall develop that this committee does not now know about, we will not need the money that the gentleman is asking for in his amendment; so I hope that the committee will vote it down.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I find that last year—and I think you are slightly mistaken in regard to your figures—that for transportation of bullion from Seattle alone the Government paid $8,802, and I know that the citizens of the city of Seattle——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You know the citizens never spend anything.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know they did.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You are talking about the present year and not about last year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, if the gentleman will just wait now, I will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You appeared before the committee and made the statement that the people of Seattle made up a purse this year, not last year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Put it whatever year you want. The Government paid out $8,802, and the citizens of Seattle paid out, according to the last account I had, something like $1,600. If that be true, if you transport the bullion next year from Seattle, it will take all of the $10,000 and will leave nothing for New Orleans or Helena or New York. And upon that point I called on the Director of the Mint——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. New York does not need any. She does not ship any bullion.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is large enough as it now stands, and I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. LAFFERTY, and Mr. FALCONER were granted unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DANIEL THEW WRIGHT.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 446 (H. Rept. 514).

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is necessary concerning the alleged official misconduct of Daniel Thew Wright; whether he has accepted favors from lawyers appearing before him; whether he has permitted counsel for a street railway company to indorse his notes while said counsel was retained in business and causes before his court; whether he has performed the services of lawyer and accepted a fee during his tenure of judicial office, in violation of the statute of the United States; whether he has collected and wrongfully appropriated other people's money; whether he has purposely changed the record in order to prevent reversal of causes wherein he presided; whether he has borne deadly weapons in violation of law; whether he is guilty of judicial misconduct in the trial of a writ of habeas corpus to an extent which provoked a reviewing court of the District of Columbia to justly characterize the trial as a "travesty of justice"; whether he has arbitrarily revoked, without legal right, an order of a judge of concurrent jurisdiction appointing three receivers, so as to favor his friend by appointing him sole receiver; whether he is morally and temperamentally unfit to hold judicial office; and whether he has been guilty of various other acts of personal and judicial misconduct for which he should be impeached.

That this committee is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ, if necessary, an additional clerk and stenographer, and to appoint and send a subcommittee whenever and wherever necessary to take testimony for the use of said subcommittee.

That the subcommittee shall have the same power in respect to obtaining testimony as is herein given to the said Committee on the Judiciary; and the Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpœnas for any witness or witnesses.

That the expenses incurred in this investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the present.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be now read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is what I have presented to the House—the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany H. Res. 446:

"The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House resolution No. 446, report the same back with the recommendation that it be amended to read as follows, and as so amended that it be adopted:

"'Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is necessary concerning the alleged official misconduct of Daniel Thew Wright, an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; whether he has corruptly accepted favors from lawyers appearing before him; whether he has corruptly permitted counsel for a street railway company to indorse his notes while said counsel was retained in business and causes before his court; whether he has performed the services of a lawyer and accepted a fee during his tenure of judicial office, in violation of the statute of the United States; whether he has collected and wrongfully appropriated other people's money; whether he has purposely and corruptly changed the record in order to prevent reversal of causes wherein he presided; whether he has borne deadly weapons in violation of law; whether he has arbitrarily revoked, without legal right, an order of a judge of concurrent jurisdiction appointing three receivers, so as to favor his friend by appointing him sole receiver; and whether said judge has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached.

"'And in making this investigation the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a clerk and stenographer, and is also authorized to appoint a subcommittee to act for and on behalf of the whole committee whenever and wherever it may be deemed advisable to take testimony for the use of said committee. The said subcommittee while so employed shall have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given to said Committee on the Judiciary, with a sergeant at arms, by himself or deputy, who shall serve the process of said committee or subcommittee and shall attend the sitting of the same as ordered and directed thereby. The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpœnas for any witness or witnesses.

"'The expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.'"

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Wherein does the amendment differ from the original resolution?

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. It does not differ in any material respect, but it puts it in better form, I think.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is the regular course that is followed in these cases?

Mr. CLAYTON. It follows substantially the resolution adopted in the Hanford case.

Mr. MANN. Modified to suit the charges in this case?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do these resolutions usually provide for the employment of a clerk and a stenographer?

Mr. CLAYTON. They do in some cases; yes.

Mr. MANN. That is necessary, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is necessary. In fact, it was done in the Speer case and it was done in the Hanford case.

Mr. MANN. Was this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. There was no disagreement in the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute in lieu of the original resolution.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference in the case of the bill (H. R. 15493) granting a pension to Maggie Feavel from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that can be done through the basket, without going through the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will change the reference of that bill.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill (H. R. 13581) for the relief of the landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River, in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and the parish of West Feliciana, State of Louisiana, which was erroneously referred to the Private Calendar, be referred to the Union Calendar, as of the same date that it was referred to the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. This is the bill which was called up last night, is it not?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the change of reference of this bill from the Private Calendar to the Union Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does it belong on the Union Calendar? It can not go there unless it belongs there.

Mr. MANN. It belongs on the Union Calendar. It would go there by order of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the bill. It belongs on the Union Calendar. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a point of order against it last night for the same reason.

Mr. MANN. I reserved a point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is referred to the Union Calendar.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE—LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD briefly on the subject of equal suffrage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of equal suffrage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, April 11, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 11, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We hail with joy and gratitude, our Father in heaven, the approach of another Easter, with its profound significance, filling the heart anew with hope, faith, and love, for since light is stronger than darkness, right than wrong, so life is stronger than death. It quickens the pulsations of the heart, soothes the sorrowing, illumines the dark valley, fills the great beyond with light divine, and makes the whole world kin. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

So long Thy power has blest me, sure it still Will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile.

So may our lives be stronger, our hopes burn brighter, and our work be more efficient in all that makes for the betterment of mankind. In the spirit of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the reference of the bill H. R. 10729, making appropriations for the printing and publishing of maps and reports relating to the kelp beds on the Pacific coast, was changed from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on Printing.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

Territory of Alaska: Governor, $7,000; 4 judges, at $7,500 each; 4 attorneys, at $5,000 each; 4 marshals, at $4,000 each; 4 clerks, at $3,500 each; in all, $87,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I listened yesterday evening with a great deal of delight to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] when he delivered his lecture to gentlemen on that side of the House about economy, and I congratulate the gentleman from New York that his lecture probably saved the Government $1,000. I want to call the attention of the committee who have been talking economy—and I am not criticizing them for doing that—to a matter that came up during the discussion of the Agriculture bill. While that bill was under consideration I called the attention of the House to the publicity bureaus that were supposed to exist. The chairman of the committee denied that he had any knowledge of such an organization, and I have no doubt that he was perfectly frank and truthful in that statement.

But I want to call the attention of the House, and especially the members of this committee who have the bill in charge, to the fact that I hold here in my hand, sent out from the Forestry Service under frank, an article praising the performances of that service. I have here another one that was sent to me by an editor in Kansas—sent out from the same source, and, of course, for the same purpose—telling what a great institution the Forestry Service is. That was sent out under frank. I have here some other articles sent out from the Agricultural Department, not from the Forest Bureau, that is under frank. One of them is an article that is to be released for the Sunday papers April 19. It goes on to tell at great length about cockroaches—a very interesting article—and I will have an opportunity to give the papers something that is really news, because I will give it out several days before it is released. This startling information about cockroaches ought to reach the people at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman says this was sent out under a frank. Does he mean a frank or a penalty envelope?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Under frank in a penalty envelope. I have them here. I call attention to the law, especially as applied to the Agricultural Department. As I understand, the law reads as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation for publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

There can be no question but that this is in direct violation not only of the spirit but express words of the statute, to prepare and send out these articles at Government expense.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the article sent out in the penalty envelope prepared in any department?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; the Forestry Service, in the Department of Agriculture, prepares and sends out these in relation to that service. It is in the letterhead, and on the envelope it says, "Official business" and "penalty for private use is $300"; on the other corner are the words "U. S. Agricultural Department, Forest Service." On the bottom it is marked in large letters, "News matter." I understand this stuff goes to most of the newspapers in the United States.

I have no direct information myself, but I was told that the preparation and sending out of these articles amounts to $100,000 annually.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me say to the gentleman that the provision he has read with reference to the prohibition, as I understand, was carried in the last Agriculture bill and also in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand it is in the Agriculture bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. There was a prohibition against the use of any money for that purpose in the deficiency bill, put in by an amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That was the very purpose of my calling this matter to the attention of the House this morning, to find out where this money comes from—what fund do they draw upon? I asked yesterday, and they said that it did not appear in any appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto close in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendment thereto close in two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the purpose of this news letter to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The purpose of all of these letters that I have seen, or at least the main purpose of those sent out from the Forest Service, is to exploit the work of that service and to show the wonderful things they are doing, to make some explanation of their useless existence. One of them goes into detail as to how they spend their time in the winter up in some of these Northern States, and how they pass the time on windy days, how they take advantage of bad weather to run up their accounts. My purpose in calling this to the attention of the House was this: If correctly informed, about $100,000 a year is expended simply for exploiting these different bureaus, and is done in direct contravention of the statute. When the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was talking yesterday about economy I could not help thinking that this ought to be brought to his attention and to the attention of the country, and perhaps a saving could be made by having the departments obey the law.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman think it is a little late to call attention to extravagance in the Agricultural bill, after that bill has been passed, and when we are considering another bill, and does not the gentleman think that if he were proceeding in the interest of economy he should have called attention to the matter while the Agricultural bill was under consideration?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. I did call this to the attention of the House when the Agricultural bill was under consideration. If the gentleman had been in the Chamber a moment ago he would have heard me state that. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture stated at that time that he knew nothing about such a practice, and denied that it existed. I have no doubt that he stated the facts as he understood them. One gentleman on this side of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], made a statement that if any such practice was being followed, it ought to be stopped. Since that time some people evidently seeing my remarks in the RECORD have sent me these articles. As I said a moment ago, I am trying to find out where they get the money. It does not appear in these bills, and I think it ought to be called to the attention of the committee.

To further enlighten the country I will publish in the RECORD some of this very valuable self-advertisement practiced by the Agricultural Department and paid for by the Government. Also an editorial comment thereon.

METHODS OF EXTERMINATING COCKROACHES.

SUCCESSFUL TRAPS ARE DESCRIBED AS SUBSTITUTE FOR DISAGREEABLE INSECT POWDERS AND DANGEROUS POISONS—FUMIGATING WITH PYRETHRUM POWDER RECOMMENDED.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

With the approach of warm spring weather, cockroaches multiply rapidly and leave their winter hiding places. If cockroaches are troublesome in the house, the following simple remedy, recommended by one of the Department of Agriculture's scientists, will unquestionably destroy great quantities of the pest and keep them in check as effectively as troublesome insect powders and dangerous poisons:

Mix one part of plaster of Paris and three or four parts of flour. Place this dry mixture in a saucer or on a flat piece of wood or tin, where roaches are numerous. Near by place another flat plate containing pure water. Supply a few inclines of wood or cardboard from the floor to the edge of the plate or saucer to give easy access. Float one or two thin pieces of wood on the water so that they will touch the edge of the dish. The insects readily eat the plaster mixture, become thirsty, and drink. The water makes the plaster set in the intestines and kills the roach. Such traps may be placed in pantries, and bakeries in particular, with good results.

Another simple trap which has been successfully used is the following: A deep vessel or jar is partially filled with stale beer, for which roaches seem to have a special fondness. A number of flat strips of rough wood are placed at an incline against the vessel and bent over so that they project into the interior a few inches. The roaches climb up the inclined sticks to get the beer, and slip off into the vessel.

This trap proves more attractive to certain species of roaches than to others. The so-called oriental cockroach is more readily attracted by this trap than the "Croton bug." The latter received its name because it came into prominence at the time of the completion of the Croton system of waterworks in New York City. The extension of this system gave it means of entering into residences and greatly encouraged its spread. Dampness of water pipes is favorable to it, and it may be carried by the pressure of the water long distances through the pipes without injury. This roach has so multiplied in the eastern United States that it has now become the commonest and best known of the domestic species.

A French trap that has been used with success is the following: Some attractive bait, such as stale beer or flour or sliced raw potato, is placed in a box, the cover of which is replaced by four glass plates inclined downward, funnellike, and closely joined, except at the bottom. The roaches fall from these pieces of glass into the box and are unable to escape.

There are various poisons which, it is asserted, are fairly effective as remedies against roaches. The only one of these that seems to give satisfactory results is a phosphorus paste, sold in the form of pills. It consists of sweetened flour paste containing 1 to 2 per cent is phosphorus, and is spread on bits of paper or cardboard and placed in the runways of roaches. This mixture has been used very successfully in the department to free desks from Croton bugs, numbers of the dead insects being found in the drawers every day during the time the poison was kept about. As phosphorus is poisonous to human beings and domestic animals, besides being highly inflammable, it should be used very carefully.

Considerable relief may be gained by a liberal use of pyrethrum powder. It is not a perfect remedy, however, and is at best but a temporary expedient, while it soils shelves and other objects over which it is dusted. It should be used fresh and liberally applied. Roaches are often paralyzed by it when not killed outright, and the morning after an application the infested premises should be gone over and all dead or partially paralyzed roaches swept up and burned.

Pyrethrum may also be burned in an infested apartment. The smoke and vapors generated by the burning of this insecticide are often more effective in destroying roaches than the application of the substance in the ordinary way as a powder. There is no attendant danger of explosion, and the only precaution necessary is to see that the room is kept tightly closed for from 6 to 12 hours.

That this pest has long been known in this country is evident from the following description, written in 1748, in Catesby's Natural History of Carolina:

"The cockroach.—These are very troublesome and destructive vermin, and are so numerous and voracious that it is impossible to keep victuals of any kind from being devoured by them without close covering. They are flat, and so thin that few chests or boxes can exclude them. They eat not only leather, parchment, and woolen, but linen and paper. They disappear in winter and appear most numerous in the hottest days in summer. It is at night they commit their depredations and bite people in their beds, especially children's fingers that are greasy. They lay innumerable eggs, creeping into the holes of old walls and rubbish, where they lie torpid all the winter. Some have wings and others are without—perhaps of different sexes."

FORESTERS COMPLETE WINTER WORK.

Foresters who have just returned from winter work in the White Mountains of New Hampshire report that, while some hardship is entailed, as much can be accomplished in the dead of winter as in summer.

In most of the Government's field service it is usually thought best to work in the North during the summer months and in the South during the winter, the idea being to do the work with the least difficulty. In appraising lands for purchase under the Weeks law for the eastern national forests, however, the Forest Service has had to disregard latitude and season, because it was necessary to expedite the work in the North. During the past winter two camps of men have been estimating and valuing the forests which the Government contemplates purchasing on the slopes of the White Mountains.

WORK ON SNOWSHOES.

Because of the softness of the constantly falling snow, the work was done mainly on snowshoes. At times the temperature has been around 20° below zero for considerable periods, and the parties now in report some occasions when the thermometers registered nearly 40° below. The crews were housed in winter camps like those of the lumberjacks, and in order to make full use of the short winter days they were out by daylight and did not return until dark. The work of the crews required continuous walking. Diameters of trees were measured and the number of logs estimated in all merchantable trees growing on parallel strips 4 yards wide and 40 rods apart. From these estimates the full amount of timber was calculated.

THE CREW LEADER.

One man, the crew leader, used a compass to keep the men in the desired direction, mapped the country traversed, kept account of the distances covered as determined by actual measurement, and recorded all the information regarding timber. The other members of the crew measured the timber and gave their figures to the leader, who tallied them. The actual work, however, did not end with all-day climbs through snow on the mountain sides, with frequent exposure to the sweep of winds on the higher ridges and divides; during the long winter evenings, or on days when the snowstorms were so severe that outside work was impossible, the figures gathered were tabulated and the information grouped, so as to show the quantities of timber suitable for various products—such as saw timber, spruce for paper pulp, or birch for spool making. During the whole winter, however, it was noted that stormy days caused no more loss of time than in summer, and the health of the men in the party was, as a rule, better than in hot weather.

It is said that the men became quite inured to the cold and liked it, one of the principal advantages being the absolute freedom from insects such as gnats and mosquitoes. While these same crews might appreciate an assignment to the same region for the following summer, those who have the work in charge say it may be the lot of these same men to be assigned to the pine regions of the South during the hottest weather of August.

FEDERAL OFFICER SPEAKS AT FORESTRY MEETING.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 24.

J. Girvin Peters, chief of the office of State cooperation of the Federal Forest Service, spoke at the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the Minnesota State Forestry Association here to-day in favor of the acquisition by the State for forestry purposes of a portion of its 3,000,000 acres of waste land now available for such use. He pointed out that the State should take over this land because it is better able than private owners to practice forestry. He advocated that most States, and Minnesota in particular, should own the larger areas, should bring them back to productiveness as rapidly as possible, and should keep them constantly productive. To insure the best possible use of the forest lands of the State, he laid stress upon a combination of public ownership and public regulation.

The principal advantages to be gained from public ownership of the forests are, according to this authority, first, a continuous timber supply, which will assure a stable lumber industry and the steady employment of labor; second, protection of water resources, public recreation grounds, and game refuges; and, third, dependent on them, a constant source of revenue, not only to individuals through forest products and tourist traffic, but to the State itself through leases and sales of timber.

He told what other States have done, and indicated that Minnesota might well follow the lead of New York, which has a State forest area aggregating more than 1,600,000 acres. Pennsylvania ranks second with about 1,000,000 acres, Wisconsin third with 400,000, Michigan fourth with 230,000, South Dakota fifth with 75,000, and Minnesota sixth with 43,000.

Mr. Peters ventured the prediction that private owners will not voluntarily practice forestry until a timber shortage has forced the price of lumber up high enough to make tree growing profitable, and said that in the meantime the supply on the national forests will have to be relied on to relieve the situation, with the States doing their part in supplementing the work of the Federal Government.

Upon the much-discussed question of the relation between State and Federal ownership he made the broad distinction that State ownership looks to the interest of the individual State, while the Nation must care for national interests as a whole, and emphasized the fact that there is every reason for the closest cooperation between the two agencies. State forests, he says, are necessary to supplement national forests, and the efforts of both State and Nation will accomplish none too much. Yet he characterized the demand in certain quarters for State control of national forests as a movement whose object was to turn vast public resources over to private exploitation.

Speaking of Minnesota itself, Mr. Peters said that the proposition to retain and set aside as State forests approximately 1,000,000 acres of the 3,000,000 which the State owns is unquestionably a wise move, particularly in the light of the revenue which may be expected from the area. He assured the delegates to the convention that the areas which may be acquired have splendid possibilities for timber production and constant returns, concluding his remarks with the statement that "it is clearly in the interest of this State that the people should adopt the proposed amendment to the constitution and set aside the area permanently and forever as a State forest."

TO GIVE FARMERS CROP NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

In order to give to the farmer immediate news of detailed crop conditions in his own State as reported by the Government the Department of Agriculture about the middle of September will make a test experiment with a new system of circulating crop information by telegraph. The detailed statement giving information by States has hitherto been furnished to the farmers of the several localities in printed form and only by mail. As a result it took from 7 to 10 days for this information to reach the farmers in distant States through the post offices.

The department will try this test first in six States—Illinois, Missouri, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, and Texas. The Government crop news for each of these States will be telegraphed to a central point in that State. There the information will be quickly reproduced and mailed to all the newspapers in the State. In this way every paper, not merely the large dailies, but the county-seat and small-town papers, even in the most distant States, should be in possession of this information within from 12 to 18 hours after it is issued. As far as possible the information will be sent out so as to reach the small weeklies in time for use in their Thursday and Friday editions.

This new service has been effected through a cooperative arrangement between the Bureau of Statistics and the Weather Bureau officials. In each State the Weather Bureau has a man provided with modern facilities which will enable him to print and mail the telegraphed facts to every newspaper within a few hours. The printed matter thus circulated will give these newspapers (a) a full list of the crops; (b) the average condition of each crop for 10-year periods in that particular State; (c) the condition of the State crops for September 9. In the adjoining column will be given the same data for the United States, so that the farmers who read these notices can compare the crops in their State as of September 9 with the 10-year averages of their own State and in the same way with the average condition throughout the United States on September 9 and for 10 years.

These data are to be supplied for the reason that the condition of crops actually within a State has more effect on prices within that State than the conditions for the country at large.

The cost of this service, it is found, will be only nominal. All that will be necessary will be to telegraph the figures for two columns, and this can be done at a cost of not more than 75 cents for each State.

If the contemplated experiment is a success and the newspapers cooperate by publishing this special-service information, the plan will be extended eventually to serve the farmers of all the States.

"CANNED NEWS" IN WASHINGTON.

It seems more than a mere coincidence that at this time, when the administration is being subjected to the closest scrutiny by the country and numerous weaknesses in its various departments have been disclosed of so serious a character that even its friends make little effort to conceal their anxiety, the idea of the departmental press agent is being developed in Washington on a scale never dreamed of by its originators. This is particularly true with respect to the Department of Agriculture, which is branching out into the publicity field in a manner that would put a professional lobbyist to blush and would cause an outcry from the White House if attempted outside the inner circle of the powers that be. The latest scheme of Secretary Houston and his immediate subordinates is a telegraphic service "to give to the farmer immediate news of detailed crop conditions in his own State as reported by the Government," and the promise is held forth that this invasion of the publicity field will be formally inaugurated about the middle of the present month.

In addition to being a further indication of the policy of the administration to play politics with one of the executive departments and coddle the man with the hoe in an effort, presumably, to placate the agriculturist and catch the "Squash Center" vote, the plan, if carried to its logical conclusion, will serve further to concentrate the control of news from Washington. Doubtless the wealthy planters of Illinois will be as delighted as astounded to be informed by night letter that corn is the principal crop of that State, while thousands of farmers in Kansas will be gratified to hear over the palpitating wire that their fields lately were visited by a protracted dry spell, thus confirming their worst suspicions. Telegraphing to Topeka news of the recent drought would come about as near to carrying pig iron and soft coal to Pittsburgh as the brilliant geniuses now presiding over the destinies of Government at the capital could go. But after the crop reports, what next? Will it not be an easy step from this to the transmission of other "news" from the producer to the consumer? And what interests will be served by the elimination of the middleman, the newspaper man stationed in Washington for the purpose of ascertaining for his paper the information that it wants, not what some official thinks it should have? Means have been found for the evasion of the plain intent of Congress in eliminating press agents in the Government departments. Several of them have "soft" berths in the Agricultural Department, and judging by the current civil-service advertisements there is great clamor for more. Congressman Tawney, when chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, recognized the danger of news censorship in the departments, and provisions were placed in appropriation bills for its elimination. But the evil appears to be growing. Telegraphic service to the farmers may be as cheap as is claimed, but it looks suspiciously like the nose of a camel thrust under the tent. The neck and the hump doubtless will show themselves in due time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, clerk hire, not to exceed $2,250; janitor service, not to exceed $900; traveling expenses of the governor while absent from Juneau on official business; repair and preservation of executive mansion, including $700 for painting; stationery, lights, and fuel, to be expended under the direction of the governor, $7,850.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Last evening I desired to say a few words on the Seattle assay office, but owing to the great speed with which that paragraph was closed I did not have the opportunity. I now need a few minutes to call attention to some statements from an article entitled "Cabinet government in the United States," printed in 1879, in the International Review, by Thomas W. Wilson, now the President of the United States—Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we had 2 hours and 20 minutes of debate yesterday for the discussion of these assay offices.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that we had 4 minutes still remaining on this side out of the hour and 10 minutes to which we were entitled.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have already voted on the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I should like to have those 4 minutes in addition to my 5 minutes.

An article in the book I have here directly answers the statement just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. Further, in this article written by Thomas W. Wilson in 1879, and published in the International Review, I sincerely believe one finds the key to the attitude of the present occupant of the White House. Thomas W. Wilson's article is Woodrow Wilson's "guide, buckler, and rock." Thomas W. Wilson, as a writer, declares that Congress is irresponsible, and that it does the very things of which my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, has complained.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Who is Thomas W. Wilson?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He is Woodrow Wilson, now President of the United States. He says that Congress is a deliberative body in which there is little deliberation, a legislature which legislates with no real discussion. He says that committees can not properly do the work and that full debate at the right time is not allowed. Thomas W. Wilson says that with the cabinet form of government platforms must mean something, and that broken promises will end in broken power. Thomas W. Wilson says, also, that a President can seldom make himself a leader, and that Cabinet officers are but little better than chief clerks.

Mr. MURDOCK. Who is Thomas W. Wilson?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He is Woodrow Wilson, President of the freest Nation on God's footstool. He is Woodrow Wilson, and Woodrow Wilson is this Democratic administration, body, boots, and breeches. Thomas W. Wilson is Woodrow Wilson, who is leading on in this gradual overthrow of representative government; who has, as Senator CUMMINS said in Chicago yesterday, "for the time being obliterated Congress."

Thomas W. Wilson says in this book that there is no one in Congress to represent the Nation and no method by which the Executive can be supported, and argues for a cabinet form of government. He says:

Congress is a conglomeration of inharmonious elements, a collection of men representing, each in his neighborhood, each his local interest; all of it is at best only a limping comparison between the conflicting interests of the innumerable localities represented. There is no guiding of harmonizing power.

He advocates a cabinet government, with greatly extended powers. Concerning debate and the necessity for no gag rule, Thomas W. Wilson writes back in 1879, when he was but 23 or 24 years of age:

The main objection to a representative assembly should be the discussion of public business. They should legislate as if in the presence of the whole country, because they come under the closest scrutiny and fullest criticism of all the representatives of the country speaking in free and open debate. Only in such an assembly, only in such an atmosphere of publicity, only by means of such a vast investigating machine can the different sections of a great country learn each other's feelings and interests.

On that subject alone, I infer from the rule which limited debate on the tolls-repeal bill and prevented any possible amendment of it, Thomas W. Wilson has different views from Woodrow Wilson.

But he writes still further and stronger in favor of open debate. He says:

It is not enough that the general course of legislation is known to all. Unless during its progress it is subjected to a thorough, even a tediously prolonged, process of public sifting, to the free comment of friend and foe alike, to the ordeal of battle among those upon whose vote its fate depends, an act of open legislation may have its real intent and scope completely sealed by its friends and undiscovered by its enemies, and it may be as fatally as mischievous as the darkest measures of an oligarchy or a despot.

Then he says a little further on:

When the budget is submitted to the House for its consideration, only a very limited time is allowed for its discussion. Where, then, is there room for a thorough discussion?

Mr. Chairman, is not that exactly what happened to the Panama Canal tolls repeal bill 10 or 12 days ago? Mr. Chairman, did not the Executive acquiesce in the limiting of that debate?

Mr. Chairman, does the following paragraph from Thomas W. Wilson's article in this musty volume of a magazine, which has long since ceased publication, give the answer? I quote:

The President can seldom make himself recognized as a leader; he is merely the executor of a sovereign legislative will; his Cabinet officers are little more than chief clerks or superintendents in the executive departments, who advise the President as to matters in most of which he has no power of action independently of the concurrence of the Senate.

Note that line about Cabinet officers being little more than chief clerks. Why, that is even worse than being "knocked into a cocked hat." Perhaps with this light before us my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, was quite right in suggesting that the salary of the Secretary of State should be but $6,000 a year.

Thomas W. Wilson also says:

Congress as a body is not readily punishable. Left to their own resources, they—would be as helpless as any other mass meeting.

Congress—

That view seems to explain the lectures the Sixty-third Congress has received, as well as the advice to do things, "right or wrong." Apparently, too, it explains the vote of some Democratic Congressmen.

In this article Thomas W. Wilson intimates that no high-spirited man would long remain in the office of Presidency in which he was not permitted to pursue a policy, and that if defeated by both Houses he would naturally resign. He says:

If defeated by both Houses he would naturally resign, and not many years would pass before resignation upon defeat would have become an established precedent, and resignation upon defeat is the essence of responsible government.

Mr. Chairman, that is the way British Cabinets resign, and the way Presidents of some Republics other than this resign. But it is not the American way; it is as un-American as some other things this Congress is asked to do.

Mr. Chairman, Thomas W. Wilson in this article says:

In spite of constitutional barriers the legislature has become the imperial power of the State, as it must become under every representative system. * * * Complete separation of the legislative and executive branches long since led that able and sagacious commentator upon the Constitution, Chief Justice Story, to remark: "If it would not have been safe to trust the heads of departments, as representatives, to the choice of the people, as their constituents, it would have been at least some gain to have allowed them seats, like Territorial Delegates, in the House of Representatives, where they might freely debate without a title to vote.

Concerning committees of Congress Thomas W. Wilson says, in paragraphs taken by me at random:

Congress is a deliberative body in which there is little real deliberation; a legislature which legislates with no real discussion of its business. Our Government is practically carried on by irresponsible committees.

Almost all the real business of the House is transacted by committees. Unless the rules of the House be suspended by a special two-thirds vote every bill introduced must be referred, without debate, to the proper standing committee, with whom rests the privilege of embodying it, or any part of it, in their reports or of rejecting it altogether.

The House very seldom takes any direct action upon any measures introduced by individual Members. Its votes and discussions are almost entirely confined to committee reports and committee dictation. The whole attitude of business depends upon the standing committees. Even the discussions upon their directive reports are merely nominal—liberal forms, at most.

The last paragraph but one in Thomas W. Wilson's article says:

It—

Congress—

is a despotism which uses its power with all the caprice, all the scorn for settled policies, all the wild unrestraint which makes the methods of other tyrants so hateful to freedom.

Mr. Chairman, Thomas W. Wilson's article of 1879 is, I believe, a key to present administration activities and a guide to what may be expected—further Executive dictation, and further Federal usurpation. No wonder the words of Senator CUMMINS stand out when he says:

When I speak of the Democratic administration I mean Woodrow Wilson. The overthrow of representative government does not seem to have excited alarm, but the day will come when the country will understand better than it does now how vital it is to preserve independence of legislative authority.

Mr. Chairman, Thomas W. Wilson's article is entitled "Cabinet Government in the United States." It is printed in the International Review for August, 1879, a magazine which during its life was jointly circulated in England and the United States. I shall not take further time to read from the article at this time, but I ask unanimous consent to place further extracts in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For legislative expenses, namely: Salaries of members, $21,600; mileage of members, $9,178.20; salaries of employees, $5,160; printing of laws, $3,500; rent of legislative halls and committee rooms, $2,000; stationery, supplies, printing of bills, reports, etc., $3,500; in all, $44,938.20, to be expended under the direction of the governor of Alaska.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee what mileage we pay the members of the Alaska Legislature?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In Alaska it is 15 cents a mile.

Mr. MURDOCK. One way?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Both ways.

Mr. MANN. Under whose direction are these expenditures now made?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The governor is at the head of all the Territorial officials, and supervision is generally under him, just as is provided in this bill. The accounts are finally audited in the office of the Auditor for the Interior Department, but it is under the governor's supervision.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman happens to know, what change does this make from existing practices?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. All the items referred to in the paragraph, lines 3 to 9, aggregating $44,000, are expended under the superintendence of the governor or the control of the governor. He remits the account to the Auditor for the Interior Department for auditing.

Mr. MANN. Evidently some question has arisen or this new language would not be in the bill. I just wondered what it was. Of course, the expenditures are made in accordance with the acts of Congress which specifically fix what the expenses shall be or may be. The next item—may I ask the gentleman if the purpose of that is to permit the Secretary of the Interior to revise the estimates for the legislative expenses?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. I will say to the gentleman that the estimates come direct to the Secretary of the Treasury, without any jurisdiction over these people. He makes no revision, makes no inquiry. When we go to make up the bill we have not anybody who can tell us anything about it. There should be supervision or investigation by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Does not the law practically fix all of these items?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; but we think they ought not to expend that amount without inquiry into it.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For judges of circuit courts, at $4,000 each, so much as may be necessary, for the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. They used to refer to the fiscal year as the fiscal year of 1914–15. Then we got into the practice of referring to the fiscal year ending June 30 of a certain year. Now, do I understand the Committee on Appropriations to say that they have reached the conclusion to simply say "the fiscal year 1915," and that that is to be the practice hereafter?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is a statute fixing the fiscal year from July 1 to June 30, inclusive.

Mr. MANN. I know the fiscal year commences July 1 and ends June 30, but it has been referred to as the fiscal year—for instance, this one, the fiscal year 1913–14. I notice in this case they say "the fiscal year 1915." The custom has been to say "the fiscal year ending June 30" of a certain year. Of course, it will shorten it up if this becomes the practice of Congress and the department, and I do not think it is a bad practice, but I asked why the Committee on Appropriations had reached that conclusion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Why is it necessary to put in the language when the statute fixes the fiscal year?

Mr. MANN. The statute does not fix the name of the fiscal year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; but we are making appropriations here for a year referring back to the date for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914.

Mr. MANN. I think myself it might be a very good practice to always refer to the fiscal year by the date of June 30 of the year which ends, though that never has been the practice heretofore. If the Committee on Appropriations is going to follow that practice, I have no objection to it. I think anything that will shorten up these titles is a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For legislative expenses, namely: Furniture, light, telephone, stationery, record casings and files, printing and binding, indexing records, postage, ice, water, clerk hire, mileage of members, and incidentals, pay of chaplain, clerk, sergeant at arms, stenographers, typewriters, janitors, and messengers, $30,000: Provided, That the members of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii shall not draw their compensation of $200 or any mileage for an extra session, held in compliance with section 54 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What mileage do members of the Hawaiian Legislature get? Do they get the same as the Alaskan members?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir; I do not think it is so much. In Alaska they have a long distance to travel. In some cases travel is by dog sleds. It is very expensive traveling in Alaska. I am having the law of mileage in Hawaii hunted up. The mileage in Alaska is two or three times as much as it is in Hawaii.

Mr. MURDOCK. How old is this act which prohibits their taking mileage for extra sessions?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That limitation has been placed upon the appropriation bills for a number of years.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman I think the mileage allowed members of the Hawaiian Legislature is 10 cents a mile, while the mileage allowed members of the Alaskan Legislature is 15 cents a mile. I know I am correct in regard to the mileage of Alaska, and I may not on the other, but I think I am.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman know the origin of this statute?

Mr. COX. No; I do not. I have never looked it up.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. So far as the mileage in Alaska is concerned, it is stated that the sum allowed is not sufficient to pay more than a portion of them their mileage expenses, owing to the fact that some of them are compelled to travel by dog teams in January and February.

Mr. MANN. We had quite a debate on the mileage in Alaska when the Alaska Territorial bill was passed.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did the gentleman from Illinois hear what the gentleman from Tennessee said—that the mileage of Alaska did not meet the expenses?

Mr. MANN. I know that that is claimed to be the fact.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I referred only to a portion of the members. It met the expenses of a portion of them, but as to a good many it did not——

Mr. MANN. That is, as to some members?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As to the second, third, and fourth judicial divisions it is claimed the mileage does not pay anything like their actual traveling expenses.

Mr. MURDOCK. There has been no complaint from Hawaii?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; none I have heard of.

Mr. BRYAN. The usual mileage in the States is 10 cents a mile. Nearly every State in the Union has a rate of 10 cents a mile, and that is what it is in the State of Washington, and it is customary for the Territories, except in Alaska, where the exception is made.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the articles to which I referred a little while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Inspector General: Clerks—1 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 3 of class 2, 1 of class 1; messenger; assistant messenger; messenger, $600; in all, $12,560.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this paragraph carries with it three messengers?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; it does. It carries a messenger, assistant messenger, and messenger at $600.

Mr. HOWARD. One messenger, assistant messenger, and then another full messenger at $600. Is there any great necessity for this man to have three messengers? We want to start out now and economize a little, on the idea expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yesterday. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if there is a necessity for having three messengers to wait on him down there?

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia what that first messenger gets?

Mr. HOWARD. That is what I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This is the same appropriation that has been made heretofore, and I can only state to the gentleman that the Inspector General has to be in touch with every other office in the War Department, and there has to be a constant passing from his office to the other offices.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I have noticed in the War, State, and Navy Building that they have so many messengers they are in the way of one another. I have been there a thousand times since I have been in Congress, and I do not think I have ever seen one doing anything but sitting down. Now, I want to see if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was in earnest yesterday when he accused the Democratic Party of all sorts of high crimes and misdemeanors, and I am going to offer an amendment to strike out, in line 17, the last messenger, the item "messenger, $600," page 69.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69, line 17, strike out the words "messenger, $600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that what I said yesterday has had the effect, at least, of bringing the gentleman from Georgia to the point where he is willing to economize to the extent of $600 for a messenger about whom he knows nothing. He was one of the Democrats I had in mind yesterday. He seemed to treat it as a joke to solicit votes upon this side of the House to overturn the Committee on Appropriations. If this is his conscience offering, I am sure he is to be congratulated upon the reformation which has taken place in his conscience.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from New York has left the gap open for me to say a few words as to his statement on yesterday, in which he denounced his colleagues on this side of the aisle.

This is not a conscience offering. I have never had to make a conscience offering for anything I ever did. The Appropriations Committee in some cases is penny-wise and pound-foolish. I remember that in the last Congress I offered an amendment here to strike out a million dollar appropriation for an electric lighting plant, when a private corporation in the city of Washington had made a proposition to this Congress, by which a saving of $56,000 a year in the operating expenses for lighting public buildings could be made, and the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, got up here and insisted upon the Government of the United States spending a million dollars for an electric-lighting plant, when we had a contract by a corporation of reputation that would save this Government $56,000 a year, and enter into such a contract for an indefinite period.

The Democratic Party is not guilty of the conduct with which the gentleman from New York charged them on yesterday. [Applause.] The Democratic Party is not guilty of the willful extravagance that the gentleman said yesterday we were guilty of. We are not violating the party platform. And I will make the assertion that in all the bills the gentleman has brought in here, that on the floor of this House not one million dollars has been added to them by amendments from those not members of the committee. The trouble with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is that he has assumed all the wisdom of the Democratic Party and all the economical policies of the Democratic Party to himself, and when Members on this floor who read the hearings before the committee honestly differ with him about the economic administration of the Government he gets up here and denounces the party that gave him his seat in Congress and gave him political birth.

And I think, as a matter of fact, it ill becomes the gentleman from New York to put all the Democratic Party in the same category with himself. It is all right when the gentleman from New York wants an increase in an appropriation; but when a gentleman from a far western State comes in here and asks for a little $9,000 crumb that will accommodate all the gold miners in the vast western territory, and because other Members on this floor that have the same rights that you have delegated to yourself differ with you, you get up here and denounce the Democratic Party and say that we are unworthy to hold the power of this Government in our hands. I say that I want to repudiate, sir, any such statement. And if this Democratic administration exceeds in making appropriations over those of Republican administrations, blame the chairman of the committee and members of the Committee on Appropriations and the other appropriating committees, but do not blame the rank and file of this House, who have nothing to do with making up these bills. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman referred to another spasmodic, ineffectual attempt that he seems to have made to economize. He said he moved to strike out of an appropriation bill last year an item carrying $1,000,000 for an electric lighting plant. How easy it would have been for the gentleman to have accomplished his purpose if he had either been sufficiently informed of the rules of the House or had really intended to have the item eliminated. The item was subject to a point of order. It carried legislation to establish an electric lighting plant in this city in order to take the Government of the United States out of the grasp of the lighting monopoly which dominates this city. It was based upon the experience that Congress has had in the operation of the Capital power and lighting plant for the lighting and heating of this Capitol and the Library of Congress. It was to be a duplicate plant, and it had been demonstrated that there would be great economy in the lighting and heating of all the public buildings owned or rented by the Government by the erection of this plant. The gentleman says he tried——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. He tried, he says, to strike it out by a motion, when all that was necessary for him to do at any time during the 45 minutes the matter was discussed before the point of order which had been reserved was finally withdrawn would have been for him to have insisted upon the point of order and thus eliminate the provision to put the Government in a position where this lighting trust would not have the Government at its mercy.

Another attempt of the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And let me say this to the gentleman from Georgia: In what I said yesterday I was not condemning all of the gentlemen upon this side of the House. I had in mind the gentleman from Georgia, and those like him, who are voting with the solid phalanx upon that side of the House in which the Progressives, with Mr. MURDOCK, of Kansas, were unitedly following the lead of the astute leader of the minority [Mr. MANN]. I thought then that if the country could have seen the picture of this heroic band of Progressives, blindly and docilely following the leadership of their arch enemy, Mr. MANN [laughter], in order to pile up the expenditures and keep increasing the burdens upon the people, how delighted they would be.

That is the category in which I placed the gentlemen upon this side of the House who with their votes made it possible, with the solid vote on that side, to overcome the Democratic majority; and it is upon such gentlemen that the condemnation of the public will fall; and I hope it will, because they do not deserve anything else.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will permit, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, Thank God, the condemnation of the country will not fall as heavily upon me as a Democrat as it has already fallen upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

I hope that whatever difference there may be between Members on that side of the House our action upon this amendment may be based upon good and sufficient reasons. There is no reason why this messenger should be stricken from the roll. In striking some of the messengers and employees from the bill we must adopt a certain policy. For instance, we must inquire whether or not we are going to injure the public service; and if we are not going to injure the public service, then we must inquire whether we are going to reverse the policy that has been adopted and turn out the worthy employees who have served the country well and faithfully a number of years and who now, because of advanced age, are not able to perform the full amount of service that a man in the enjoyment of all of his energy and youth might perform. I read, as follows, from the hearings on page 278:

> Of the employees of The Adjutant General's office, 75 are reported unable, on account of age or other infirmities, to do the amount of work an employee fully equipped for the position could do.

Now, it is a fact——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman attribute this deplorable condition in a large measure to this holy and sacred civil-service system that we were complaining about as impracticable the other day?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not on account of that.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman think the old spoils system, about which we go into fits every few days, would remedy or rectify this complaint about "deadwood" in the public service?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all. The fact is that in a great many departments of the Government there are men and women employed who have been serving the Government for a number of years, who have nothing but their salary to support them, and the question of determining whether the Government shall now adopt a policy that will continue in the service those persons who served the country well, but who are not as vigorous as they once were on account of age and infirmities, is a question that deserves earnest consideration. Are we to turn out an employee simply because he is getting old?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GOOD. In a moment I will yield. But here in the War Department we have already in the last year worked a reduction of 8 per cent in the force. There are now employed under The Adjutant General something like 400 clerks, some of whom are carried at a very low salary as messengers and assistant messengers. Why we should jump on one of these little assistant messengers, some person who is receiving this small salary, I can not understand. But if you are going to adopt such a policy, do not jump on one man. Take 75 of them.

That is all there is to it. You can not save money simply by removing here one of those humble persons who receive a salary of $600 a year. And yet, Mr. Chairman, those messengers and assistant messengers are doing a great deal of work, and they are detailed to do innumerable things, which if not done by this cheap help, if not performed by those whom you would turn out and who would have to go to some almshouse, this work would have to be performed by clerks who receive larger salaries. In that case the cost to the Government would, no doubt, be at least as much as it now is, if not more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, we heard just a day or two ago—in fact, every few days we hear—a wail go up from that side of the Chamber to the effect that somebody is about to make inroads upon the sacred, honored, useful, and holy civil-service system.

Now, I want to be candid about the matter. I have for this system very little regard—almost as little regard as for the old spoils system that it supplanted. The trouble about the old spoils system was that politicians used the public offices to reward their political friends. The trouble about this civil-service system, as it is spoken of, is that it is beginning to fill the departments of the Government with useless and helpless employees who are no longer capacitated to earn their salaries, but who are kept upon the pay roll as a sort of gratuity or as a sort of pension, which is not only an unjust appropriation or expenditure of the public money but which clogs the service and prevents younger and more useful persons from securing the promotions in the service which they are entitled to receive.

This civil-service system has been in operation only a few decades; I believe less than three. But already, according to the statement of the gentleman [Mr. GOOD], who just preceded me, in one little department they have 50 or 60 employees who are utterly incapacitated to render service.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman, I am sure, does not want to misquote me.

Mr. DIES. No. What did the gentleman say, then?

Mr. GOOD. I read from the hearings to the effect that certain employees, on account of age and other infirmities, were not able to do the amount of work that people fully equipped for their positions would do.

Mr. DIES. Precisely.

Mr. GOOD. I did say they were doing a great amount of work.

Mr. DIES. And the fact is, Mr. Chairman, in all of the departments of the Government there is coming to be a large list of old, decrepit persons, who are rendering practically no service to the Government. And this holy system of civil service, at present in its youth, when it reaches a mature manhood, when it reaches its natural growth in this country, will fill every department of this Government with old, decrepit men and women, who can not be kicked out under your system, and who will remain on the pay roll under your civil-service system to clog the departments of the Government and to draw salaries from the taxpayers of the country without rendering any service for those salaries. And bad as the old spoils system was, it was a better system than the civil-service system as administered in the Government to-day.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, you have had this civil-service system now since 1884. Already it is clogging the departments of the Government. Already old men and women hardly able to walk are being helped from their homes to their jobs, where they render practically no service. What will it be in another 25 or 30 years, when these old men and women, 60, 70, 80, 90, and 100 years old, are filling all of the departments of the Government? Then you will wish for some sort of a system, whether a spoils system or no, that will take out of the service and out of the departments of the Government some of this superannuation which renders no service to the Government of the United States. So far as I am concerned, bad as the old spoils system was, I think it would be a good thing to see it come back for a little while, to clean out the Augean stables in Washington. I should like to see another Andrew Jackson come to the White House and put Democrats in every department of this great Government of ours. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I should like five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like five minutes myself. This is a very important question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to talk on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I regret exceedingly that my good friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] said what he did about the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Of course the gentleman from New York needs no defense or words of praise from me; but I can not sit silent and fail to testify to what I believe is the settled opinion of the great majority of the Members upon this side, that there is no man on either side of this aisle who exceeds Mr. FITZGERALD in fidelity, in ability, and in all the qualifications that we ask for in a successful Representative of the people in this House. [Applause.] I want to say that I have sat here, as other Members have, and have seen Mr. FITZGERALD just as diligent in opposing what he considered unjust appropriations for his own State—yes, and for his own city—as he ever has been in opposing what he considers unjust appropriations for any other part of this country. You all know that that is a fact. We hear it from the fellow members of his committee that he devotes long hours every day, industriously and ably, to the work of preparing the great supply bills. We see him on the floor here displaying a knowledge of the details of those bills that is little less than wonderful. To my mind it is almost a marvel, the mastery he has of the facts and figures connected with these great appropriations, and we never observe on his part any disposition to favor any part of the country, least of all his own part.

Mr. ELDER. I think what the gentleman says about the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is true; but, at the same time, does not the gentleman think that the Members here have the right to exercise their judgment without being berated for exercising it as best they may?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] gave a very sufficient answer to that when he told the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] that he lacked no opportunity to achieve the end that he sought in the matter of the appropriation for an electric lighting plant. Although at times the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has a manner suggesting some acerbity of temper, I have never seen on his part any disposition to cut off reasonable debate on this side or the other side of the Chamber. It seems to me that perhaps the gentleman [Mr. ELDER] has confused a little quickness of action and has mistaken it for an indisposition to allow proper debate.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman think there was any justification for any cool, level-headed man to make the absurd statements about the Democratic Party that the gentleman from New York made on the floor of this House yesterday, simply because he was mad? [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that I happen to be aware of the fact—and I regret exceedingly that I am not at liberty to give the details—that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has not confined his warning to the Members on this floor as to the dangers of extravagance, but has issued that warning in other and very highly placed offices in Washington. He is sincere in this, and if you gentlemen will allow him his own manner of stating it—and not become alarmed because he does not always act with the appearance of patience, and if you will consider the matter rather than the manner of the discussion—we will all be benefited greatly. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the position of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has some flowers connected with it, but it has a great many obstacles and difficulties to surmount. Yesterday the House in committee had voted an appropriation for an assay office at Helena, by the aid of a few Democrats, and with a practically solid Progressive and Republican vote. Then the proposition came before the House for an assay office at Deadwood, which every one concedes has a little more merit in it than the Helena assay office. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was hard pressed. The only way in which he could defeat this proper amendment was to endeavor to excite partisanship and to read the riot act on the Democratic side of the House. Whatever criticism may be made to-day of his speech yesterday everyone must admit that it was effective, because these gentlemen who are now criticizing him voted with the gentleman from New York yesterday and not with this side of the House when we took the vote.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there? I want to state that I did not. I voted to restore this assay office, and I will do it again to-day, irrespective of what the gentleman from New York thinks about it.

Mr. MANN. We are very glad to have the support of the gentleman from Georgia. I looked over the House yesterday, when we were standing up, and I did not see the gentleman from Georgia standing up, but I am willing to take his statement.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. I take the gentleman's statement freely and fully. Whatever may be the case as to the gentleman from Georgia, it had the effect that the gentleman from New York desired. Now he is proceeding again this morning and seeking to taunt the Progressives on this side of the House for, as he says, following my lead. Well, if that was the case, it would not be anything to their detriment, because I frequently follow the lead of the Progressives on this side of the House on these propositions. The truth is, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], seeking to solidify his side of the House when they are breaking away on nearly every proposition, is trying to taunt this side of the House. It is true that the Republicans and the Progressives, formerly in one family, have been having a little family quarrel, but you had better not mix in it on that side of the House. [Laughter.] In the main the gentlemen on this side of the House, both Republicans and Progressives, think alike, believe alike, and work together in this House, and will elsewhere, and in the end they will get together, and then woe to your side of the House. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is partially right. We will get together, but the gentleman from Illinois will come to us. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was slightly in error in one statement he made. He said that yesterday we voted with the gentleman from Illinois. It may have appeared so to some, but the fact is the gentleman from Illinois voted with me. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from New York has on, I think, only temporarily, an acid disposition, and I think I know the history of it. He has a trying place—a responsible place—and sometimes his responsibilities weigh rather heavily upon him. Not so very long ago he became deeply concerned over his control as chairman of a great committee through the circumstance that he lost on the floor of the House the control of a great appropriation measure. It is an unusual thing, and it could only come through disaffection on his side of the House. I refer to the deficiency measure. He lost control of it, but owing to the leniency and good nature of the Speaker he was spared the humiliation of the actual loss. He was reappointed a conferee, a thing which, I think, is all right.

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to take part in his difficulty. The Democrats are having a hard time of it. There is no question about that, and they are going to have an increasingly hard time of it, so far as the appropriation bills are concerned. You are under the necessity of practicing economy, and economy, so far as my observation goes, in this House is a lost art. [Laughter.]

I am against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, and I hope that he will withdraw it. I think he offered the amendment in a spirit of—let us say irritation—toward the committee. He offers to strike out the job of a poor messenger, who probably gets only $600 a year. Here is a great bill carrying salaries for assistant secretaries of $5,000, for chief clerks $4,500, $4,000, and $5,000. Here is a poor messenger up here—I do not know him and the gentleman from Georgia does not know him, the members of the committee do not know who he is—getting probably only $600 a year. Does the gentleman from Georgia think that he could live in Washington on that salary, and does the gentleman from Georgia think he ought to strike down an unknown friend up here in the department because of this atmosphere in the House just now?

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to say that I am not against this messenger. I had to introduce some sort of an amendment in order to say a few words.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am glad of that; it does the gentleman from Georgia credit.

Mr. HOWARD. I did not expect the amendment to prevail.

Mr. MURDOCK. We took a half a vote and it looked as if it would carry.

Mr. HOWARD. I think there are certain things further along in the bill that would be better out of it, and I will ask the aid of the gentleman from Kansas, and I now withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. I hope the gentleman will not withdraw his amendment until I finish, for I want to say that the Progressive Party is not going to get together with the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Progressive and Republican Parties are distinct. I hope I may have the attention of the gentleman from New York, because on one occasion yesterday the Progressives voted with you.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman is not going to apologize for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. No; listen. The Democratic Party has taken away from the great southern seaport of New Orleans the reserve bank; you have destroyed the advantage that that great seaport had through the Panama Canal by your action on the Sims repeal bill the other day, and you have broken the back of the sugar industry of which New Orleans is the center in the South. The Republican Party through its leadership yesterday attempted to take away the New Orleans Mint, and I am glad to say that the Progressives stood against the Democrats when they were against Louisiana and stood with the committee against the Republicans when they were against Louisiana. And, gentlemen, I may say to both sides here that in the election this fall we will get the first foothold in the solid South that any party besides the Democratic Party has had for 50 years. There will be Progressive Congressmen from Louisiana on this floor after March 4, 1915.

Mr. MANN. You stand as much chance in Louisiana as you stand anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. We have a bully chance there. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he does not think that what he said demonstrates the absolute silliness of the charge that politics of the organizing committee had anything to do with it?

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not think so; I do not think there is any good reason for drawing a reserve line through the middle of that great State, sending the people of one half to Dallas and of the other half to Atlanta.

Mr. GLASS. Does the gentleman think that the organization committee was simple enough to be trying to play Democratic politics in Louisiana by doing what he says?

Mr. MURDOCK. If they tried, they did not accomplish it, as the elections next November will show.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PAYNE rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. I do not want to be discourteous, but positively I am not going to permit this debate upon extraneous matter to go on any longer, even though some gentleman undertakes to make the point of no quorum. I am going to confine gentlemen to a discussion of the bill. I hope the gentleman from New York may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I may not use all of that time, because I am in favor of this committee getting on with this bill. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] disclosed his political sagacity at the conclusion of his speech. I could not understand why he was voting to continue a mint at New Orleans, but the cat is now out of the bag. He thinks that the Democratic Party have been doing all sorts of bad things to the people in New Orleans, with which I agree, and thinks that by voting for half a dozen employees in a mint in New Orleans he is going to carry the State of Louisiana for the Bumble Bee Party. [Laughter.] He does not seem to realize what everybody else in the United States does, that his party was biggest at the borning and that it has grown beautifully less ever since. He did not even appreciate the returns from New Jersey. Whatever difference of opinion there may be as to what the statistics about that election show, it still remains a painful fact that whereas his party had about 12,000 votes in Passaic County in 1912, it got down to 611 in the election the other day. They are growing beautifully less, and not by degrees. It is coming in an avalanche, and still the gentleman thinks he has some standing. He will not run for Congress in the old district in Kansas. Why? He knows what the result would be if he runs for membership in this House, but he proposes to run for Senator from Kansas, and he well knows what the result will be. He knows he will be left behind, but he has an idea that running for Senator is a bigger funeral for him than running for the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the genial gentleman from Kansas will either be fighting with the Republican Party, as he fought for so many years, at the next election, or he will go clean over to the Democratic Party and claim that in that way he has carried New Orleans and the State of Louisiana. [Laughter.]

I am in sympathy with my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in trying to cut down the extravagances of the Democratic Party. He sees that this economy plank has been split all to pieces, and there is nothing but a few slivers of it left, and so yesterday, in desperation, he tried to save one of the slivers by cutting out this assay office up there at Deadwood. It saved only $1,186, it is true, but that is an awfully big saving for the chairman of the committee to make with this Democratic Congress on his hands. [Laughter.] And to-day he grasps at this opportunity offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to save $600 at the expense of this poor messenger, whom nobody knows and who does not seem to have any friends in the House. Six hundred dollars! That will be nearly $1,800 altogether that he has saved. Think of it. And possibly the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]—it seems to be working on his mind; I do not see him here now——

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, here I am. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Possibly the gentleman from Georgia, when it comes to voting in the House on the question of increasing the salary of the Members' clerks from $1,500 to $1,800, will see a new light and will cut off the $300 that he wanted to get for his clerk. Possibly he may do that.

Mr. Chairman, these things are all in the index. He knows if he cuts out the provision for this $600 messenger it will be put in at the other end of the Capitol and come back here, and that we will yield. The Deadwood assay office will get in over there at the other end of the Capitol and will come back here and we will yield, so that these two great economies will not be realized.

I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], whom I see smiling before me, the other day cut out a million dollars for collecting the income tax by his raising a point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I can not yield just now. Whether that is true or not, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that that million dollars will go into the appropriation bill over in the other end of the Capitol, that it will come back here, and that he knows that we will yield, and that all of the points of order which he raised here will be of no avail, and that he was simply taking up the time of the House. When the bill comes back from the other place those things will all be in it, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield to me on the subject of funerals?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman stated that I was seeking a funeral of magnitude in Kansas by running for the Senate instead of for the House. Does the gentleman from New York really think I could have a bigger funeral out in Kansas as a candidate for the Senate than he brought to the Republican Party through his tariff bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman again shows his lack of information. By reading the RECORD I find that the gentleman the other day repeated that old slander, which, if he is intelligent enough to read, he ought to know is a slander—that we raised the tariff instead of lowering it. There is no intelligent man in this House who can read the report of the Government who does not know that that is false, and the gentleman ought to know it.

Mr. GLASS. Is this an indication that the Republican Party and the Progressive Party are getting together? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office, Chief, Quartermaster Corps: Assistant and chief clerk, $2,750; 5 principal clerks, at $2,250 each; clerks—15 of class 4, 25 of class 3, 44 of class 2, 85 of class 1, 50, at $1,000 each; 10, at $900 each; advisory architect, $4,000; inspector of supplies, $2,500; draftsmen—3, at $1,800 each; 7, at $1,600 each; 5, at $1,400 each; supervising engineer, $2,750; hydraulic and sanitary engineer, $2,000; civil engineer, $1,800; electrical engineer, at $2,000; electrical and mechanical engineer, $2,000; marine engineer, $3,500; assistant marine engineer, $1,800; sanitary and heating engineer, $1,800; blue-print operator, $900; 6 messengers; 14 assistant messengers; 12 laborers; laborers—1, $600; 1, $480; in all, $376,370.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 71, lines 3 and 4, I make the point of order against the words "Assistant and." Mr. Chairman, there is no authorization for this term. There is a provision in the statute for a chief clerk, but there is no such provision authorizing an assistant and chief clerk. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the ways which has been adopted in the past for the purpose of giving some kind of show or reason for increasing salaries above the statutory amount, and I desire to cut out of the bill all of these jug handles to statutory offices used as excuses for increasing salaries above the statutory amount.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the senior Member of this House [Mr. PAYNE] a while ago said I cut out by points of order $1,000,000 for the collection of the income tax. He does not know anything about this bill, that goes without saying. His remarks expose his want of intelligence concerning the progress this committee has made in the consideration of this bill. All that he knows about this bill is what somebody has told him, and I am surprised at his taking a newspaper report, which somebody may have read in his presence, as evidence as to what is in this bill, because there is not a word of truth either in the press report concerning this matter or in the statement made by the gentleman from New York. I am tired, Mr. Chairman, of men posing here hypocritically as economists and practicing it not at all. I voice the sentiments of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] for real economy in these appropriation bills, and cite him to this unwarranted increase in salaries to show him that he can make a real and substantial reduction of the extravagances in Congress by following the plain provisions of the statute, and I trust that he will do so. He has been trying to economize by his able management of appropriation bills on the floor of this House. There has been a tendency to extravagance on the other side of the House by voting almost unanimously for every crank proposition that happens to be proposed, aided by a few Members on this side of the House, thereby piling up useless appropriations on this great measure. We should stand together and redeem our pledges to the people—economy will not come by accident. It will require concerted action on this side of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just a word, if I can have the attention of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a discussion on the point of order, and the Chair would very much like to hear the gentleman. The committee will be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Army appropriation bill authorized the Secretary of War to consolidate three bureaus under the term of "Quartermaster Corps." Under the authority given in the Army appropriation bill the three corps were consolidated into one. No particular offices were created, and Gen. Aleshire, who is at the head of the Quartermaster Corps, arranged the offices under the authority given by the Army appropriation bill as provided by this section. The appropriation for 1913 was $425,700. For the current year is carried $378,670, and the bill now before the committee carries a little less. There is no law providing for this particular office, except as this bureau was organized by authority of law in the Army appropriation bill. I do not care anything about it. On page 100, section 3, of the Army appropriation bill, is this language:

That the office establishments of the Quartermaster General, the Commissary General, and the Paymaster General of the Army are hereby consolidated, and shall hereafter constitute a single part of the War Department, which shall be known as the Quartermaster Corps and of which the chief of the Quartermaster Corps created by this act shall be the head.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. In the consolidation of these offices was there any office at that time known as assistant and chief clerk?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair thinks the point of order is well taken and sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina, because I have been asked about it, if this bill does not provide for certain positions in the Quartermaster's office. In this bill there is provided a hydraulic and sanitary engineer at $2,000. What has become of the person who now fills the office of experienced builder and mechanics? Is he dropped from the rolls?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, of course, I have no knowledge of the personnel of these offices. Gen. Aleshire said before the committee that he could get along without that office or without that man. I did not know whether the place was vacant.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not undertaking to alter our bill, but I have been asked about it, and I wanted to know what was the purpose, as I could not answer. I am told that the man who fills this place is an employee who has been there for some 30 years, and he has been a very efficient employee, and I have been asked what is to become of him if he is to be employed by the Government. Now, this bill authorizes the employment and provides for a sanitary engineer at $2,000, as I understand it, but that does not provide for "an experienced builder and mechanic, at $2,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Gen. Aleshire said this:

I recommend that we do away with the position of experienced builder and mechanic at $2,500.

Since this bill has been under consideration it has been brought to my attention that that would deprive one man of his place. The committee had no knowledge of the fact when making up the bill. We followed the recommendation of Gen. Aleshire.

Mr. BARTLETT. I just wanted this statement made so there could be the reason given, that the committee did not simply arbitrarily cut off people or a place by not providing for the necessary work of the department, but that it only complied with the recommendation of the Quartermaster General.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is absolutely true. No member of the committee has any knowledge of who had filled the office or whether it was filled.

Mr. BARTLETT. The sole purpose of the inquiry was to elicit the facts, which I have done, from the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. IGOE. I want to say to the gentleman that the man who is kept out under the provisions of the bill as reported by the committee has been in service 24 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have been informed of that since the bill was under consideration.

Mr. IGOE. The name was not mentioned in the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman understands that it is the practice in the departments when they expect to dispense with an office not to fill it when a vacancy occurs. In a case of this kind ordinarily, if it is not brought to our attention, we assume that a vacancy exists and they do not care to fill it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchasing and supplying uniforms to park, Monument, and bridge watchmen, $2,800.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why the necessity of the Government buying these uniforms for these park and bridge watchmen? Does it buy their uniforms all the time, or only their first uniforms when put to work?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; Congress a few years ago adopted the policy of furnishing uniforms for the park policemen. They are paid only $60 a month. That compensation is very small, so Congress made an appropriation to buy uniforms, and it has been continued ever since.

Mr. COX. How many uniforms do they buy them each year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They say that an overcoat will last at least two seasons. A winter suit and a summer suit are furnished each year. The summer uniforms cost only about $16. The winter uniforms cost more.

Mr. COX. We do not buy uniforms for the police in the city of Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; but we pay them higher salaries than park policemen get.

Mr. COX. That may be right, but it does not look right to me at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Of the foregoing amounts appropriated under Public Buildings and Grounds, the sum of $35,275 shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. According to my memoranda there is no change in the appropriation in any of these items under the head of "Public buildings and grounds." Am I in error about that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Then why is the amount charged to the District of Columbia increased by $2,400? As I understand, the practice is under the law that in these items that relate to care of parks, and so forth, in the District one-half of the expense is charged to the District. Now, there being no difference at all in this bill from the current law as to the items, why is the amount charged to the District increased?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Because the Senate increased the amount last year, but did not change the total charge to the District. But we are correcting that in this bill.

Mr. MANN. So the District is a winner this year by $2,400?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to know of one occasion when the District gets ahead of this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It often wins.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; clerk to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; disbursing clerk, $2,250; stenographer, $1,800; clerks—3 of class 4; 2 of class 3; 4 of class 2; 5 of class 1; 1, $1,100; 4, at $1,000 each; stenographer, $1,200; telegraph operator, $1,100; 2 copyists; carpenter, $900; 4 messengers; 4 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; messenger boys—3, at $600 each; 1, $420; 1, $400; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; in all, $75,260.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the present on the paragraph. I desire to ask, referring to line 10, why there should be a private secretary to the Assistant Secretary created at a salary of $2,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Secretary of the Navy appeared before the committee and made a very earnest appeal that we allow him $2,500 for this private secretary.

Mr. MANN. He is not asking about the secretary to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FOWLER. A private secretary to the Assistant Secretary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the man that I am talking about. The Secretary urged that we allow the man $2,500. He is a class 4 clerk now. The committee finally decided to appropriate for him under that title at $2,000. You will notice a line or two later that we have reduced the number of clerks of class 4 by one. The total increase is $200, $500 less than the Secretary believed the man was worth and ought to have.

Mr. FOWLER. In line 12, on the same page, you have three clerks, and you drop one. Is that the place where you drop the clerk?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is right. For the present year there are four; we drop one. A class 4 clerk is filling that place now.

Mr. FOWLER. I also desire to inquire of the gentleman concerning the Assistant Secretary. His salary is fixed by statute at $4,500. The bill carries a salary of $5,000; and while I am on that, I call his attention also to the chief clerk, whose salary is fixed at $2,500 when there is no Assistant Secretary and at $2,200 when there is an Assistant Secretary. I desire to call the attention of the chairman to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that that is another one of those cases where the Congress has appropriated in excess of the amount fixed by the law creating the office, as I have explained to him on other occasions.

Mr. FOWLER. You just have been gradually increasing it from time to time until it has reached $3,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. And that has been without any statutory authority?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Without any statutory authority, except the current appropriation bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, with the explanation of the chairman, I withdraw the point of order, unless somebody else wants to reserve it.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order. I will say to the gentleman that I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to increasing the clerk's salary. There is reason for that, and I assume there was good reason given to the committee. Here it is proposed now to give to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy a private secretary in addition to a private clerk?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is feasible to do that with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy without doing the same thing with the other Assistant Secretaries in the Government service? Is there any other Assistant Secretary who gets a private clerk and a private secretary in addition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman knows that whenever we set a precedent the tendency is to take advantage of it, if possible. But I want to call the gentleman's attention to one thing: In some of the departments there are several Assistant Secretaries, but in the Navy Department there is only one. I think the Assistant Secretary really needs the help.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from South Carolina will yield, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that from the statement in the hearing, made by the Secretary of the Navy, it appears that the duties of this particular secretary to the Assistant Secretary are much more important than those of the ordinary private secretary. His duties are very responsible. He looks over all the expenditures before the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary go over them, and the Secretary of the Navy made this statement:

As brought out in my hearings, the employee who is now filling this position, besides performing the duties of private secretary to Mr. Roosevelt, carefully scrutinizes and studies requisitions for supplies, services, and materials, and subsequently the bids for furnishing same, with the result than an estimated saving has been effected, since March 4, 1913, of something like $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Of course I do not believe that, and I doubt if the gentleman does.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I read that to show that this employee has some very important and responsible duties to perform, and for that reason the committee felt it was proper to increase his salary from $1,800 to $2,000.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman if he thinks it is a feasible proposition for Congress to give to one Assistant Secretary a confidential clerk and a private secretary and to refuse them to another Assistant Secretary, say, in another department, as, for example, the War Department?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The conditions are different in this case from those in the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Is it proper for the departments to conform to a uniform classification, or for us to bob around just as they wish to organize their service? Has the Assistant Secretary of War a private clerk and a private secretary in addition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will recall that the War Department really has two Assistant Secretaries. They are not so designated by name, but the chief clerk acts as Assistant Secretary by law.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, this man is already provided for, I will inform the gentleman from Illinois, as a clerk of class 4. That is an exempted position. It is a position under the classified service.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is in the classified service.

Mr. CALDER. It is exempt.

Mr. MANN. Well, if it is exempt, it is so by order of the President, who can issue a special order about anyone. Here is the Assistant Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, the Assistant Postmasters General, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and the Assistant Secretary of Labor, who get along without designating two private secretaries. Along comes a new Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and he wants two private secretaries so designated. I do not believe it is a good thing. If you are going to do it for all of them, treat them on the same basis.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman make a point of order? It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order on the language on page 79, line 10, "private secretary to the Assistant Secretary, $2,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on page 79, line 12, I move to strike out the word "three," referring to clerks of class 4, and insert in lieu thereof the word "four," so that it will read "four of class 4."

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to make it "clerk at $2,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We had better let it stay as it is.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ELDER). Will the gentleman from South Carolina state his amendment again?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let it go, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina repeat his amendment again, so that the Clerk can report it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On line 12, page 79, strike out "three" and insert "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 79, line 12, by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "four."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. A point of order has just been made against this secretary. Is this man to be used for the same purpose as the one who was stricken out? Is that the effect of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are simply putting him back in the bill where he is now.

Mr. HOWARD. I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The point of order will not lie.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is simply to restore the present number of clerks, and the point of order will not apply.

Mr. HOWARD. Then I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on line 19 of page 79 I move to strike out the figure "2" and insert a cipher.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 79, line 19, by striking out the figure "2" and inserting a cipher.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So that it will read "$75,060."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Solicitor: Solicitor, $4,000; law clerks—1, $2,500; 1, $2,250; 1, $2,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 1, $840; messenger, $600; in all, $16,990.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman why the salary of the solicitor has been increased so rapidly since the act of April 28, 1902. It was only $2,500 then. The increase has been made since that time to $4,000. Now, has there been any additional responsibility added to this office since that time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would state to the gentleman that we have not increased the amount over the current law. This is a very important office. This lawyer must pass upon contracts involving $50,000,000 a year. He is responsible for the proper legal administration of that vast amount of business.

Mr. FOWLER. What I wanted to know is whether he has an increased responsibility over that of 1902?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, yes; the gentleman knows that the appropriations for the Navy have been very largely increased and the work is very much greater.

Mr. FOWLER. I am aware of that fact. Is it for that reason that his burdens are increased?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Judge Advocate General, United States Navy: Law clerk, $2,200; clerks—1 of class 4, 1, $1,300, 2 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each, 1, $900; assistant messenger; in all, $12,320.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With some degree of reluctance, but purely to keep the record straight, I want to call attention for a moment to the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], on day before yesterday——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may make a statement for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, I know it is embarrassing for the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the subcommittee, to object to requests of gentlemen on that side, but this appropriation bill has already been shot full of holes with speeches that are foreign to the subject, and anyone trying to follow the debate on the bill will find all subjects under the sun discussed. For that reason I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BARTLETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 54. An act for the relief of George W. Hoyt; and

S. 135. An act for the relief of Severin and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Steam Engineering: Chief clerk, $2,250; clerks—1 of class 4; 2 of class 3; 2 of class 2; 1, $1,300; 3 of class 1; 1, $1,100; 4 at $1,000 each; 1, $900; assistant messenger; laborers—2 at $660 each; 2 at $600 each; messenger boy, $600; draftsman, $1,400; assistant draftsman, $1,200; in all $27,390.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 86, line 16, I move to strike out the figures "$1,400" and insert the figures "$1,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 86, line 16, after the word "draftsman," strike out "$1,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is subject to a point of order, I should like to have it settled now. I do not want to waste time. It is not subject to a point of order, because $1,800 is the satutory salary fixed by permanent law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Can the gentleman refer to the statute?

Mr. FOWLER. It is the statute which fixed all the salaries under this department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the rule is that when a gentleman makes the point of order it is up to the gentleman proposing the amendment to produce the authority.

Mr. FOWLER. The Chair has stated the rule correctly. The statute fixes this salary at $1,800. I did not suppose there would be any disagreement about that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We are under the impression that there is no statutory provision which authorizes this salary. We have reported it in this bill just as it is carried in the current law.

Mr. FOWLER. I know it was carried this way last year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. At $1,400.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but the statute provides for a salary of $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. Has either gentleman the statute there?

Mr. FOWLER. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, who is here, is an authority on this question, and I have as much right to his services as any other Member on the floor of the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not complaining about that. I am willing that the gentleman shall have time to find the statute.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 70 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume 2, 1878, the statute provides—

One draftsman, at a salary of $1,800 a year.

That is under the head of "Bureau of Steam Engineering."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair reserve his decision until we can examine into the matter? I ask unanimous consent that this be passed for a few moments until we can examine the statute further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed temporarily without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to pass it very long.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We will go right back to it as soon as we can get the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois object to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not object. I want to expedite the business of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Interior, $12,000; First Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Assistant Secretary, 4,500; chief clerk, including $500 as superintendent of buildings, who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries, $4,000; assistant to the Secretary, $2,750; assistant attorney, $2,500; 2 special inspectors, whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the department, at $2,500 each; 6 inspectors, at $2,500 each; chief disbursing clerk, $2,500; clerk in charge of supplies, $2,250; clerk in charge of mails, files, and archives, $2,250; clerk in charge of publications, $2,250; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 13 of class 4, 18 of class 3, 21 of class 2, 24 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each; returns office clerk, $1,600; female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; 8 copyists; multigraph operator, $900; assistant multigraph operator, $720; typewriter repairer, $900; 2 telephone switchboard operators; 9 messengers; 7 assistant messengers; 21 laborers; skilled mechanics—1, $900; 1, $720; 2 carpenters, at $900 each; plumber, $900; electrician, $1,000; laborers—1, $600; 6 at $480 each; packer, $660; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 8 charwomen; captain of the watch, $1,200; 40 watchmen; additional to 2 watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; 7 firemen; clerk to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him, his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $275,820.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was going to ask that we return to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, on page 86, line 16, under the head of "Bureau of Steam Engineering," to which a point of order was made. I withdraw the point of order. There is statutory authority for the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment on the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 86, line 16, after the word "draftsman," strike out "$1,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the draftsman in this bureau is a very important man. His salary is fixed by the statute at $1,800, not a very large salary as compared with the other salaries of men in like bureaus. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that on page 88, under the Bureau of Ordnance, there is a mechanical draftsman at $3,000, also a draftsman at $1,800, and an assistant draftsman at $1,400. The draftsman carried at $1,800 receives the statutory allowance. I am unable to understand why a man performing like duties in the Bureau of Steam Engineering, who has no assistant at all, should have his salary cut from $1,800 to $1,400. It may be possible that in the Bureau of Ordnance there is a little more work to be done by the draftsman, but under the Bureau of Steam Engineering there is undoubtedly a necessity for this place, or it would have been dropped long ago. This man is among those who are known as the low-salaried men. On page 86 the salary of a chief clerk has been increased from $1,800 to $2,250, an increase of $450. On page 88 the salary of the chief clerk in the Bureau of Ordnance was changed from $1,800 to $2,250, and there is a like increase on page 88 in the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. On the same page the chief clerk in the Bureau of Yards and Docks is increased from $1,800 to $2,250, an increase of $450, and there are numerous increases right along in this very same department under bureaus and divisions of like character as the draftsman in the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

Mr. Chairman, I ask only for fair play. I cite these instances to show the effect of the condition of past legislation on appropriation bills. That there is a need of classification, that there is a need of equalizing in salaries, no man on the floor of this House will dispute, because the system of increasing salaries above the statutory provision has been going on from time to time until this bill has become a disgrace, not only to Congress but to the United States. I am not charging it to this committee, because the conditions constitute an inheritance which is a problem for us to solve, but we ought to do it deliberately, intentionally, and successfully.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the House will be fair with this poor laboring man, because while it embodies mental skill it also couples with it manual labor. I trust that the House will be fair to this low-salaried man. I trust that you will not cut his salary $400 below the provisions of the statute, and at the same time, in the same paragraph, increase the salaries of the chief clerks from $1,800 to $2,250. This man undoubtedly deserves our consideration. He undoubtedly earns his statutory salary. I know that the committee, from what has been said on the floor of the House, has copied this provision from the bill which was passed in the last session of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of economy. I have always voted for economy on the floor of this House. I expect to do so as long as I am a Member, and I stand with the honest, conscientious men who are charged with the solemn duty to provide efficiency for the Government by means of economy, such as will command the respect of the country at large; but when a low-salaried man has his salary cut from that which is fixed by law, I believe it is our duty to deal fairly with him. It is no violence to the law to place his salary at $1,800. It is no violence to the honor of this House to do it. It is no violence to any precedents to do it. It is in harmony with the plain provisions of the statute enacted making his salary $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee has not reduced this man's salary. The salary provided in this bill is the same salary that has been provided for many years past. Neither has the committee, as the gentleman's language would imply, increased the salary of the chief clerks to which he has referred from $1,800 to $2,250. The Navy Department has not submitted any estimate for an increase in this man's salary, nor has this bureau. No one has asked for it. The man himself, so far as the committee knows, does not ask for it. Of course if the House wants to give him $1,800 when the Navy Department has not asked for it, when there is no living individual except the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], who seems to have some interest in it, has asked for it, that is all right, for it is the privilege of the House.

The gentleman speaks of the salaries paid to other draftsmen in other bureaus. I want to call the gentleman's attention to something that he has evidently overlooked, and that is that under this bureau there is carried a lump-sum appropriation of over $36,000, out of which various draftsmen are paid, the salaries ranging all the way from $1,000 to $2,500 a year. I submit to the gentleman that this is a $1,400 man down there in the Bureau of Steam Engineering, otherwise he would be paid an additional salary out of this lump sum. The bureau has the right to do that if they think his services are worth it. I want to remind the gentleman that if he increases this salary to $1,800, in all probability this man who is now drawing $1,400 will not get the increase, because, as I said, he is a $1,400 man, as is shown by the fact that that is all that he has been paid, and it is all that the department asks for him.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask a question, but permit me to say that I have no interest in this man.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not mean to intimate that the gentleman has, and I withdraw any such suggestion, if I made it.

Mr. FOWLER. He is not my man at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not mean to make any such insinuation.

Mr. FOWLER. In the Bureau of Equipment, on page 81, you have draftsmen at $2,000 and one at $1,700, and another one at $1,200. The $1,700 draftsman was probably the original $1,800 draftsman fixed by the statute. Why should you carry in this case and in two or three other cases a draftsman at $1,800 in harmony with the statute, and then in the instance in which I point out in my amendment drop the draftsman down to a salary of $1,400?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not mean to say that he is under the impression that every man who calls himself a draftsman necessarily ought to be paid the same salary. We have clerks in the department of class 4 who draw $1,800 and other clerks who receive salaries as low in amount as $900. The same thing is true of draftsmen. We have draftsmen in this department who draw various salaries; some under this lump sum draw as high as $2,500. Why? Because their services are worth $2,500. They have the skill and experience which entitles them to draw $2,500. There are others who draw $1,800 and others $2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the statute provide for a salary of $1,800 in this bureau?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Precisely. The statute does provide for a draftsman at $1,800, but this bill, as I have said to the gentleman, carries a lump-sum appropriation, out of which 19 draftsmen are paid, and their salaries range from $2,500 down to $1,000 a year.

Now, I submit to the gentleman that if this man who is drawing $1,400 as a draftsman under this provision of the bill was worth $2,000 or $1,800, then those in charge of this bureau could very easily pay him that sum out of the lump sum, but the reason he is not getting more than $1,400 is because those in charge evidently think that his services are not worth any more than $1,400.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] as an advocate of economy, but I want to call his attention to the fact that one of the greatest elements of economy is the element of time and space. The gentleman from Illinois in dealing with this bill is to be admired like one would admire the poem Tennyson's Brook, because it runs on forever. Men may come and men may go, but our neighbor, the "old settler," goes on forever. [Laughter.] I would like to say to my good neighbor that we ought to get through with this bill so that we could pass some others, so some of us who are inclined to aid him in his work of economy could have the time to aid him up in his district.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserved a point of order against the paragraph beginning in line 15, page 91. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw the point of order or make it?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on this paragraph, and I call the attention of the committee that in their revision and equalization of the salaries and classification of public positions that the provision of the statute fixes the salary of the First Assistant Secretary at $3,500, whereas the bill carries a provision for $5,000; that the Assistant Secretary's salary is fixed by the statute at $3,500, and that the provision of the bill is $4,500; and, in line 22, the chief clerk, who may be designated by the Secretary to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries, $4,000 is provided for, whereas the statute only provides for $2,200.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, to show the committee where there might be an economy and a large saving. I also, Mr. Chairman, do this for the purpose of getting into the RECORD the statute which provides for these different salaries. I think the public ought to know that. I put in a month of nights on this bill, and I think I am familiar with some parts of the statute bearing upon the question of salaries. I am glad to hear the bugle voice of my friend "Alfalfa Bill" put in his gentle warning of what he will do in the future in politics. I am glad to have the assurance of his sonorous voice over in my district ringing from the hills and mountain tops.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has no mountains.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, the Ozarks, the beautiful Ozarks are there, and to stay forever. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Assistant Attorney General: Assistant attorneys—1, $3,000; 2, at $2,750 each; four, at $2,500 each; 7, at $2,250 each; 11, at $2,000 each; medical expert, $2,000; clerks—4 of class 3 (1 of whom shall act as stenographer and 1 of whom shall be a stenographer and typewriter), 1 of class 1; in all, $65,850.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I send to the Clerk's desk to have read for the information of the committee the estimate made by the department covering this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, is this an amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. This is presented for the information of the committee, not an amendment. My motion was to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The motion is to strike out the last word, and the gentleman does not offer this as an amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I send it up for the information of the committee. This is the paragraph just read as estimated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Three members of a board of appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $5,000 each; assistant attorneys—1, $3,750; 3, at $2,750 each; 8, at $2,500 each; 9, at $2,250 each; 9, at $2,000 each; medical expert, $2,000; clerks—1 of class 4; 4 of class 3 (one of whom shall act as stenographer and one of whom shall be a stenographer and typewriter); 3 of class 2; 1 of class 1; in all, $100,850.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the estimate which I have sent up and which has just been read involves an increase in this item by three attorneys at $5,000 each to act as a board of appeals, one additional attorney at $2,750, four additional attorneys at $2,500, and two additional attorneys at $2,250. There are also some changes made in other salaries in the paragraph. The estimate increases the amount $35,000. I do not offer this as an amendment, first, because I have no hope of having it adopted if I should offer it; second, because I am not fully convinced that all of the additional places asked for are necessary, but I am convinced that at least a part of the additional assistance asked for by the Secretary of the Interior should be granted. I think it highly important that we should establish at an early date in the Secretary's office a board of appeals. The condition of affairs in the Secretary's office, particularly with regard to appeals from the Land Office, is such as to call for a very considerable increase, if those appeals are to be disposed of within a reasonable length of time. It is important, in my opinion, that we should have in that office a board of appeals, consisting of attorneys of wide experience and qualifications, competent to pass upon the great number of exceedingly important questions that are coming before that office on appeal. Thousands of cases come to the Secretary's office from the Land Office, many of them involving controversies over lands worth thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars. Not only has there been a delay in the disposition of those cases, but in the opinion of many of those who have had business in the Secretary's office they have lacked in that office a sufficient number of attorneys of such character and standing and ability as to command the entire confidence and respect of litigants before the department. I introduced a number of years ago a bill providing for appeal to the courts from the decisions of the Secretary of the Interior in land cases.

I am still inclined to think that we should have such a provision for such appeals incorporated into law. The present Secretary of the Interior seems to be of the opinion that if we could have this board, a board of reasonably well paid attorneys, a board to which could be appointed men of wide experience and high standing in their profession, that their decisions would be free from any reasonable ground for criticism and would command respect of those interested in the cases to be decided. As the matter now stands, the office of the Assistant Attorney General in the Interior Department is so overburdened with work—the attorneys have so many cases to decide and there is such a variety of questions to be decided—that people having matters before the department feel that their cases do not have the consideration that they should have.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COX). The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not ask the committee to vote on this matter now. I do believe that the committee should give very earnest consideration and attention to the situation in the Secretary's office. The work is piling up there; cases are grievously delayed. Those having business with the Government in connection with public-land matters wait months and years for a decision; and then, in the condition of congestion in the office, the lack of a board of final appeal, the litigants before the office in many cases feel that their matters have not received proper and unbiased consideration when they are decided. This situation ought not to be continued. The Secretary of the Interior is a good lawyer and has high executive ability. He is earnestly endeavoring to perform his duty in that great office, and he is entitled to the force he needs for the proper conduct of his office and for the proper disposition of the business which comes before it. I hope at an early day this board will be created and some additional attorneys will be given to that office.

I extend my remarks by placing in the RECORD the following memorandum in regard to these increases:

There should be created in the Interior Department a board of appeals, to consist of three persons, whose duties would be to hear and determine upon all matters coming before the Interior Department on appeal from the bureau officers, except pension matters. The salaries to be paid to the members of the board should not be less than $5,000 each per annum. Under the present assignment of work these duties are now imposed upon the First Assistant Secretary, and a consideration thereof involves much more time than the general hours of work in the department. With such a board the First Assistant Secretary could in a great measure be relieved of this large and exacting volume of work, thus enabling him to devote more time to matters of administration, and in this way the Secretary of the Interior would be greatly relieved.

The increases herein recommended are for five additional attorneys, one at $2,750 and four at $2,500. The increase of two in the $2,250 class is merely in lieu of two attorneys at $2,000, the number of attorneys at $2,000 being correspondingly reduced. There is pressing need for increase in the number of attorneys, due to the great increase in the amount of work coming before the office of the Assistant Attorney General for consideration. This increase in work has been noted for several years in the estimates submitted, but no increase has been granted in the working force. The following table, covering the past five years, shows how steadily this increase has continued:

Cases and miscellaneous matters.

Years ending Oct. 1:
1909	4,755
1910	13,301
1911	16,609
1912	34,783
1913	48,870

Beginning with the year 1909 the force was unable to keep the work current. The result has been that the cases on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, involving claimed rights under the several public-land laws, have steadily accumulated until there are now pending undisposed of 2,144 cases. With the present force a case can not be reached for examination for from nine months to a year from receipt of the record on appeal. The records in these cases average 300 pages and often reach 3,000 or more pages.

These cases generally reach the department only after successive appeals from the local land officers to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and from the latter officer to the Secretary of the Interior, and the final disposition or settlement of a controversy affecting public lands is often delayed from two to three years. It is submitted that such a delay works unnecessary hardship and often injustice to public-land claimants, and it can only be relieved by an increase in the number of attorneys in the office of the Assistant Attorney General to handle these controverted matters.

The reduction in attorneys at $2,000 is only recommended by way of an addition of two in the $2,250 class. In conclusion, it should be said that when the character of work performed by the attorneys in the office of the Assistant Attorney General is understood, it will be readily seen that the salaries provided for in this estimate are far below those paid for like class of work in the other departments.

The increase in the stenographic force is based upon the necessities incident to increase in the force of attorneys.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the Commissioner of the General Land Office appeared before the committee and made a very intelligent, a very exhaustive, and a very interesting statement. We were very much impressed with him. He indicated a very thorough knowledge of the land laws and the land business. He suggested to the committee a scheme of reorganization and a different plan of making appropriations for the different land offices throughout the country. We were not quite ready to entirely change the method of making the appropriation from the method pursued for many years, but we are impressed by the fact that the suggestions are well worth serious consideration, and we expect to further consider them as we have the opportunity. Now, if the gentleman will withdraw his pro forma amendment, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 90 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 90 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Let us hear the amendment reported first.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 90, line 2, strike out the following: "in all, $3,400," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "clerks—1 of class 2, 1 of class 1; 1, $1,100; 1, $1,000; in all, $8,100.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

General Land Office: Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $3,000; chief law clerk, $2,500; 2 law clerks, at $2,200 each; 3 law examiners of surveyors general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; chiefs of divisions—1 of surveys $2,750; 1, $2,400; 10 at $2,000 each; assistant chief of division, $2,000; law examiners—13 at $2,000 each, 10 at $1,800 each, 18 at $1,600 each; clerks—27 of class 4, 51 of class 3, 74 of class 2, 77 of class 1, 65 at $1,000 each; 65 copyists; 26 copyists, at $720 each; 2 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; messenger boys—10 at $600 each, 6 at $480 each; 6 skilled laborers, who may act as assistant messengers when required, at $660 each; 16 laborers; laborer, $480; packer, $720; depositary acting for the commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000; clerk and librarian, $1,000; in all, $631,250.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I submit, for the information of the committee, the estimate which was submitted by the department in lieu of this item. It is as follows:

Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $3,000; chief law clerk, $3,000; 2 law clerks, at $2,200 each; 3 law examiners of surveyors general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; chiefs of divisions—1 of surveys, $2,750; 1, $2,400; 10 at $2,000 each; assistant chief of division, $2,000; law examiners—13 at $2,000 each, 10 at $1,800 each, 18 at $1,600 each; clerks—27 of class 4, 52 of class 3, 77 of class 2, 84 of class 1, 68 at $1,000 each; 67 copyists; 26 copyists, at $900 each; 2 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; messenger boys—10 at $600 each, 6 at $480 each; 6 skilled laborers, who may act as assistant messengers when required, at $660 each; 16 laborers; laborer, $480; packer, $720; depositary acting for the commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000; clerk and librarian, $1,000; in all, $655,430.

That estimate proposes an increase of clerks to the number of 16. It increases the salary of 26 copyists from $720 to $900 and contemplates an increase of the appropriation of $24,180. I wish it were possible to impress the committee with the wisdom and advisability of adopting the recommendations as made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. There is no office under the Government so badly in need of additional force as the General Land Office. This is the people's business. We spend millions of dollars for sundry and divers forms of investigation. Most of them are helpful and proper I hope and trust, but some of them we could very well get along without. Certainly while we are doing this so liberally as we are we should not neglect the real business of the Government, and particularly the business of the Government as transacted with its own citizens whom it is inviting to go on the public domain and improve and develop it.

The Land Office in many branches at the present time is grievously behind in its work. The business, contrary to expectations, has not decreased in the actual number of cases to any considerable extent. But if it had, there would still be the increased business that comes by reason of the fact that the Land Office is giving additional and greatly detailed attention to each and every case. The Land Office touches and has to do with every case in ways now that it had not formerly. We are going into very great detail in examining questions as to the character of the land and in the careful examination of matters relating to a compliance with the law by entrymen.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman state in a general way what is the work that the Land Office does of this character that needs to be done at once?

Mr. MONDELL. The salaries paid under this head go to the assistant commissioner, the chief clerk, and to practically all of the clerks of the department. All the work of the Land Office of the Government originates, as the gentleman knows, in the field, in the field divisions, or in 102 local land offices. There the initial acts are performed under which the entryman declares his intention to assert a claim to a tract of Government land. There his final proof of his compliance with the law is made. These cases are forwarded from the local land offices to the General Land Office. The General Land Office examines the applications to see if they are regular. If they are not regular, it sends them back.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. They send them back that the applications may be perfected; send them back that inquiry may be made as to the character of the land in question. When final proofs come to the Land Office they must be examined as to whether the entryman has proved complete compliance with the law. They must be compared with the plats in order to make it clear that the lands sought are lands of the character contemplated to be taken under the law under which the entryman makes his entry. And between these two periods of initial entry and final proof innumerable questions are constantly arising which are brought to the attention of the Land Office, namely, complaint that the entryman is not complying with the law in this, that, or the other particular; the question as to whether the land he occupies is mineral or nonmineral; questions as to the entryman's qualifications to make this particular kind of an entry. Those questions, examined in the field, coming up from the local land offices, and referred back and forth, must be taken care of.

In addition to that there are the applications of the States under the Carey Act, States applying for lands here, in order that they may reclaim them under what is known as the Carey Act—an infinite amount of detailed business in regard to that sort of thing, and taken care of in one branch of the office. Then, there are questions of rights of way for canals, for ditches, railroads, and telegraph lines. There are innumerable questions arising under applications for the use of public land under easements of many kinds and character contemplated and provided by the law. Then, there is the old question of swamp lands, not yet fully settled, and still being disposed of in some of the Southern States. There are the questions that come before the surveying division, relating to the survey of the public lands, their platting. There are questions with regard to withdrawals and restorations, questions which a few years ago were entirely unknown.

And so I might go on for an hour, and then not be able to enumerate in full detail the infinite variety of questions and problems coming before this office. These are affairs of the people. They ought to have prompt attention. They ought to have attention by a force of competent and well-paid clerks, and yet this office has gone on year after year and year after year with its increasing business, with its constantly multiplying questions, without any considerable increase of force or salaries, without any increase whatever for years of the regular force. This is a proposition to put into the regular force some clerks that have been employed for some time under special appropriations, and a few additional clerks, and to increase the compensation of some 26 copyists who are now receiving from $720 a year to $900 a year. These clerks in the main are either stenographers or typewriters, and reasonably expert, or they are clerks of experience in other land-office lines; it is ridiculous to ask anyone well qualified in any of these lines to work for $720 a year. The fact is that a considerable number of them will be dropped from the rolls unless we adopt an amendment like this. I am not offering the amendment, but simply submitting it for information, because I realize the committee will not accept it. The House in Committee of the Whole is not likely to override the committee any more since the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in harmony with the desire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to keep down expenditures. I do not feel, perhaps, the responsibility that he does in the matter of Federal expenditures. Still I hope I am honestly and sincerely, as a member of this committee, opposed to unreasonable and unnecessary expenditures. But here is a service of the Government that is suffering or will suffer after the 1st of July. We are caring for it temporarily under special appropriation. We made an appropriation of $20,000 the other day in the deficiency act. Here is a service of the Government and of the people that is bound to suffer and suffer seriously unless we provide this extra help. We ought to increase the salary of the commissioner, for it is an office of greater responsibility than many offices under the Government in which men are receiving $6,000 to $7,000. We ought to increase the salary of the assistant commissioner; we ought to increase the salary of many of these clerks, but my amendment proposes no increases of salaries among the higher paid officials. It proposes an increase of salaries among certain classes of clerks, and proposes an addition of some 16 clerks to the present force of the General Land Office. I very, very sincerely regret that the committee did not see its way clear to accept these proposed increases. I trust that if these changes are made elsewhere, they will be accepted by the committee without question, for they are greatly needed.

The following memorandum was submitted to the committee as indicating the need of these increases:

As to the additional clerical force estimated for herein—namely, 1 clerk, at $1,600; 3 clerks, at $1,400; 7 clerks, at $1,200; 3 clerks, at $1,000; 2 copyists, at $900—7 of said force are required and made necessary on account of the extra work entailed upon the office by the three-year homestead law of June 6, 1912 (37 Stat., 123). Owing to the continued difficulties encountered in the adjudication of claims under the said three-year law, and because of the many conservation withdrawals and eliminations, the time required in the adjudication of claims has increased. At the present time, because of the loss of the 24 temporary employees provided for the fiscal year 1913, sundry civil act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 455), the work in the General Land Office is seriously delayed, and many complaints are being made.

The remainder of the additional force is required and made necessary in order to retain upon the permanent roll the two clerks now employed under the appropriation for "Completing field notes of surveys, etc., in Minnesota and North Dakota," sundry civil act of June 23, 1913 (38 Stat., p. 47), and the seven clerks now employed under the appropriation for "Deposits by individuals for surveying the public lands," repayments by railroad companies, act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365, sec. 21). Provision for the employment of these seven clerks for the current fiscal year 1914 is made by the general deficiency appropriation act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 924). The work of completing the field notes and drafting necessary for the proper filing of plats of surveys in the abandoned districts of Minnesota, North Dakota, Louisiana, and Florida is not yet finished, but the work as it comes in from time to time does not consume the entire time of the two clerks engaged thereon, and they have been employed upon other duties connected with the work of surveys requiring expert knowledge. The additional appropriation within the last two years for surveys and resurveys, amounting to nearly 100 per cent, has necessarily increased the labor in this office of proper supervision and expert technical examination, so that it was believed that an additional force might result in not only clearing away the arrears of work but keeping the work up to date. Actual experience after this had been tried showed the increased amount of returns of surveys required the full time of the expert force, and that although the arrears were reduced, yet the number of people engaged was insufficient to do more than keep abreast of the current work. In consequence the force of experts secured for the purpose of bringing up the arrears of work on returns of surveys seems to be necessary in order to prevent the work from falling into arrears in the future, and the above number of clerks is recommended for continuation, having been found efficient and having been trained to render the best technical examinations upon the surveys. As the sundry civil act of August 24, 1912, carrying an extra number of clerks was terminated on June 30, 1913, by failure of Congress to reappropriate the amount for the salaries, it was necessary to secure permission from Congress in the general deficiency act of March 4, 1913, to employ the fund created by railroad repayments under the act of July 2, 1864, for the purpose, but this permission was granted only for one year, and the above estimate is intended to provide for the employment of the extra clerks beyond that time, or from July 1, 1914. If the force is not provided for at that time, the work of examination of surveys in this office prior to their acceptance will be seriously retarded. Seven of the clerks mentioned are expert surveyors and skilled in the practice of making the necessary tests of the work which is essential to secure their accuracy. The other two clerks are required for the clerical assistance necessary for the prompt disposal of the work.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I concur generally with the statements made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I know that at the present time the Interior Department is very much behind with its work. The delay of the work in this department is the cause of much worry and inconvenience and loss of time and money to a large number of people in my district. Yesterday I was greatly interested in the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] concerning the already broken promises and broken platform pledges of his party. With him I regret that it seems evident his party is again going to demonstrate its unfitness as a political party to properly direct this Government. It now seems evident that before the close of this Congress there are to be more broken party promises and more broken platform pledges by the misguided party on that side of the House. In this connection I wish to address the House for a short time on the subject of rural-credit legislation. The alluring promises this administration has made to the people of this country on this subject I trust will not be promises made to the ear, only to be broken to the hope.

Mr. Chairman, it is our proud boast that we are the most progressive, the most prosperous, and the most highly civilized nation in the world. And this is on the whole true. But in our youthful pride of power and wealth and rank as a nation we frequently too long overlook lessons of vital value that we may well learn from older nations—lessons to which, if timely heed is given, will guide us safely farther on our way to more permanent national power, prosperity, and happiness. We have learned much and have much still to learn from others in the sisterhood of nations.

Within the last few years it has been brought very clearly to our attention that in the extension of the service and in the efficiency of our Parcel Post System we are decades behind other leading nations of the world. Now, we are earnestly and actively endeavoring to improve this system and to extend its usefulness to our people in a way to surpass all other nations.

The recent rapidly increasing cost of living and the lack of our agricultural production to keep pace with the increase of our population has drawn our attention to some of the reasons for the depopulation of many of our farming districts and the cause of the large ratio of increase of our urban over our rural population.

Of all industries agriculture is the most important. It far surpasses in importance mining, manufacturing, or commerce. It is that one industry upon which all others are dependent. It is almost axiomatic that as those engaged in agriculture succeed so the nation ultimately succeeds. The fact that our agricultural development and production is not keeping pace with the increase of our population is a serious cause for the Nation's alarm.

Recent study of the social and economic questions involved in agricultural life and work in this country has led to the discovery that one of the chief causes of the growing tendency of the movement from the farm to the city is the exorbitant interest rates that farmers are required to pay for credits necessary to carry on their business of farming.

In the United States there are about 6,360,000 farmers. The farm property of this country is valued at more than $40,000,000,000, according to the Thirteenth Decennial Census. The farmers of the Nation are paying interest on about $6,000,000,000 of farm credits at an annual rate of interest of between 8 and 9 per cent.

In the leading agricultural countries of Europe those engaged in farming are able to secure credits for about one-half the average rate paid in this country. In Germany the rate on short-time loans made to farmers through the Raiffeisen banks and similar organizations average rather less than 4½ per cent per annum. Long-time loans, or land-mortgage loans, as made by the Landschaften and similar associations, are made at an average rate of interest of something less than 4 per cent. A remarkable difference in interest rates on farm credits in this country and in the leading agricultural countries of the world, you say. Yes; and here is where we in this country have much to learn and much needed work to do.

This most important, and in effect, far-reaching difference is due to well-developed cooperative systems of rural credits, and in addition direct Government aid for rural credits in the leading agricultural countries of Europe, and to an almost entire lack of cooperative rural-credit systems and practically no Government aid for rural credits in this country.

President Taft during his administration strongly recommended a thorough study of rural-credit conditions in this and in foreign countries and the enactment of legislation for the betterment of conditions in this country.

Under the authority of a provision contained in the Agricultural appropriation act approved March 4, 1913, President Wilson appointed a commission of seven members to cooperate with the American commission assembled under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress to investigate and study in European countries cooperative land-mortgage banks, cooperative rural-credit unions, and similar organizations and institutions devoting their attention to the promotion of agriculture and the betterment of rural conditions.

The members of the American and the United States commissions sailed for Europe on the 26th of May of last year and spent several months studying agricultural conditions abroad. The very valuable reports of both commissions have been placed before this Congress.

Following the recommendations of the United States commission, contained in Senate Document No. 380 of this session of Congress, Senator FLETCHER has introduced Senate bill 4246 and Representative Moss has introduced the same bill as H. R. 12585. This bill provides for the organization of a sytsem of land-mortgage banks under Government supervision. These banks are given the right to issue land-mortgage bonds not to exceed fifteen times the amount of the capital and surplus of the bank and secured by an equal amount of first-mortgage loans to farmers. All mortgages made to and all debentures of these land-mortgage banks are to be exempt from State and Federal taxes.

The interest rate charged to the farmer must not be more than 1 per cent annually greater than the rate of interest the land-mortgage bonds for the series including the mortgage loans may be sold for by the bank. The so-called farm-land banks provided for in the Moss-Fletcher bill are highly privileged private profit-sharing joint-stock companies. There is no guarantee under the system proposed in the bill that the farmers of this country will be given credits at reasonable rates of interest in all sections of the country and in the section most needing low interest charges.

I am opposed to the Moss-Fletcher bill because, while it affords a great many special privileges to those who under its provisions may engage in banking to furnish credits to farmers, it does not guarantee fair and reasonable rates of interest to the farmer and fails to provide that much-needed protection for the farmer from extortionate commissions and interest rates. In writing from the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, under date of February 26, 1914, to Senator FLETCHER, Hon. David Lubin, referring to the Moss-Fletcher bill, has this to say:

> I find it to be in substance a plan for mortgage banks by bankers, instead of being for cooperative mortgage associations "operated by farmers for farmers." If bill S. 4246 passes, I believe it would tend to standardize the farm-mortgage business as to lend itself readily to an understanding between the proposed banks for the general control of terms and interest rates to the exclusion of a voice in the matter by the farmers. In short, it seems to me that the bill would be likely to create an artificial barrier between the farmer and the lending public.

Mr. Lubin is a recognized authority in this country and in Europe on questions pertaining to farmers' cooperative associations and to rural credits. Speaking of Mr. Lubin, the American commission, in its report before this Congress, says:

> The members of the American commission can not refrain from indicating their obligations to Mr. Lubin, the instigator of the International Institute of Agriculture, and the man without whom the American commission and its European work would have been impossible.

The Moss-Fletcher bill in its present form simply provides for another phase of the old game of lending money to private profit-sharing banks to lend to the farmers of the country.

Some time ago I introduced H. R. 12755, a bill for the establishment of a farm-credit bureau in the Department of Agriculture to reduce the rate of interest on farm mortgages and to encourage agriculture and the ownership of farm homes. The provisions of this bill and the fundamental principles on which it is founded will, I believe, best meet the needs of a rural credit system for this country at this time, and in their practical operations will result in encouraging the organization and development of real cooperative rural credit associations in all parts of the country.

The purpose of the act which I propose is stated in section 3 to be "To loan money upon the security of farm mortgages direct to farmers, to farmers through the agency of farm-credit associations, or as hereinafter provided." The term "farmer," for the purpose of this act, shall be construed to mean any person, firm, or corporation engaged exclusively in the business of tilling the soil and raising farm products, or that hereafter shall be engaged in the said business. The term "farm-credit association" shall be construed to mean any association of farmers who actually reside upon and operate farms organized for the purpose of procuring better credit facilities with which to conduct the business of raising farm produce and which shall comply with regulations by the board hereafter created.

The bureau is to be under the charge of a commissioner appointed by the President for a term of 10 years, and to be removed only for cause and after a fair hearing. This long term for the commissioner and the provisions of section 19 of the bill aim to take the bureau and its work entirely out of politics. Section 4 of the bill provides for a farm-credit board to prescribe procedure, regulations, and forms for the farm-credit bureau not specifically provided for in the bill.

The farm-credit board is given the authority to establish branch bureaus in each of the several States if found to be for the best means of carrying out the purpose of the proposed act. The farm-credit board is to consist of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Postmaster General, and two farmers who shall fairly represent the agricultural interests of the different sections of the country.

Loans are made by the bureau direct to farmers at a rate of interest not to exceed 4 per cent. Loans may also be made by the bureau to farmers through farm-credit associations or designated financial associations acting as agents of the bureau, under regulations prescribed by the farm-credit board. In the latter case, provided that the associations shall become security for all mortgages made through them, the commissioner of the bureau is authorized to pay the farm-credit associations a commission annually of not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent on the loans thus made. This is an important provision of the bill and one under which much assistance and encouragement can be given by the Government to the organization and development of farm cooperative credit associations, which will not only assist in the making of long-time loans but will provide the short-time credits needed by their members.

The terms of every loan extending over more than five years must contain a provision for its amortization, or reduction, by annual or semiannual payments on account of the principal. That the administrative expenses of the system may be the lowest possible, postmasters, post-office inspectors, rural carriers, United States district attorneys, and other officers and employees of the Government are required to cooperate with the bureau in the making and collecting of these loans.

The fund from which loans are to be made is to be provided by the sale of United States 20-year bonds, bearing interest at not to exceed 3½ per cent.

The chief and practically only criticism that has been offered to the system I have proposed is that it involves serious class legislation for the Government to loan money direct to farmers. Now, in my judgment this question of fair and reasonable interest rates on rural credits is one that involves much more than the farmer. If the benefits to be derived from lower interest rates on farm credits were only to accrue to the farmer, such a criticism might be well made. When we see every day people leaving the farm for the city and ceasing to be producers and becoming consumers instead; when we find farm production in this country is increasing much less rapidly than our population; when we recall that between 1900 and 1910 our urban population increased 34 per cent while our rural population during the same period increased but 11 per cent, we can come to no other conclusion but that any governmental action or aid that will increase the number of farmers in this country and encourage better farming and the raising of more farm produce will benefit all classes in our Nation. European countries have had the same problem to deal with that now confronts us. Nearly all of them have proceeded far and very successfully in its solution. Having found that it was of the first and greatest importance to have many people on the farms so that food for all the people might be raised, European Governments have done a great deal for agriculture during the past 50 years.

To-day the leading nations in the world are lending money secured from the sale of Government bonds, or secured from taxes, to farmers, either directly to farmers or to farmers through cooperative credit associations. Several nations and provincial and State governments are now guaranteeing bonds and debentures issued against farm mortgages. On this question the United States commission, in its report now before this Congress, says:

> In every instance in Europe where Government capital has been granted to establish mortgage credits the results have been favorable.

FRANCE.

In France the Credit Foncier was established in 1852.

In the beginning it was given a Government subsidy of 10,000,000 francs, and has since received from the Government many special concessions. Under the law of March 31, 1899, district agricultural-credit banks were established, and 40,000,000 francs and an additional yearly contribution of 3,000,000 francs were placed at their disposal.

GERMANY.

In Germany several of the principalities guarantee mortgages, debentures, and obligations to depositors based on loans to farmers. The State guarantees the mortgages and all debentures of the Land Bank of Weisbaden, Prussia. This bank has about 30 branches. All its capital was originally borrowed upon bonds. In the 70 years that this Government land bank has been in existence it has not lost a dollar on land mortgages.

ENGLAND.

In studying the problem of landlordism and the condition of the tenant farmer in Ireland, England discovered that it was an idle waste of time and energy to talk self-help to the interest-racked farmers of Ireland. In 1903 the English estate commission was established by the British Government and the expenditure of £100,000,000 authorized. More than $400,000,000 of this amount has already been expended. The farmer who borrows pays an annual rate, including interest and amortization, of 3¼ per cent. The loan fund is borrowed by the Government on its certificates at 2¾ per cent, redeemable in 30 years. Anyone who has read the history of Ireland during the past 10 years knows the wonderful effect this Government aid to farm credits has wrought among the farmers of that land.

DENMARK.

Denmark has loaned more than 30,000,000 crowns directly to its farmers. The rate of interest charged is 3 per cent. Denmark is increasing its loans to farmers at the rate of 4,000,000 crowns a year.

NORWAY.

Through the Mortgage Bank of the Kingdom of Norway, located at Christiania, loans are made up to 60 per cent of the value of the property, mortgaged for a term of 40 years at 4½ per cent interest. All the capital stock of this bank belongs to the Government, and all bonds issued by it are obligations of the Government. The constitution of this bank states that its aim is to procure for proprietors of real estate facilities for raising money on their property. The administration of the banks is intrusted to a board of directors of three members. Two are chosen by the Storting and one is nominated by the King.

OTHER COUNTRIES.

Italy, Austria-Hungary, Servia, Bulgaria, Australia, and Switzerland all give direct Government aid to rural credits.

RUSSIA.

The Peasants' Land Mortgage Bank in Russia was organized in 1882. It was authorized in 1895 to purchase the large holdings of landlords, and was provided by the Russian Government with additional capital for this purpose. The lands are divided into small tracts and sold to actual farmers. The payment of the purchase price extends for as long as 55½ years. The rate of interest charged the peasant purchasers, including amortization and cost of administration, amounts to 4½ per cent.

NEW ZEALAND.

New Zealand, since the advances act was put into operation in 1895, has been loaning money to its farmers at interest rates of from 4 to 4½ per cent. The loan fund has been mainly secured by the issue of Government bonds paying an interest rate of 3 to 3½ per cent. Naturally at first there was bitter opposition to the enactment of a law for Government loans in New Zealand. It is not surprising to learn that much of the opposition came from those who were making large profits under the old system. Now no political party in New Zealand opposes the new system.

In the report for the year 1907 of the United States consul to New Zealand this statement appears in reference to Government loans to farmers in that country:

> The loans have been a great boon to struggling farmers, who were paying as high as 8 per cent on their mortgages. Immediately this money became available interest came tumbling down to 4 per cent.

An English authority on economics makes this reference to Government loans in New Zealand:

> The world over, one of the greatest obstacles in the way of the small farmer, and the large one, is the difficulty of getting capital. Often there is no money to be borrowed in the district where he lives, or if there is, it is in the hands of rich neighbors or banks, who know nothing but their bond and the pound of flesh. But in New Zealand the settler has only to go to the nearest post office to get into communication with a money lender, who charges no commission or brokerage, and no fees, except for actual expenses; never exacts usury, offers no cut-throat mortgages for signatures, will let him have any amount from as little as $125 to as much as $15,000, does not try to induce him to borrow more than he really needs, gives him 36½ years to pay the money back, and accepts it from him in small installments on the principal with every payment of interest, so as to make it as little of a burden as can be; will allow him, if he happens to have $25 to spare, to pay it at any time to reduce his indebtedness, and when it finds itself making a profit out of its business, instead of accumulating a fortune, gives him the benefit by reducing his rate.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

In 1907 a government agricultural bank was established by the Philippine government, with a capital of $500,000 provided from government funds. This bank is now making mortgage loans to our brown brother farmers in the Pacific. The operation of this government agricultural bank has been, according to reports before this House, to greatly lower interest rates and to decrease usury in all the Provinces of the Philippine government.

Should this Congress enact a law providing for Government loans direct to farmers and to farmers through cooperative credit associations, it will not be venturing upon a new, untried, or dangerous field of proper government function.

It may be too much to trust that this administration will enact legislation for a practical system of rural-credit legislation. But the day is not far distant, I now predict, when the fundamental principles of the legislation I have proposed will be written into our statutes and will be welcomed and approved by many of those now in opposition. This Government, as other older Governments, must rise to the demands of new industrial and social conditions. It must squarely meet the problems of to-day. The popular conceptions of the proper functions of government should not be too lightly considered by the representatives of the people in this American Congress.

While I do not wish to be understood as maintaining that wise and practical rural-credit legislation will relieve all the inequalities that to-day are imposed upon the farmer in this country, I am confident it will go a long way to make life on the farm more comfortable, more enjoyable, more profitable, and more attractive.

In conclusion, I wish to call attention to this statement made by a German writer pertaining to influence of rural credit organizations on agricultural conditions in Germany:

About an hour's walk from Neuwied on the Rhine is situated on a plateau bordering the Westerwald the little village of Anhausen. This district is not very fertile and the inhabitants are mostly small peasant proprietors, some with only sufficient land to graze a single ox or cow. An owner of 10 acres is a rich man. Before the year 1862 the village presented a sorry aspect; rickety buildings, untidy yards, in rainy weather running with filth, never a sight of a decently piled manure heap; the inhabitants themselves ragged and immoral; drunkenness and quarreling universal. Houses and oxen belonged with few exceptions to Jewish dealers. Agricultural implements were scanty and dilapidated; and badly worked fields brought in poor returns. The villagers had lost confidence and hope, they were the serfs of dealers and usurers. To-day Anhausen is a clean and friendly looking village, the buildings well kept, the farmyards clean even on workdays; there are orderly manure heaps on every farm. The inhabitants are well if simply clothed, and their manners are reputable. They own the cattle in their stalls. They are out of debt to dealers and usurers. Modern implements are used by nearly every farmer, the value of the farms has risen and the fields, carefully and thoroughly cultivated, yield large crops. And this change, which is something more than statistics can express, is the work of a simple Raiffeisen bank.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For connected and separate United States and other maps, prepared in the General Land Office, $20,000: Provided, That of the United States maps procured hereunder 7,200 copies shall be delivered to the Senate and 14,400 copies shall be delivered to the House of Representatives 500 copies shall be delivered to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the residue shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior for distribution. And all maps delivered to the Senate and House of Representatives hereunder shall be mounted with rollers ready for use.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a subject not included in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire what is it about?

Mr. MONDELL. I delivered an address in Philadelphia a few days ago on the Mexican situation, and I would like to place it in the RECORD, if I may.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the chairman of the committee if this is the usual amount for maps?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office: Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,750; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of divisions—1, $2,250; 1, $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; clerks—20 of class 4, 31 of class 3, 38 of class 2, 2 at $1,500 each, 68 of class 1, including 1 stenographer, 32 at $1,000 each, including one stenographer; 34 clerks at $900 each; messenger; four assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys, at $360 each; expert accountant, $2,000; forester, $3,600; draftsman, $1,400; irrigation engineer, $2,000; examiner of irrigation accounts, $1,800; draftsman, $1,200; 2 clerks at $720 each; in all, $328,150.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 96, lines 6 and 7, I make a point of order against the following:

Second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,750.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the total.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I notice that in this case the committee has changed the title of "copyist" and has put them in as clerks at $900. What was the special reason for making the distinction between the Indian Office and the General Land Office in that particular?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that the only reason is that the suggestion was made by the commissioner and those who appeared before the committee, and really there is no distinction between these clerks and the copyists who are paid $900.

Mr. MANN. I understand that is the case in both of them, and they in each instance, both in the Land Office and the Indian Office, asked that these copyists be changed to clerks and paid the salary of $900. The committee complied with that request as to the Indian Office, but in the more responsible office—the Land Office—they seemed to have declined to grant the request. What is the distinction?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the Indian Office there are both clerks and copyists at $900 each, whereas there are no clerks at $900 in the General Land Office. This was changed simply for the purpose of abbreviating the bill and consolidating the places.

Mr. MANN. I notice on the contrary, if I am correct. You may have had some clerks at $900, but you have five clerks at $900 in the current law who were formerly copyists. They were promoted from copyists to clerks, and from $720 to $900. Now, you add to the number of copyists and call them "clerks." Where it is "29 copyists" under the existing law you change it to "34 clerks, at $900," in the Indian Office. I am not complaining of that, but I ask why the distinction between the Indian Office and the General Land Office? Is it a fact that there is a little more of a politician—no; I will not say that; but a man a little more in the public eye—in the Indian Office than there is in the General Land Office? I think both of them are very competent.

You largely increase the number of clerks also in the Indian Office, but you made no increase whatever in the Land Office. Is it a fact that the committee thinks it more important to keep up to date the work of the Indians than it is to keep up to date the work for the white settlers on the public domain? Take this instance: Here we open an Indian reservation. We permit white settlers to go on that reservation, and, under the homestead laws and otherwise, the money goes to the Indians. Now, you expedite the work on the Indian side of it, but decline to expedite the work on behalf of the white settlers. Why the distinction?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman that the committee, of course, acted without any intent of doing any particular office an injustice. The increase of clerks under the Indian Office was due to certain heirship investigations and work that had to be done under the law by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and these clerks were necessary in order to perform that additional work.

Mr. MANN. I will agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. So far as the change from copyists to clerks in the Indian Office is concerned, and the failure to change from copyists to clerks in the Land Office, that is simply due to the fact that there are no clerks in the General Land Office at $900, whereas there were some in the Indian Office.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There were no clerks in the Indian Office at $900 except five copyists, who were advanced last year from the position of copyists to $900 clerks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was speaking of the current law. There are clerks in the Indian Office under the current law who draw $900.

Mr. MANN. There were five. They were formerly copyists.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The committee thought it was wholly unnecessary to take up space in the bill by carrying clerks at $900 and copyists at $900, when, as a matter of fact, these particular clerks and copyists perform exactly the same character and kind of work. That is the only reason.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the copyists get $720. That is what they get now. You increased the salaries in the form——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no; the gentleman is in error. The salary fixed for a copyist, unless some other amount is mentioned in the appropriation bill, is $900. We have some copyists who do not receive $900, but where persons are carried in the bill as copyists, without any amount being stated, they get $900.

Mr. MANN. I was thinking it was $720. But the work is the same, or practically the same, for these so-called copyists in both offices.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to criticize the committee for the increases made in the Indian Office. The committee has added 13 clerks there—2 at $1,600, 4 at $1,400, and 7 at $1,200—and it has also increased salaries. I have no criticism to make of that. I think it is entirely proper that it should have been done; but I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] just stated. The committee, which has increased the facilities for doing this work on behalf of the Indians, has declined to increase the facilities on behalf of our white settlers. Further than that, the work of the Indian Office does not lay upon its clerks generally the responsibilities that the General Land Office does. A good deal of their work could be left undone without a very great amount of loss to anyone, in my opinion, although I think that the work is useful and helpful.

The work of the General Land Office, on the contrary, from the field is work that must be disposed of in some way or other; must be taken care of. A decision must be made. Some man's rights, some man's interest, and in every case the interests of the Government are involved. A decision must be rendered, and in providing for work of that character we should not be niggardly. We certainly ought to take the word of a man who makes the showing that is made by the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is perhaps in some respects not quite as active a personality as the distinguished gentleman who is Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They are both very high-class men, both exceedingly worthy men, both good men for their positions.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office is perhaps too modest about the needs of his office. Perhaps he did not emphasize the needs of his office as in the opinion of the subcommittee he should have done; but he did make a clear statement, a statement that is to me conclusive. I have placed a part of that statement in the RECORD, showing how badly that office is in need of additional help in order to take care of the work of the Government, the work of the people who are endeavoring to develop the public domain, the people who are building homes, the people who are building irrigation work, the people who are building railroads, the people who are extending the cultivated area of the country and building up and developing its resources. The committee did very well by the Indian Office. I am glad they did. It is a great office, and it has a worthy head. It is too bad that the committee did not see fit to do as well by the Land Office.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office: Commissioner, $5,000; deputy commissioner, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $3,000; assistant medical referee, $2,250; 2 qualified surgeons, at $2,000 each; 15 medical examiners, at $1,800 each; 8 chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,250; chief of board of review, $2,250; 47 principal examiners, at $2,000 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, $2,000; 16 assistant chiefs of divisions, at $1,800 each; 3 stenographers, at $1,600 each; disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions, $4,000; deputy disbursing clerk, $2,750; 3 supervising clerks in the disbursing division, at $2,000 each; clerks—100 of class 4, 100 of class 3, 285 of class 2, 350 of class 1, 74 at $1,000 each; 61 copyists; 30 messengers; 16 assistant messengers; 17 skilled laborers, at $660 each; 20 messenger boys, at $400 each; superintendent of building, $1,400; 23 laborers; 10 female laborers, at $400 each; 15 charwomen; painter, and cabinetmaker, skilled in their trades, at $900 each; captain of the watch, $840; 3 sergeants of the watch, at $750 each; 20 watchmen; engineer, $1,200; two firemen; in all, $1,618,350.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 97, line 9, strike out the word "fifty" and insert "sixty," and strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert "eighty-nine," and, in line 17, strike out the sum "$1,618,350" and insert "$1,645,350."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a brief statement. In my explanation of the bill in general debate I stated in perfect good faith that there were vacancies enough in the Pension Office to take care of the reductions that had been made. In that I was wrong. They did not have and will not have, on July 1, 1914, as many vacancies as there are reductions.

Since this bill was reported to the House I have visited the Pension Office and have examined the administrative audit work. The committee making up the bill were under the impression from the hearings that there was duplication in the Pension Office. My investigation shows that they are not duplicating work, but that they are doing what the Comptroller of the Treasury requires them to do under the Dockery law, to wit, they are making an administrative audit, which they had not made prior to November, 1913. For that reason I feel that we were wrong in striking out the 25 clerks, and this amendment is to restore that number to the bill. The bill, when amended, will provide all the clerks estimated for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. On page 97, in line 17, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, line 17, strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,400."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee will consent to this amendment. The bill in various places carries provisions for engineers at $1,400. This is the Bureau of Pensions. It is a very big plant, and it carries a great deal of responsibility on the part of the engineer in order to keep that immense building properly heated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman aware that the heat for the Pension Building all comes from a central heating plant?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; and that is true of all, or nearly all, the large buildings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; I beg pardon.

Mr. FOWLER. It is true of a great many of the department buildings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think $1,200 is a pretty good salary for a man who does not have anything to do with the actual heating of the building?

Mr. FOWLER. He has the responsibility of looking after the building in the capacity of an engineer.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Government pays the engineer of the Winder Building only $1,000, and the engineer of the Civil Service Commission Building $840.

Mr. FOWLER. There is no statutory provision for the engineer of the Winder Building, as I understand. If there is, I could not find it. But where there is a chief engineer you have been paying $1,400. Here is an engineer who takes care of the Pension Bureau, and there is no reason why his salary should be cut down.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We are not cutting it down.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He gets the same in this bill as he got last year and the year before.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, well; that is no argument at all. Because John Jones steals Jim Smith's horse is no reason Jim Smith should steal John Jones's horse.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is an answer to the gentleman's plain statement that we are cutting down the salary.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not yielding to the gentleman. If this man has been wronged in the past, he is a laboring man, and there is no reason why the committee should wrong him now. He is a laboring man; he is afraid to ask for even the statutory salary. He knows that nobody has been before your honorable committee to represent him. He knows that nobody has ever come to plead his case; he knows that he is compelled to take the salary that is given him—it does not make any difference what it is. I have had examples of that within the last week, where men have come and told me that they were afraid to ask for their statutory salary because they are afraid they would lose their jobs. I have had letters to that effect, unsigned, saying that they were afraid to sign their names for fear they would lose their jobs.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that if what he says is true and this state of facts exist under the civil service he ought to make complaint and see that these people are protected in their rights?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not talking about the civil service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is under the civil service.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not civil service, as far as the salary is concerned. No civil-service rules have anything to do with salaries. It is a statutory salary, and it ought to be given to this man.

I repeat that he is a laboring man, and he stands by his organization; and I think in all matter of human kindness that this committee—and I have never complained of the committee directly, because, as I said to you, these irregularities are a statute inheritance from past legislation—but there is a wrong being done this poor laboring man, and you ought to concede it here and right the wrong.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If there are officials in the city of Washington who are making it so that a clerk or a laboring man can not ask for an increase of salary, does not the gentleman think that as a friend of the clerk and the laboring man he should see to it that the facts should be made known?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, as a friend of the laboring man I was one of the men that helped to initiate the law to do away with the cloture on the employees of this country, so that they could be free.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cox). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. I say that I helped initiate the law that repealed the cloture preventing clerks from asking what they pleased in the Post Office Department. I do not know; I am not familiar with the rules in the other departments enough to know whether men are deprived of their labor in seeking their rights, but I do know that I have had that complaint made to me within the last week. Whether it is well founded or not I can not say. But by some means there is a condition hovering over laboring men, so that they are afraid to ask even for the salary provided by the statute. How you can justify yourselves in increasing salaries of men drawing princely sums and refuse to give this poor laboring man his statutory salary I fail to understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were 3 ayes and 28 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, although the amendment has been voted down, I think it is but fair that I should make a brief statement. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman read from the act of 1873, which created this position at $1,400. That act was repealed by the act of January 20, 1874, so the statutory salary is not $1,400.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to see the act, because I do not think it was repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The engineer at the Pension Office has no very difficult duties to perform. That building is heated from a central heating plant. The people in charge of the building have not asked for any greater salary, and the committee has no knowledge of it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to read the statute into the RECORD so that we may see whether it was repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It repeals the law that the gentleman just quoted from.

Mr. FOWLER. No; it does not do it. I do not want to be misrepresented in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will read it:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874," as provides for the increase of the compensation of public officers and employees, whether Members of Congress, Delegates, or others, except the President of the United States and the justices of the Supreme Court, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Does not that repeal all of them?

Mr. FOWLER. No; it does not. It does not apply to this salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Of course it does.

Mr. FOWLER. I insist that it does not.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is said that doctors differ, and I am sure that lawyers differ now. I would not say that I am the better lawyer than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not care if the gentleman does say so, it would be no discredit to me.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1915 not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions herein above provided for shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among those in the classified service in said bureau. And the salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as herein above provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. When this was inserted in the current law the first time, there was a good reason for it, but I doubt whether there is any reason for it now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman refers to the duplication?

Mr. MANN. I mean the reduction of 75 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was speaking of the provision that the work should not be duplicated.

Mr. MANN. This provision was inserted in the appropriation act before the Sherwood pension bill was passed. Then, when the Sherwood pension bill was passed, as I recall, we made a special appropriation in a lump sum of $200,000 for additional services in the Pension Office. Before that the work was being rapidly reduced. We now carry in this appropriation bill not only all the clerks that were carried in the appropriation act for the current year, but nearly all of those who were employed under the $200,000 lump-sum appropriation, which would appear to indicate that there is need for these men in the office now. Will there be such a reduction during the next year that you can cut off 75 per cent of the vacancies without any question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the committee was under the impression that we could do that. The purpose was to let vacancies take care of the clerks in excess of the requirements. The commissioner, however, I want to say, is very insistent that the committee made a mistake in putting that provision into the bill. I believe myself that with the force that we have given the commissioner in this bill he could get along very well if he filled only one-fourth of the vacancies.

Mr. MANN. That may be; I do not know; but there was a very large amount of extra work put on this bureau, which I think everyone would like to have kept up currently. Would it not be just as well to leave this out for a year and see whether there is the opportunity to reduce these places? Before the Sherwood law was passed it was perfectly patent that the Pension Office had so gotten up with its work that you could cut off most of the clerks as they went out of the service; that is, not fill the vacancies. I doubt whether we are prepared to do that now. If the Commissioner of Pensions thinks that we can not, I will make the point of order. I will ask the gentleman if the commissioner was agreeable to this provision?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When I said the matter was subject to the point of order, I had reference to another section, to which I thought the gentleman was taking exception. I hardly think this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Possibly not, under the Holman rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think, Mr. Chairman, we would better leave it in the bill. I do not think we will bring any hardship on the Pension Office.

Mr. MANN. If the committee has given personal consideration to the subject, I do not care to insist upon a personal opinion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Pensions shall, on or before July —, 1914, rearrange the Finance Division and the office of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions in the Pension Office and reorganize the forces employed therein so as to eliminate useless work and prevent duplication of labor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is subject to the point of order. That is what I thought the gentleman referred to a moment ago. It is clearly subject to a point of order. As I have already stated to the House, it is really unnecessary. I do not think there is duplication. They are giving the administrative audit under the Dockery law.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem, when absent from home and traveling on duty outside the District of Columbia, for persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said bureau, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and other necessary expenses, including telegrams, $125,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 98, after line 15, insert:

"For an additional force of five special examiners for one year at $1,300 each, $6,500; and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed, and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to qualify."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is intended to provide for the five inspectors in this service that have been provided for in the appropriation bills since the McKinley administration. The current law, I think, provides for 45 inspectors, 40 from the classified service and 5 to be appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions. These people go out and look up special cases, do special work of a high class, and are personally selected by the Commissioner of Pensions. Just one sentence from the commissioner shows the situation:

I can see how it might be an advantage for the commissioner to have an opportunity to procure people to do certain work without having them pass a civil-service examination.

These positions have been provided for during some 20 years, and are still performing the work each year. It seems to me that they ought to be retained. They are necessary and proper. Forty are selected now from clerks in the office as inspectors, but the five provided for in this particular amendment are those who can be appointed specially by the Commissioner of Pensions, so that he may send out men in the various districts. No man shall be detailed for service in the State from which he comes or in which he is a resident. They are to look after questions of fraud and impersonation and the improper handling of the pension service or the disposition of the money. I have understood that the Commissioner of Pensions has written to the chairman of the committee urging that the amendment be allowed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. MANN. The current law carries 45 special examiners?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And they are left out of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. All of them; yes.

Mr. MANN. What is to become of them?

Mr. RAKER. They are just left out entirely.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is very seldom we drop anybody in the Government entirely.

Mr. RAKER. The record I have here shows the commissioner recommended that 40 be eliminated, but that 5 be retained. They are special appointees of the commissioner. The present commissioner, Mr. Saltzgaber, has already appointed these five men and recommended——

Mr. MANN. No; he appointed the 45.

Mr. RAKER. No; the 40 were under the civil service, but the 5 were not.

Mr. MANN. How did they get in the classified service and how did the others get out? The provision of the law is precisely the same for the 45. Now, why is it that the 40 are in the classified service and the 5 are not at all?

Mr. RAKER. They have always taken them from the office, they have taken these 40 from the clerks in the office and have sent them out to do this work. That is what this report says here.

Mr. MANN. They may have been taken from clerks in the office, but they are examiners when appointed.

Mr. RAKER. Sure; that is what they are.

Mr. MANN. The law reads:

For an additional force of 45 examiners for one year, etc., and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

Mr. RAKER. Forty of those have been doing the work, and of course this will eliminate the 40 from the bill, and the commissioner believes that 40 can be taken from the office force—competent clerks—if it is necessary, but the 5 are given such territory, and no man can do his work in the territory from which he comes. He has no personal interest or knowledge of individuals, but goes out and looks up the facts and does the work specially that the commissioner desires to have done in these investigations, and the commissioner testified what it is these men do, and he ought to have the opportunity to continue these men in their places under his personal supervision and of his personal choice for the purpose of doing the kind of work which is of a high class and requires men of a good deal of stamina, courage, and ability to perform in a great many cases.

Mr. MANN. Of course these examiners have not been carried very long, I suppose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order while I ask the gentleman from South Carolina what information the committee has on this subject. Last year we provided 45 special examiners in the Pension Office for one year. We are told now that 5 are out of the classified service and 40 are within the classified service, although the provision of the law is identically the same as to all of them. Is there any necessity for continuing them?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the estimates called for 5. Forty of them were dropped. The committee in making the bill dropped them all. The testimony of the commissioner, which I suppose the gentleman from Illinois has read——

Mr. MANN. I have not read it. I do not bother myself with such things.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The commissioner was asked the question as to whether he thought the five should be continued in the service, and he said that he did not know very much about it and appeared indifferent. The committee was not impressed that the commissioner was very particular about the item, and we did not provide any special examiners at all. Since this bill has been made up and reported to the House the commissioner insists that he now sees very great necessity for the continuation of these men, which he did not know when he was before the committee.

Mr. MANN. Is this a necessity for the service or a political necessity for five appointees not in the classified service?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have a letter which I received last evening. I am sorry I did not bring it with me. He said that since he appeared before the committee he had made an investigation that convinced him that he ought to have the five men. That is the substance of the letter. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] has a copy of the letter.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor. I have a copy of the letter to which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has made reference, and it is as follows:

APRIL 10, 1914.

Hon. J. T. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: In making appropriations for the Bureau of Pensions it is earnestly recommended that the pending bill be so amended as to provide for the appointment of five special examiners in the terms of the current appropriation act. This amendment may be inserted on page 98, following line 15, as follows:

"For an additional force of five special examiners for one year, at $1,300 each, $6,500, and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified."

This is in accordance with the estimates submitted by the Interior Department. Under existing law provision is made for 45 special examiners, and 5 of this number, by authority of the civil-service regulations, may be appointed without examination. This exception was permitted because it was believed to be necessary in the conduct of the business of the Pension Office for the commissioner to appoint a few men in whom he has absolute confidence to conduct inquiries or investigations in regard to matters wherein judgment, discretion, and loyalty to the Commissioner of Pensions is required. The five men who now fill these excepted positions as special examiners are young and very competent men who have proved their worth since their appointment in December, 1913. The efficiency of the office would be lessened in a material degree if the power of the commissioner to appoint such a corps of trusted men should be abrogated by statute, and this will be especially true if the pending bill in favor of the widows of soldiers of the Spanish War and Philippine insurrection shall become a law.

When I appeared before the committee on January 22 I was asked, with reference to these five special examiners:

"Is there any particular necessity for retaining these five?"

I replied: "There is a difference of opinion about that. Personally I have no positive views on the subject. I am very indifferent about it. I can see how it might be an advantage for the commissioner to have an opportunity to procure people to do certain work without having them pass a civil-service examination." (Page 435, hearings before subcommittee.)

At that time I was not as fully advised as to the need for employing these five special examiners, nor as to the merits of the persons holding these positions, as I am now. Mature reflection and inquiry into the matter has led me to the conclusion that I ought to make this definite recommendation, that these five positions should continue to be provided for by law.

Very truly, yours,

——— ———, Commissioner.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman from Alabama in my time. Here are 45 examiners who were provided for for one year. It seems that through some Executive order or otherwise 5 of them were taken out of the classified service and made what we usually call political appointees. Now we find we can drop 40 who are in the classified service without any difficulty, but we run up against the same old difficulty about dropping anybody getting appointments outside of the classified service. Would the gentleman be embarrassed—I do not wish to embarrass him in any way at all—but may I ask him how this matter was called to his attention—by one of the appointees?

Mr. CLAYTON. I answer the gentleman frankly; yes. It does not embarrass me to tell the truth about it.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing it myself.

Mr. CLAYTON. I had it called to my attention in that way. And I have conferred with other Members on this side, and the representations of the commissioner are such that they lead me to believe this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MANN. As I understood this letter, it said that there would be a special need for these examiners if the bill passes into law providing pensions for widows of Spanish War veternas.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is one of its statements.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be just as well to see whether that bill passes into law?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is only one of the reasons given by the commissioner for the retention of these five men.

Mr. MANN. That is the only reason that I caught.

Mr. CLAYTON. And he finds that it is necessary for the correct administration of the affairs of his office to have these five men. He says that upon his official responsibility, and I hope the gentleman will not make any further objection. I understand there are employees, although I may be mistaken in this, who are similar to these, and have been occupying similar positions and have been at the command of the commissioner ever since the McKinley administration, and that this is not an unusual thing.

Mr. MANN. I understand that this is an entirely unusual thing myself.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I think it is a proper thing to do. The gentleman from Illinois knows that I rarely interfere in an appropriation bill. This is one of the times when I thought it just and proper to do so.

Mr. MANN. I sincerely hope and believe, if the gentleman is interested in one of these people, that he get a better place.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is hardly fair in making that remark. He is usually very generous and fair in his statements.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how anybody can take any exception to that. I said, "if the gentleman is interested."

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not offended, I may say, at what the gentleman has said. I am interested because the commissioner has given a good reason for the retention of these five men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order. If the gentleman wants to be heard, I will reserve it.

Mr. CLAYTON. About all I know of the matter, Mr. Chairman, is what is stated by the commissioner here in the letter which I have read to the committee. As I understand it, similar positions have been carried before, although I have not had an opportunity to examine that matter, and would not state it as a fact. But I have given my best information. I think the amendment is entirely proper, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] state the grounds for the point of order?

Mr. MANN. In the first place, there is no authority for the appointment of examiner at all, and, in the second place, there is certainly no legislative authority for saying that they shall not be employed in the State from which they are appointed. Of course, that is pure legislation. There is no authority of law for the appointment of these examiners.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] the law authorizing the appointment?

Mr. RAKER. I have not any special provision, but it has been in the act ever since the McKinley administration. I forget the exact date. It seems to me it is appropriate to be retained upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule unless the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has some statute authorizing this appropriation. [After a pause.] The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: Commissioner, $5,000; first assistant commissioner, $4,500; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $3,000; 2 law examiners, at $2,750 each; 3 examiners in chief, at $3,500 each; examiner of interferences, $2,700; examiner of trade-marks and designs, $2,700; first assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs, $2,400; 6 assistant examiners of trade-marks and designs, at $1,500 each; examiner of classification, $3,600; 43 principal examiners, at $2,700 each; examiners—63 at $2,400 each, 73 at $2,100 each, 88 at $1,800 each, 110 at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,250; librarian, $2,000; 6 chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; 3 assistant chiefs of divisions, at $1,800 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the commissioner, $1,800; translator of languages, $1,800; clerks—9 of class 4, 9 of class 3, 17 of class 2, 130 of class 1, 90 at $1,000 each; 3 skilled draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; messenger and property clerk, $1,000; 90 copyists; 50 copyists, at $720 each; 4 messengers; 25 assistant messengers; 14 laborers, at $600 each; 42 laborers, at $540 each; 40 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $1,316,890.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In line 12, page 99, is a provision for 90 copyists. What is the salary of the copyists? A thousand dollars?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Nine hundred dollars. That is where no salary is mentioned the law fixes it at $900.

Mr. FOWLER. The statute fixes it at $1,000. I have it here with me. It is a copy which is issued and furnished to the Patent Office. That is the reason I asked the question, because I thought there was a discrepancy about that and I want to get an understanding about it. The statute provides in the act creating it for 35 copyists, drawing a salary of $1,000 a year each. Now, the number has been increased until it has reached 90, and the reason I asked the question was that I might get clearly in mind whether this statute was being followed now by the Patent Office or by the authorities in carrying out this salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Section 167 of the Revised Statutes is the law fixing the compensation of copyists at $900 a year.

Mr. FOWLER. I have the Patent Office law in my hand—a pamphlet which is furnished to the Patent Office—for 1912, and I procured a copy of it in order that I might have the law that governed this bureau or division, or whatever it might be called. And here is the copy, if the gentleman desires to look at it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not account for the discrepancy. I will read to the gentleman:

The annual salary of clerks and employees in the departments, if compensation is not otherwise prescribed, shall be as follows—

And it includes "copyists and counters, $900."

Mr. FOWLER. That is, where they are not otherwise provided for by law. But here is a provision in this particular case by statute.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina? Where is the law?

Mr. FOWLER. Here it is. I have submitted it to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], and he can submit it to you. It is considered to be the law that governs the Patent Office to-day. They have it issued in pamphlet form, and a gentleman in that office has kindly supplied me with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I see the gentleman has a pamphlet in his hand that says the salary of a copyist is $1,000, but the statute says $900.

Mr. FOWLER. The statute says "where it is not otherwise provided for." I went through the law, and I marked it, putting "$1,000" above, and I see in other places it is carried at $900, and that is the reason I raised the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think we can get the gentleman straight on that. The gentleman from Georgia has called my attention to the statute. It says "copyists of drawings." That is different from "copyists" within the meaning of the law.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say that if he will refer to that paper which he has in his hand he will find it refers to page 75 of the Revised Statutes, which fixes the salary of "copyists of drawings" in the Interior Department at $1,000; and this provision in the bill does not refer to copyists of drawings.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. "Copyists of drawings" are not "copyists."

Mr. BARTLETT. It says "copyists of drawings, $1,000."

Mr. FOWLER. I think there is no question myself but that the salary is $1,000—none whatever.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman's book says "copyist of drawings."

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but it is under this Patent Office.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. And that is the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. I see on page 99 an increase in the messenger boys' salary from $360 to $420. Was that by request of the head of this department or division?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that that increase was at the request of the Patent Office.

Mr. FOWLER. It was increased in accordance with the request of somebody in authority there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. The Commissioner of Patents requested it.

Mr. FOWLER. Why did you leave out an appropriation for one skilled laborer at $1,200?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Because the commissioner did not want it.

Mr. FOWLER. I see you carry 14 laborers at $600 each.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is because the Commissioner of Patents said he needed them.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not that one way of getting rid of a statutory salary of a laboring man? Here you have some at $600 and here is a statute providing for a skilled laborer at $1,200.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there is a laborer in the gentleman's district who does no more work than is required of these positions who would not be glad to receive the amount paid them. Their work is by no means laborious, nor does it require any skill. The explanation as to why we did not provide for the skilled laborer at $1,200 is that the Commissioner of Patents did not need his services, and it would be unjust to the people of this country to provide $1,200 for a laborer when his services were not needed.

Mr. FOWLER. Then you did put in 14 laborers, without any statute at all, at the low salary of $600 a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was because the commissioner said he needed them at that rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire about the chief clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Patents. I think there is no direct provision of law for a chief clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Patents at all, but we have had heretofore a chief clerk there under this provision, "Chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner." May I ask why that qualification is left out in the language of this bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For the simple reason that the chief clerk in the Patent Office, as the committee understood, is not required in fact to have the knowledge of a principal examiner. His duties are entirely separate and apart from those of a principal examiner, and we thought there was no necessity for carrying it in the bill; that the language was mere surplusage.

Mr. MANN. The chief clerk in the Patent Office has to handle a great many communications and papers that come in which require him, if he is to be of any value at all, to have some knowledge of patents. Hence that provision was put in the law some years ago so that you would have a chief clerk there who would know something of the subject. It seems to me, if you are going to have a chief clerk in the Patent Office he should have, like the Commissioner of Patents, some knowledge of patents.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit that that is a question resting with the Commissioner of Patents. This is a civil-service position. That language would limit the Commissioner of Patents in the selection of his chief clerk. The committee thought it was unnecessary.

Mr. MANN. This is a classified position under the civil service, and with the requirement left in that the chief clerk shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner the Civil Service Commission will give one examination, but with that requirement left out they would give an entirely different examination. Otherwise the chief clerk in the Patent Office might be the same as the chief clerk in the War Department or the chief clerk in the Agricultural Department. But here was a provision that we inserted purposely some years ago, so as to require the chief clerk to have a knowledge of patents.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can only say to the gentleman that it is perfectly plain that the chief clerk is not required to have the knowledge that a principal examiner ought to possess. He attends to the correspondence of the office and looks after those details, and the committee thought that the Commissioner of Patents ought not to be restricted in choosing or selecting his chief clerk. This places no limitation on him. The other language did. Therefore we took off the limitation.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much experience the Committee on Appropriations has had with the Patent Office, but the dealings I have had with the Patent Office lead me to believe that a chief clerk ought to have some knowledge of patents, if he is at all qualified to be chief clerk in that office.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The committee left it out for the reason I have stated. The position is a civil-service position, and has to be selected from the classified service, and the committee thought it was unwise to place any limitation on the Commissioner of Patents. Of course, he can select a man with that knowledge if he wants to do so. Striking out these surplus words does not prevent it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the language on page 98, lines 17 and 18, "chief clerk, $3,000."

Mr. BARTLETT. But, Mr. Chairman, the law provides in the Patent Office for one chief clerk at a certain salary. Does the gentleman make a point of order on the salary?

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order on the place, "chief clerk, $3,000."

Mr. BARTLETT. The point of order is good on the salary.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is good on what I make it.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is good as to the salary, but there is a position of "chief clerk in the Patent Office, at $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I move to amend, Mr. Chairman, by inserting after the figures "$3,500," on line 17, page 90, the words "chief clerk, $2,500."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. It is just as objectionable as the other. The Chair sustained a point of order on the item "chief clerk, $3,000," because it did not incorporate the language that had been incorporated in the bill for a long time heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana will permit the Clerk to report the amendment, and then the Chair will hear the gentleman. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the figures "$3,500," in line 17, page 98, insert the words "chief clerk, $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the point of order on what ground?

Mr. WATKINS. On the ground that that language alone will make new law, will change existing law; that it will change the statute which has already been enacted on that same proposition, the same feature of the law, the present law reading: "Chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner, $3,000." If you leave out that qualifying language, if you do not add the language, "who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner," it would be changing the existing law. The existing law is to the effect that he shall be qualified to act as principal examiner. It is exactly the same as if there were a law——

Mr. BARTLETT. Where does the gentleman get the existing law?

Mr. WATKINS. I get the existing law from the previous act.

Mr. BARTLETT. That was an appropriation act.

Mr. WATKINS. That is the law now.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course, I need not argue to the Chair that an appropriation act which is itself a violation of the statute is not good law to carry an office permanently. I should be glad to have this salary $3,000, and we have simply offered this amendment to try to save this man's salary. The statute, as I have read it to the Chair, is—

In the Patent Office, 1 chief clerk at a salary of $2,500.

The other provision to which the gentleman refers is simply carried in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WATKINS. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there are repeated decisions to the effect that whenever an appropriation bill enacts a special feature of law, extraneous and distinct from the amount appropriated, that provision becomes law. I could cite numerous instances in which a certain proviso has been attached to an appropriation, and that restriction or qualification embedded in the law becomes the statute law of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very free to say to the gentleman from Louisiana that he would like to see some of those citations. In the consideration of this bill the Chair has been calling upon the Committee on Appropriations to furnish the law whenever a point of order has been made. In this instance they do furnish it. The statute provides for a chief clerk, at $2,500. The gentleman from Louisiana is making a point of order against that provision of the statute, because the former appropriation bill carried some other condition, which undoubtedly would be against the rules, and would be subject to a point of order if the amendment was offered in that language.

Mr. WATKINS. If the Chair will bear with me a moment, I will cite an authority. This amounts to a great deal more. It qualifies the appropriation, and says:

Who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner.

The law denominates the kind of person who shall be qualified to act as chief clerk. I raise the point of order that the amendment changes the law as to the qualifications of the chief clerk. I have not been asked to cite an authority of this kind before, but on the spur of the moment I recall the fact that in 1899 there was a river and harbor appropriation bill which enacted a provision that certain classes of material should be allowed to be taken out of the stream, and among the classes incorporated in the bill it omitted to mention logs. The courts, in passing upon that question, said that was a statute; that although there was an appropriation carried in the bill, still, being an appropriation bill, there were restrictions and limitations and conditions in it to be complied with, which became the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The Chair calls the gentleman's attention to the fact that the rule applying to river and harbor appropriations is entirely different from that applying to any other appropriation bill passed by the House. That is new law entirely. As the Chair understands it, the rule is that an appropriation must be in accordance with the statute and not in accordance with an appropriation bill, where the previous appropriation bill conflicts with statute law. The statute in this instance authorizes a chief clerk at $2,500. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WATKINS. I move to substitute $3,000 for $2,500, and to add the words of the previous appropriation law—

Who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 98, line 17, after the figures "$3,500," insert: "Chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner, $3,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. WATKINS. I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee wants to make the point of order against the amendment which adds to it, but is willing that the amendment should stand at $3,000.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, this is in conformity with the law already in existence and is in the exact verbiage. The current law says "chief clerk, at $3,000, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner." It seems to me that the disposition of all parties is to allow this chief clerk at $3,000, but the commissioner wants a man qualified to perform the duties of the office. If we made an appropriation for an Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, we would say an Attorney General who had a license to practice law or who was a man who had had experience in the law. If we were appropriating for a Surgeon General, we would say for a man qualified as a physician or a practitioner of medicine, something to show the qualifications. This is what the Commissioner of Patents says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 4, 1914.

Hon. J. T. WATKINS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The chief clerk, Mr. Woolard, has just reported to me the substance of his conversation with you this morning in reference to the legislative appropriation bill, H. R. 15279.

In the reported bill the omission of the qualification of the chief clerk, which has been carried in the appropriation acts for several years, is a matter of some concern to me. I do not know how the change came about. It is very desirable that the chief clerk of the Patent Office possess technical knowledge equal to that of the higher grade examiners. Without such qualification the chief clerk will not be able to handle the vast mass of technical correspondence coming into the office, which otherwise would engage the attention of the commissioner and the assistant commissioners. It is also necessary that the chief clerk be well versed in patent law and the practice of the Patent Office, in order that inventors and attorneys who seek information may be correctly advised. From two to three hundred persons call at the chief clerk's room every day, and many of these inquiries are in relation to conditions existing in pending applications for patent. The chief clerk should be qualified to understand all questions arising in these cases and be able to fully advise the applicants accordingly.

Were the chief clerk not so qualified, it would be necessary to refer these inquiring inventors to the examining divisions in which their cases are lodged, and this would cause such interruptions as would be positively detrimental to the service.

It is distinctly in the interest of good administration to continue in the appropriation acts the provision that the chief clerk of the Patent Office shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner, and I beg you to accept my thanks for your kind offer to look after the matter.

Yours, very truly,

THOMAS EWING,
Commissioner of Patents.

This is a letter from the Commissioner of Patents who has recently been appointed and who wants a chief clerk who is qualified for the duties of that office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair's attention has been called to the fact that there is no statute authorizing a clerk at $3,000 under any condition. Therefore the point of order against the amendment is well taken. The provision in the last appropriation act carrying $3,000 does not make it a permanent statute. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the words "who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against that.

Mr. MADDEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] made a point of order against the proposal to appropriate $2,500 for a chief clerk. The Chair, I notice, in ruling rules on the point of order made by my colleague on the $3,000 proposition, but has taken no cognizance of the point of order made by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a point of order against the provision as it stands in the bill, and the Chair sustained the point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee offered an amendment to make it $2,500. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] made a point of order against that amendment, and the Chair overruled the point of order. Then the gentleman from Louisiana offered an amendment making it $3,000, with certain conditions, to which amendment the gentleman from Tennessee made a point of order, and the Chair sustained it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, going over the appropriations, I believe it has always been the policy of the committee, if they have any, to give that language which the head of the great department requests, unless it appears that there is some good reason why the language should not be used. For a number of years the chief clerk of the Patent Office has received $3,000 a year, and the appropriations carried the provision that he should have the qualifications of a principal examiner. There was very good reason why that language was placed in former appropriation bills. I do not recall of any officer or person offering a single suggestion why this language should be stricken out. The Commissioner of Patents appeared before the subcommittee and he gave testimony upon this very subject. I read from the hearings:

Mr. BYRNS. Does the chief clerk perform any of the duties of examiner?

Mr. EWING. He takes charge of a very large amount of correspondence which would have to go to the examining divisions for answer if he were not familiar with the practice of the office.

Mr. BYRNS. The reason I ask that question——

Mr. EWING (interposing). That is the reason that is in there.

Mr. BYRNS. I notice he is carried in this bill, and probably has been carried in the law for several years, as "chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner."

Mr. EWING. Yes; the reason being that he ought to know as much about the practice of the office as a principal examiner. It is necessary that he be able to answer the letters that come in and answer them intelligently.

Now, in addition to that I understand that if an application relating to an improvement in agricultural machinery comes to the office it is sent to the examiner who knows about that subject. If it has relation to chemistry, it is sent to an examiner who knows something about that subject; but when letters come in regard to appeals or something of that kind, they go to the principal examiner or the chief clerk, and if he can perform the duties at all he must have the qualifications to act as a principal examiner. There is not a word in all of these hearings that shows this language should be stricken out. I want to ask, in the name of good and efficient service in that department, one of the departments of the Government that is paying its own way, why we should interfere with the work of the Commissioner of Patents by not giving him the language that he wants in order that he may perform under this administration the duties of that office, just as in former years the commissioner had a chief clerk who could perform the duties that devolved upon him. The duty devolving upon the office of the chief clerk is to know in regard to the examination of applications for patents and things of that kind. It seems to me we are striking right at the good of the service. I do not know what it is all about. I would like to have some one point out to me where there is a word in these hearings where any officer of the Government asks that these words that give to the Commissioner of Patents an efficient service should be stricken out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal interest in this matter. It is a matter of no personal concern to me. I have had reasons given as to why this language was inserted in the beginning and why it has been maintained for years, but I am not going to undertake to repeat those statements at this time. I can only say that as a matter of fact the exclusion of these words does not deprive the Patent Commissioner of the right that he now has. If he wants a chief clerk who is qualified to perform the duties of a principal examiner he can get him, and get him under the civil service, without the necessity of these words. These words simply place a limitation upon the commissioner in the selection of his chief clerk, which, in my judgment, should not exist.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The truth is it places the commissioner in the position he does not want to be placed in, so that a Member of the House of Representatives or a Senator can say, "Here is a man for that place, take him"; and the commissioner can not answer that the man has not the qualifications to act as an examiner, because you will have stricken those words from the appropriation. That is the position in which it places the commissioner.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no. This position is under the civil service. It is not a place without the civil service, and no Senator or Representative can go down there and undertake to have his political adherent put in the place. It is strictly under the civil service. I want to say to the gentleman, so far as I am concerned, I have no one whom I want to see made chief clerk. I do not know any one in the Patent Office who is or could be an applicant for that position.

Mr. GOOD. Even if it is under the civil service, if this provision is stricken out it enlarges the opportunity for Members to go and urge that some particular person who is on the classified list be appointed chief clerk, even though he has not the qualifications to perform the duties of that office.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the Patent Commissioner is a man who knows the duties required of this office to an eminent degree, and I believe he is a man who would not appoint as chief clerk one who was not capable of performing those duties. I believe these words ought to be removed and the commissioner left free to select a man from the classified list, without being required to select any particular man who may now be qualified as a principal examiner to the exclusion of all others in the service.

I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$1,316,890" and substitute "$1,316,390," in line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 99, line 15, strike out the figures "$1,316,890" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,316,390."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of rural education and industrial education, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and no salary shall be paid hereunder in excess of $3,500 per annum, $30,000.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to find out why the committee did not give this department the amount the Bureau of Education asked for. The Bureau of Education asked for $50,000 for investigation of industrial and rural education, and as that is one of the most important sections of this bill it seems to me it should not be passed over lightly. I will ask the chairman to give the reason why they did not allow this increase?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I will say that for the investigation of rural education and industrial education and school hygiene we gave the commissioner an increase of 100 per cent over the current appropriation. We did not give the commissioner all that he asked for, because the Commissioner of Education, like many other gentlemen at the head of Government bureaus, is an enthusiast on this subject. He is very much interested——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does not the gentleman think the Commissioner of Education should enthuse over rural and industrial education, and does not the gentleman think that this House should enthuse over it also?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have given an increase of 100 per cent.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Fifty thousand dollars for rural education and industrial education, it seems to me, is a very small amount.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, Mr. Chairman, if we make all the appropriations we are called upon to make, we will bankrupt the Government.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I think both the gentlemen will recall the fact that we have just passed a bill for industrial education—for an investigation and report to Congress on the subject of industrial education.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Senate passed it and sent over the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That bill is the law.

Mr. MANN. We passed the Senate bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, in view of this explanation and statement and the apparent opposition to the increase, I will not insist on a vote on the amendment to increase this amount to $50,000 at this time, but I hope to bring it up at a later date if funds are not provided for this purpose in the bill referred to by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: Superintendent, $6,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief electrical engineer, $3,000; civil engineer, $2,400; 2 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; compensation to disbursing clerk, $1,000; messenger; person in charge of the heating of the Supreme Court and central portion of the Capitol, $1,000; laborer in charge of water-closets in central portion of the Capitol, $660; 7 laborers for cleaning the Rotunda, corridors, Dome, and old library portion of Capitol, at $660 each; 2 laborers in charge of public closets of the House of Representatives and in the terrace, at $720 each; bookkeeper and accountant, $2,200; in all, $29,960.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of securing some information. I would like to ask the committee why it is we have here $660 for laborers in the Capitol corridors and only $600 for laborers in the Patent Office? What is the difference?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. As the gentleman knows, there are different kinds of labor. Some of it is skilled and some is unskilled. The committee has no personal knowledge of the laborers who are provided for. The heads of departments come before us and ask for so many laborers at $720 and so many at $660 and so many at $600, and we supply them.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman know what is the duty of those two different positions—the Patent Office and the Capitol here—that makes this difference of $60 a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In the Patent Office they handle papers.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes. What do they do at the Capitol?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In some places they scrub floors, and that is what they do in the Capitol. Besides, they have no fixed hours in the Capitol. They remain until we adjourn, and then clean up the building, no matter what the hour.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery, including tags, labels, index cards, cloth-lined wrappers, and specimen bags, printed in the course of manufacture, and such printed envelopes as are not supplied under contracts made by the Postmaster General, for the department and its several bureaus and offices, including not to exceed $6,500 for the Civil Service Commission, $81,000; and, in addition thereto, sums amounting to $27,650 shall be deducted from other appropriations made for the fiscal year 1915, as follows: Surveying public lands, $1,000; protecting public lands and timber, $2,000; contingent expenses of offices of surveyors general, $2,000; Capitol Building and repairs, $150; Geological Survey, $2,100; Bureau of Mines, $1,500; Indian warehouses, $500; Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, $1,000; Indian schools, $17,000; Freedmen's Hospital, $400; and said sums so deducted shall be credited to and constitute, together with the first-named sum of $80,000, the total appropriation for stationery for the department and its several bureaus and offices for the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think the amount on page 103, line 17, should be $81,000 instead of $80,000. It refers to the sum in line 6, which was $80,000 last year and has now been increased to $81,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me this is a misprint.

Mr. MANN. I do not care what you call it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will verify the figures.

Mr. MANN. I just suggest the gentleman offer an amendment so as to correct it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. I suggest it to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What are the correct figures?

Mr. MANN. It should be $81,000, the same as it is in line 6, as it refers to the same sum as in line 6.

Mr. BARTLETT. If $81,000 is the correct amount, it ought to be $81,000 here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 17, page 103, to insert "$81,000" where it is "$80,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 17, strike out "$80,000" and insert "$81,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no expenses chargeable to the foregoing appropriations for clerk hire and incidental expenses in the offices of the surveyors general shall be incurred by the respective surveyors general in the conduct of said offices, except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. I move to strike out all of page 104, beginning with line 18, all of 105, all of 106, down to and including line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning with line 18, page 104, strike out down to and including line 7, on page 106, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For salary of surveyor general and ex officio secretary of the Territory of Alaska, at $4,000 per annum, $4,000; for salaries of surveyors general of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, at $3,000 per annum each, $33,000; for salary of surveyor general of South Dakota, at $2,000 per annum, $2,000; for salaries of clerks in the offices of the surveyors general, $185,400; contingent expenses, offices surveyors general, $20,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my amendment does not change the amount carried in the bill. It simply consolidates the appropriations for clerks in the 13 surveyors general offices and the appropriations for contingent expenses, leaving the amount as it is carried in the bill. This change is recommended by the officials of the Department of the Interior having these matters in charge. I think the change should be made. It has been apparent for a number of years past that appropriating separately for the clerks in each one of these 13 offices and for contingent expenses in each one of the offices was not economical and in the best interests of the public service. The trouble is that with this division of clerk hire and contingent expenses into 13 different items there is a temptation on the part of a surveyor general to use all of his contingent fund for fear if he does not do that he is likely to have a less amount next year. There is a temptation on the part of the surveyor general to keep all of the clerks that can be employed within the sum appropriated for his office, whether their services are entirely necessary or not. Let me call the committee's attention to this fact—and I note the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is giving attention to it—that we have 102 local land offices, and we place the contingent expenses and the clerk hire for those offices in a lump sum. The same reasons that control in that should control with the surveyors general offices. In the year 1913, of these two funds, clerk hire and contingent expenses, $23,000 were returned to the Treasury owing to the fact that in some of these offices it was impossible for them to use the amount of money which the bill allowed them. And yet in some of the offices the work was so heavy that, in the case of the Utah office, for instance, it is now 20 months in arrears. In a number of these surveyors general offices the work is in arrears from 6 to 12 months, and they can not catch up with it so long as we give them this fixed sum for clerk hire, whereas other offices, where work is not so great, could get along with considerably less. There is not any doubt in my mind but that there could be a saving and would be a saving of from $10,000 to $15,000 of we followed this consolidation of these estimates.

And let me call the committee's attention to this fact: There was a time when the surveyors general could reasonably estimate the amount of clerk hire and the amount of contingent expenses in their offices, because there was a time when, upon their recommendations, the apportionment for surveys was made. That was the time when they contracted for the surveys. They knew how much they were asking for as their part of the apportionment. They generally got it. They knew then how many surveys would be executed in their district; they knew how many clerks they would need and how much of contingent expenses they would need, approximately, to take care of that amount of surveys. But when we adopted the new system of surveys a couple of years ago we took from the surveyors general——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. We took from the surveyor generals the control over the amount of surveys in their district, and the Secretary lodged that, under his regulations, with the surveying division of the General Land Office. Now a surveyor general when he makes up his estimate for clerk hire and for contingent expenses has no means of determining how much surveying will be done in his district. He therefore does not know accurately how much he will need in the way of clerk hire. The result is that we go on giving these offices about the same amount for clerks that we did years ago, with the result that, whereas a year ago the office in the State of Washington did not use the amount appropriated for that office by $6,000, the Utah office ran behind, until it is nearly two years behind with its work.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am inclined to be for this amendment, but I would like to ask how this change of method of appropriating the money is going to expedite the business? I have not found that out yet.

Mr. MONDELL. In this way, if the gentleman will allow me. For instance, for the surveyor general's office in Utah we have granted in this appropriation, segregated as it is, the same amount as last year. On that amount they can not possibly catch up with their work, but if this was a lump-sum appropriation the commissioner when he found the work was getting slack out in Washington or elsewhere could take one clerk or two clerks or three clerks from the offices where work was slack and send them to the points where they were needed. As it is they are bound hard and fast by the apportionments we make in this legislative bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Would not the gentleman's purpose be subserved as well by making a proviso to that item providing that the commissioner should, if necessary, use clerks in one place or another?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; if the gentleman wanted to do it in that cumbersome way. It would be exceedingly cumbersome to divide it up into 13 different appropriations and then say that it could be used as a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman says they want to use clerks?

Mr. MONDELL. We got into the habit of dividing these sums up years ago, when the surveyors general were very jealous of their prerogative, when they absolutely controlled things with regard to surveys, when they knew what areas of surveys would be executed in their districts in a year, under those circumstances we segregated these items. There was not the best of reasons for doing it then, but by reason of changing the method of surveys there is no good reason for it now at all. It is a cumbersome and unbusinesslike way of doing the public business. The department has asked for no increase. They have called our attention to the reasons, and the reasons are as clear as day, for the changes in the form of the appropriations.

Settlers on the public lands in Utah must wait 20 months now from the time the returns of the surveys reach the surveyor general's office before they are taken up, and it takes from 3 to 6 months after they are taken up before they can be disposed of. That is 2½ years from the time a survey is made before settlers can file upon the land. There is no reason why that condition should exist. We can cure it without increasing the appropriation a penny by simply providing that these funds can be used where the Secretary of the Interior finds that they are needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think, on the information before the committee, we had better not reverse a long-established practice in the Land Office in regard to these appropriations. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is time we were going home, and I suggest that there is no quorum present. It is Saturday evening, the evening before Easter Sunday, and everybody wants to celebrate. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HAY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill H. R. 10235, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] asks unanimous consent that the bill which he has described be referred to the Committee on Printing——

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the right to object. What is this bill?

Mr. HAYES. It is the bill (H. R. 10235) making appropriations for the printing and publishing of maps and reports relating to the kelp beds on the Pacific coast.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object for the present. I want to look at the bill to see what it is.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will look at the bill, and it can come up at another time.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but this morning the same sort of a bill, which had been referred to the Committee on Agriculture at the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] was transferred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAYES. It is the same bill, but a mistake was made. It was originally referred to the Committee on Agriculture, where it does not belong.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It can go over until Monday. I will look at the bill. I just want to know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GORDON, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. VOLLMER, for one week, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, on exempting labor unions from the Sherman Antitrust Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. When was it delivered? Is it a recent address?

Mr. MURDOCK. It is not an address. It is a communication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 13, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 13, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast begotten us unto a lively hope by the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead. Thou hast called us to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that passeth not away. We pray for hearts responsive to the message of this blessed season. Through the ministry of the awakening springtime may we turn our hearts toward Thee as the flowers open their petals to the sun. Thou dost speak to us words of hope and cheer and life that out of the ministry of this season we may go forth making larger plans—plans for eternity. May we know the power of an endless life. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

R. 13765) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] will to-day address the Senate upon the financial condition of the railroads of the United States, I feel justified in directing the attention of the Senate to some recent correspondence from Mr. W. S. McCarthy, who is the secretary of the traffic bureau of Salt Lake City, bearing directly upon that subject, but more particularly upon a feature of Union Pacific finance which, if true, is of the very greatest importance. The first letter is dated the 1st of April. I will read it:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, April 1, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed newspaper clippings attracted my attention to a phase of Union Pacific affairs which seems to have entirely escaped notice. If my premise is correct, this matter is of such vast importance, particularly to the West, as to require thorough investigation and the application of a remedy, forever putting a stop to such practices.

As I understand, the Union Pacific Railroad Co. is about to distribute to its holders of common stock as a dividend the proceeds of a bond issue.

In 1901, immediately following legislation in this State legalizing such action, the Union Pacific Railroad Co. issued bonds for $100,000,000, to be used for the purchase of Southern Pacific. (See Mr. Harriman's testimony in case No. 993, in equity, vol. 2, p. 741.)

Within the past year, by reason of the decision in that case, the Union Pacific Railroad Co. was required by the Government to dispose of its holdings in Southern Pacific, through sale of which it again came into possession of a large part of the fund created by the $100,000,000 bond issue.

With the consent, as I understand, of the Department of Justice, this fund was then invested in Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. stock which, it appears, it is now proposed to distribute, with the addition of some cash, as a dividend to holders of Union Pacific common.

Apparently the Department of Justice did not look beyond the sale of Southern Pacific to ascertain the origin of the money invested in that property by Union Pacific.

My information as to that statement—and I receive it direct from the department—is that they did look beyond it and determined that they were not legally able or authorized to interfere with or direct the disposition of that fund.

The fact that the bonds, which are subject to call in whole or in part at 102½, were not retired when the fund which they created was recovered through the sale of Southern Pacific indicates no present intention on the part of the Union Pacific to retire them. Up to December, 1906, $12,741,000 of these bonds had been converted into common stock, the authorized issue of which was increased $100,000,000 to provide for their conversion.

Trans-Missouri lines have filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, effective April 1, 1914, a tariff advancing rates to Utah from 5 to 20 per cent.

This advance, Mr. President, will affect my State quite as seriously as it will our neighboring State of Utah.

In the interview quoted in the newspaper article herewith inclosed Mr. B. L. Winchell, director of traffic of the Union Pacific system, defends this increase as necessary because of interest on bonds which his company has to meet.

It has been asserted by Union Pacific officials that the 10 per cent return which their common stock has been paying is not unreasonable; therefore, if they are to maintain rates on a basis which will give them this return and the bond issue is permitted to run for 50 years, which does not now seem at all unlikely, the people in the territory through which the Union Pacific system operates and where there is no potential competition to assist in holding its rates at a reasonable level will be required to carry the financial burden which the following figures show:

Original bond issue	$100,000,000
Less amount converted to common stock	12,741,000
	87,259,000
Interest on $87,259,000 at 4 per cent	3,490,360
Dividends on $12,741,000 common stock at 10 per cent	1,274,100
Annual charge	4,764,460

Or a total payment in 50 years of $238,223,000, with the principal $100,000,000 still due.

It seems to me that we should not permit this condition to be fastened upon us without protest, and thus for ourselves and our posterity assume an obligation of over $300,000,000.

I feel that, provided it is not already too late and there is any way to do so, immediate action should be taken to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to now retire the bonds issued for a purpose which the Supreme Court has since declared illegal, instead of passing the money along to the pockets of their holders as a dividend.

I am bringing this matter to the attention of yourself and a number of other Senators and Congressmen, whose names, for reasons which I deem sufficient, have been carefully selected, for the purpose of having the Department of Justice directed in the proper manner to take immediate action in the premises before this distribution is fully accomplished, requiring the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to use the fund now in hand to retire the issue of bonds which originally created it.

If such a thing as justice exists, there certainly must be some way to thwart the avarice of this corporation and prevent the imposition of this burden of debt upon present and future generations.

It is my belief that no Member of the Congress of the United States can willingly permit such wrongs as this to be inflicted upon the people of the country; that, realizing the importance of the situation, you will adopt such prompt, vigorous measures as may be necessary.

I shall much appreciate an acknowledgment of this letter advising me of your action.

Very respectfully, W. S. MCCARTHY.

To this letter there are some appendixes, some clippings, which I will ask to have printed with the letter, but which I shall not at present read.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WARRANTS ARE SENT TO STOCKHOLDERS—UNION PACIFIC MAKES ARRANGEMENTS FOR PAYING THE EXTRA DIVIDEND DECLARED MARCH 2.

BOSTON, March 12.

The Union Pacific Railroad Co. has sent to all common-stock holders a warrant which is to represent the extra dividend composed of cash, Baltimore & Ohio common stock and Baltimore & Ohio preferred stock, declared by the directors to holders of record March 2.

In order to preserve the equity of everyone the stock does not sell ex this dividend. The books are closed, and the committee on security of the stock exchanges have ruled that it will not sell ex-dividend until further notice, which means that it will not be ex-dividend until after the lawsuits are officially settled. The committee on securities of the exchange has ruled that pending settlement of the lawsuits the dividend warrants must accompany all certificates of stock. Anyone who has stock on the exchange at this time is also selling the dividend warrants, as the quotation on the exchange includes both.

EQUITABLE TO ATTACK UNION PACIFIC PLAN.

NEW YORK, February 26.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society, it was authoritatively learned to-day, will institute legal action to restrain the Union Pacific Railroad Co. from distributing its holdings of Baltimore & Ohio stock and a cash dividend of $3 to holders of Union Pacific common. Such a disbursement plan was recently announced. The Equitable holds $1,618,000 par value of Union Pacific preferred.

WINCHELL GIVES PLAN TO REDUCE FREIGHT RATES—TRAFFIC DIRECTOR OF UNION PACIFIC SAYS CITIES MUST AGREE.

Jobbing centers and cities west of the Missouri River will have to form themselves into an organization and representatives from each of them must go into conference and decide upon what will be the freight rates from eastern and coast points and then present the rates made to the railroads for their sanction, according to B. L. Winchell, traffic director of the Union Pacific system, who arrived in Salt Lake yesterday. He referred to the fights being waged before the Interstate Commerce Commission by the various commercial clubs and traffic bureaus in the West as "one town pulling the blanket off another and the other town attempting to get the bedclothes back." Mr. Winchell takes the position that the cities and towns affected by freight-rate increases and decreases west of the Missouri River should decide the matter of territory for themselves and not bring the railroads of the country into the wrangle.

Mr. Winchell said he did not care to discuss the proposed increase in freight rates from Missouri River points to Salt Lake and Utah common points, as he thought a discussion of the matter might lead into the elementary principles of making freight rates, which would consume much time. He did take the position, however, that the freight rates upon commodities to any point did not affect the selling price. As an example he cited that Missouri orchardists refused to sell their apples for 25 cents a barrel last season, and that the freight rate upon a barrel of apples to Chicago is only 30 cents, yet the retail price of apples in Chicago was 55 cents a peck. He attributed the high prices to commission men and to conditions of the trade. He defended the proposed increase of freight rates according to the tariffs which have been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission on the ground that the Union Pacific system had fixed charges, such as interest upon bond issues and other matters, that, although it has one of the lowest operating expenses in the country; it must have more money in order to make betterments and pay a reasonable return upon the money invested.

GOING TO COAST.

Mr. Winchell is on his way to Los Angeles to look after matters in connection with the traffic of the Union Pacific system. He is the highest paid traffic director in the world, receiving $50,000 a year for his services, and is considered to be one of the greatest traffic experts in the world. While he fought away from questions directed at the basis of freight rates, and especially upon the higher cost of transportation of westbound shipments of scoured wool compared with clothing, yet he talked freely of matters affecting freight tariffs into jobbing centers west of the Missouri River.

"Every city on the trans-Missouri lines has been asking for freight-rate reduction," said Mr. Winchell. "In Denver they are asking that the rates be reduced from Denver to Idaho points, as they consider Idaho Denver's territory. Salt Lake considers Idaho its territory, and there is Boise to contend with, so you see that a traffic man has his troubles. The only thing for Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake, and other centers in the West to do in the matter of freight rates is to have committees from their different commercial organizations to meet and define the jobbing territories of the various cities. These committees should decide what would be a reasonable freight rate to these various points and then put the matter up to the railroads. As it is one town is pulling the blanket off another and the other fellow is trying to get back the bedclothes.

"By that I mean that if Salt Lake receives a reduction in freight rates, that Denver wants a reduction, too. It is the same all over the country. Let the towns decide the matter for themselves, and it will save thousands of dollars to the railroads every year.

"I see that one argument which is being put up for lowering of freight rates, especially upon the Union Pacific lines, is that the Union Pacific system's operating expenses are only 50 per cent of the gross income. In other words, 50 per cent of all the money it receives is known as net income. When Mr. Harriman took charge of the Union Pacific it was a road which was not paying. He dumped wagonloads of money into the property. Roadbeds were reconstructed, grades were eliminated, motive power was supplied, and new equipment purchased. It took millions of dollars to bring the Union Pacific to the point where it could handle the traffic and be a paying road. While it has a net income of 50 per cent of the gross earnings, yet there is a large amount of money which must be paid out each year for interest on bonds. All of the 50 per cent is not profit. We have built up a surplus, and that surplus is what is running these fine fast passenger trains through this western country.

NET INCOME HIGH.

"It is true that the net income of the Union Pacific is greater than the net income of the Pennsylvania. The operating expenses on the Pennsylvania are 71 per cent of the gross income. This is caused by short hauls and many terminals. In the West we have long hauls and few terminals, but the cost of construction of the lines, the amount of money necessary to equip the road, and every other consideration costs much higher. We are making betterments every day, and these cost money.

"It is a hard matter to please all. The greatest trouble that we experience is that there are so many rate experts in this country who do not know what they are talking about. More traffic men have grown up since the fight on rates began who do not understand the conditions than can be counted. Owing to misstatements and other matters, the public has been led to believe that the railroads of the United States are trying to rob them. I can not see where the consumer benefits by a reduction of freight rates. In Georgia the rate upon wool blankets shipped from New York was reduced 25 cents a hundred pounds. Immediately upon the rate going into effect the price of blankets went up. Nothing other than the supply and demand regulates the price of commodities and freight rates do not affect it.

"As to general business conditions, they have not been what they should, but we hope for the best. We should talk with optimism and look upon the bright side, as the pessimistic view of conditions will not help matters any, and in all probability would cause business to be worse. We hope for the best and will do all we can to make times good."

Mr. Winchell is accompanied by Mrs. Winchell, who knows something about the making of rates, in addition to the knowledge possessed by her husband. Mrs. Winchell can tell the freight rates upon commodities to Chicago, and takes the position that the rates have nothing whatever to do with the high cost of living. The party left for Los Angeles on the Overland express.

Mr. THOMAS. Upon its receipt I communicated with the Department of Justice, and was informed that the amount realized from the Union Pacific from the sale of its stock in the Southern Pacific in excess of the amount of the Southern Pacific stock exchanged for Baltimore & Ohio stock amounted to a par value of $88,357,600, and that the Union Pacific Co. must have realized from the sale thereof somewhere in the neighborhood of $70,000,000.

On the 4th day of April Mr. McCarthy wrote me an additional letter, which I will also read:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, April 4, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Supplementing my letter of the 2d and referring to the attached article concerning the denial of the petition of the Equitable Life Insurance Society for an injunction to restrain the Union Pacific Railroad Co. from making the distribution regarding which I wrote you, here, again, the origin of the fund in question appears to have been entirely overlooked. It is referred to by the supreme court justice as "accumulated surplus or profits," instead of as the proceeds of a bond issue, which it actually is.

Please particularly note that about the time these bonds were issued there was also authorized an issue of $100,000,000 in common stock to provide for their conversion.

The privilege of conversion at par expired May 1, 1906, but what is there to prevent a corporation which juggles its finances in the manner now under consideration from reinstating the conversion privilege at their pleasure. Consider that were they to now so arrange, the interest rate on the total amount would immediately jump to the 10 per cent they claim the right to earn on common stock, and the total amount of the obligation at the end of the 50-year period instead of being $238,000,000 would be something like $400,000,000, with the principal of $100,000,000 still due.

When railroad companies which have hitherto been regarded as highly respectable and honorable are discovered manipulating financial affairs in this manner, it seems time that a thorough analysis of the financial transactions of every railroad in the country be made to ascertain their actual conditions, so that when, as at the present time, carriers bring to bear upon conscientious public officials the pressure of perverted public sentiment in the effort to club them into submission and compel acquiescence to their demands reliable data may be at hand for the public information.

Very respectfully,

W. S. MCCARTHY.

I also append a clipping which accompanies this letter:

UNION PACIFIC MAY CUT THE BIG MELON—EQUITABLE COMPANY LOSES ITS SUIT TO PREVENT DISTRIBUTION OF MANY MILLIONS.

NEW YORK, April 2.

Supreme Court Justice Greenbaum to-day denied the petition of the Equitable Life Assurance Society for an injunction to restrain the Union Pacific Railroad Co. from distributing, as a special dividend to holders of common stock, $80,000,000 in cash and stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

The Equitable sued to restrain the railroad on the ground that the holders of preferred stock in the Union Pacific were entitled to share in the dividend or else have the $80,000,000 regarded as an asset and held by the road. The Baltimore & Ohio stock was acquired by the Union Pacific from the Pennsylvania Railroad in a deal whereby the Union Pacific released its Southern Pacific holdings, as required by the Supreme Court decree dissolving the Harriman system.

It is understood that the Equitable will appeal from to-day's decision. In his decision Justice Greenbaum said:

"If the defendant corporation has the right to accumulate a surplus, it has the right to invest that surplus in securities, and if those securities appreciate in value there is no reason why the profits should not be regarded as profits of the business of the corporation.

"The agreement, however, reads that the preferred stock is entitled to no other or further share of profits than dividends in each and every fiscal year not exceeding 4 per cent a year, payable out of net profits. The preferred stockholders have regularly received a 4 per cent annual dividend.

"To hold now, because of the unusually large or extraordinary dividend is declared from accumulated surplus or profits, that the preferred stockholders are entitled to participate therein would be to nullify and override the existing contract between the two classes of shareholders."

Mr. President, it is perhaps within our common recollection that about the year 1901 the Union Pacific Railroad was authorized by the Legislature of the State of Utah, under whose laws it was incorporated, to issue $100,000,000 in bonds in addition to the bonds already carried by that corporation, the avowed object of which was to secure control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. The bonds were issued and sold and the money was used for that purpose. Afterwards and up to the time of the judicial dissolution of that combination the Union Pacific Railroad Co. was in control of the Southern Pacific system through the ownership of a majority or at least a controlling interest in its stock.

Now, the Supreme Court of the United States last year declared that this acquisition by the Union Pacific of the control of the Southern Pacific was in violation of the laws and decreed its dissolution; in other words, that the bond issue was made for illegal purposes, not tolerated or justified by law, and therefore without legal force or effect. Consequently the merger was dissolved and the Union Pacific was required to sell or otherwise dispose of its shares of stock in the Southern Pacific. In doing that it has realized a sum of over $70,000,000 in cash plus a very large proportion of the stock of the Baltimore & Ohio in exchange of Southern Pacific stock with the Pennsylvania Co. for its interest in that corporation.

It would appear from this correspondence that instead of using the money thus realized from the sale of its interest in the Southern Pacific for the retirement of the bonds, the sale of which enabled it to obtain the money in the first place, it proposes to divide it as a dividend among the holders of its common stock, leaving this huge obligation of $100,000,000 unlawfully created as a permanent and perpetual burden upon the patrons of the railroad who are to be taxed in order to pay the annual interest and ultimately its principal amount, with no addition to the assets of the road as the equivalent of that sum or any part of it.

If these letters state the facts correctly, they constitute a stupendous injustice, perhaps the worst which in all the various stages of railway manipulation of stocks and bonds has yet disfigured the history of American transportation lines. Money raised upon bonds needed and justified for a specific purpose, and that purpose afterwards declared unlawful, is now to be used for the purpose of paying an enormous dividend to the owners of common stock, the total of which is the equivalent of $100,000,000, represented by a debt of the same amount for which the company receives no consideration.

Hence, Mr. President, I think it is something to which the attention of the country generally and the attention of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of this body should be specifically directed in order that its consummation may be prevented, if possible, because just as sure as this money is paid just so sure will this bond issue remain a permanent burden, and it will be utilized hereafter, as it is now, as an excuse for demanding an increase in the rates of traffic to the patrons of the road to obtain money to meet fixed charges, the continuation of which can neither be palliated nor excused.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator has made an allusion to the Interstate Commerce Committee with reference to this matter. I wish to say that I have written to the Attorney General, inclosing a similar communication which I received upon this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. I know that a number of Senators—the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], for example—have received similar letters.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I also received a copy of the letter which he has read, and I took the question up with the Attorney General. This morning I am in receipt of a letter from the Acting Attorney General in which he states that, so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, they can do nothing in the matter whatever; and it was virtually intimated to me the other day that the only action that could be taken in the matter was to begin a suit in the courts of Utah, as the Union Pacific Railroad Co. was organized under the laws of that State.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, such was the information which was communicated to me in a direct interview with the assistant to the Attorney General, except that nothing was said as to the institution of an action in the State of Utah.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it may be observed that I have given notice of my desire to speak this morning; and, while I am very glad to have the statement of the Senator from Colorado, because it furnishes an admirable introduction to what I am about to say, I hope it will not lead to any general debate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall only make one or two observations and then take my seat.

I want to impress upon the Senate the fact that, while this, if true, is perhaps the most indefensible, it is not the only instance of the increase of the capitalization of the railroads not for the public benefit or for the improvement or extension of their lines, but for consolidation or dividend or speculative purpose.

Mr. President, before taking my seat I merely want to advert to the recent action of some of the other railroads in discontinuing trains and laying off their men to the extent of 40,000 in number. If Mr. McCarthy's charges are true, the railways must not complain if the public lend a willing ear to the charge that they are depriving 40,000 families of bread, for how long we know not, merely as a feature of their general purpose to utilize their tremendous power to create a public sentiment, and, at the same time, a condition, both of which shall bear upon the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission and force it to grant their demands and tax the American people through an unneeded and undeserved increase in the rates of transportation, which, once granted, will be asserted as a necessity to the roads and their requirements for all future time. I do not assert this as a fact, but the public are suspicious, and justly so, when people reflect upon such instances of railway finance as the Union Pacific Co. is now supplying them.

NATIONAL PEACE CELEBRATION AT VICKSBURG, MISS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the governor of Mississippi, which will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The letter is as follows:

MISSISSIPPI EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Jackson, April 8, 1914.

By authority of the State legislature, Mississippi proposes to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary year of the return of peace to our beloved country by a general reunion of veterans.

Now, therefore, as a condition precedent to extending an official and most cordial invitation to all veterans of the Civil War, Union and Confederate, to attend and participate in the ceremonies and exercises of the State's proposed national peace celebration and reunion, to be held on the Vicksburg battle field in October, 1915, I, Earl Brewer, governor, do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to appropriate a sum sufficient in amount to provide, in a camp on the Vicksburg National Military Park, all needed comforts and conveniences for the veterans who then and there come together in reunion on Mississippi's invitation.

Sincerely,

EARL BREWER,
Governor of Mississippi.

CHARLESTON (S. C.) COALING STATION.

Mr. THORNTON. I send to the desk and ask to have read, for the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], a letter addressed to that Senator on a matter pending in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BEWLEY-DARST COAL CO.,
Bristol, Va.-Tenn., March 30, 1914.

Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I thank you for your letter of the 21st instant, in reply to my telegram of the 18th.

You ask me for a full statement of the matter under consideration, and I give it with pleasure, in my crude way, and as I believe it to be.

The matter at issue can be briefly defined as a fight between the large coal producers of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia located on the lines of the Baltimore & Ohio, Chesapeake & Ohio, and Norfolk & Western, and Pennsylvania Railways with allied lines, commonly called the Coal Trust, and the coal producers of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia, whose mines are located on the Southern Railway. The prize over which battle is being waged is an all-important one, to wit, the coal markets of the West Indies, South America, and Panama Canal, and, to a considerable extent, the markets of the Carolinas. Freight rates and dockage facilities at ports of export are the dominating factors. Without competitive rates and dockage and ship-loading facilities at some south Atlantic port, preferably Charleston, the coal fields located on the Southern Railway will be restricted to local markets as heretofore, and, as a matter of course, further development will be retarded, if not entirely prohibited. The Southern Railway has for years promised its coal producers an outlet to sea through Charleston, but nothing has been done—not a move made toward redeeming that promise, except to put in an export rate to Charleston. But they might as well put in a rate to the moon. Never a ton of coal will move on that rate until docks and loading apparatus are installed. The Louisville & Nashville is putting in these facilities at the Gulf ports. The Norfolk & Western, Chesapeake & Ohio, and Virginian Railways have them in at Norfolk, but not a move has the Southern Railway made. Why?

Right recently the Clinchfield Coal Corporation, a company financed by Thomas F. Ryan, Blair & Co., and other Wall Street magnates, and the Stonega Coke & Coal Co., a Philadelphia company, both of which concerns are closely related to the Coal Trust, have acquired extensive water frontage at Charleston with a view to building, owning, and operating private docks. I presume they have a legal right to do this, but the railroads should not be permitted to join with them in a scheme which will give one or two companies a monopoly of the export business. The Southern Railway should build and operate its own docks and be in position to give fair treatment to all the coal operators on its lines. This looks to me like a move on the part of the Coal Trust to get its grip on the throat of the coal industry of the South, as it has in the North, and legal or legislative action should be taken at once to protect the interests of the independent and small operators, who are not financially able to build and own their own docks. Failure to take such action at the proper time in the North enabled the trust to bankrupt and drive out of business the small operators, and I trust such a condition will never come about in the South. The failure of the Southern Railway to build its own docks, as it has long promised to do, thereby giving all coal producers on its line a "square deal," as Theodore Roosevelt would say, seems mighty strange and peculiar and excites suspicion. We naturally look for the reason, and I figure it out this way: The Southern Railway is owned, financed, officered, and operated by J. P. Morgan & Co. The Coal Trust is, to a great extent, a Morgan interest. All the directors of the Southern Railway Co. are named by Morgan & Co. Several of them have vast holdings in Coal Trust property. Neither Morgan & Co. nor any of the Southern Railway directors have financial interest in any mines located on the Southern Railway, unless it be the Stonega Coke & Coal Co., which company has its mines in Virginia on the Virginia & Southwestern Railway. The rates on coal made by the Southern Railway have not been such as to encourage the development of coal properties located on its lines. Why? The Lord knows it needs the tonnage and revenue. There can only be one sensible and logical conclusion, and that is that the Coal Trust indirectly, or possibly directly, outlines the policy of the Southern Railway in the matter of establishing coal rates and in building coal docks at Charleston or other Southern ports.

The Coal Trust is strongly represented on the directory of the Pennsylvania Railroad; the Pennsylvania Railroad controls the Norfolk & Western Railway by stock ownership; the Norfolk & Western Railway has for a long while, as I firmly believe, practically dictated to the Southern Railway its rates on coal into the Carolinas. Why? It was to the interest of the Coal Trust to have its markets broadened and the market of the Southern Railway mines narrowed, as much as possible, in the Carolina territory.

The Norfolk & Western and Chesapeake & Ohio Railways, Coal Trust lines, have long had export rates and facilities at Norfolk. The Southern Railway should have had like facilities at Charleston for the past 10 years, but they have failed to put them in, have remained absolutely passive and inactive, and let the export business move over the Norfolk & Western and Chesapeake & Ohio lines through Norfolk, when they should have had a fair share of it. I again say, Why?

There is only one answer—too much Coal Trust influence; and I say the matter should be fully investigated, and by a special Senate committee and not by the Interstate Commerce Commission nor by the regular Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

If the Southern Railway is innocent of any wrong, an investigation will not hurt it, but will exonerate and relieve it of all suspicion. If it is being used illegally and improperly by its officers, directorate, or financial backers, to the detriment of its own interests or to the injury of its patrons and the country it serves, that fact should be shown and the wrong corrected.

I beg to urge you to support Senator TILLMAN'S resolution, and to resist any effort which may be made to refer the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

JAKE BEWLEY.

Mr. BRYAN. I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a letter similar in substance to the letter which was sent to the desk by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON], and which was read, upon the alleged discrimination against the south Atlantic ports in the matter of coal transportation.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1850 MINTWOOD PLACE,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1914.

Hon. N. P. BRYAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a winter resident of Florida and a producer of coal in southwestern Virginia, I take the liberty of drawing to your attention the resolution recently introduced by Senator TILLMAN covering the investigation of coal rates and routes to Charleston, S. C., and the southeastern territory, including the State of Florida.

The investigation should not affect the movement of Alabama coal through the port of Pensacola, which movement will largely increase with the opening of the Panama Canal; nor will it in any way decrease the importance of that great port. It will, however, uncover conditions in the Southeast, under which the cost of fuel at tidewater is maintained at a figure high enough to confine the major portion of the supply to mines in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia, shipping by water from Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Virginia ports, to the exclusion of coals mined in the South, and this is the cause of the complaint.

The effect of these high prices is to increase the cost of manufacturing at the southern ports and to increase the cost of bunkering coastwise and foreign steamers trading there.

There is no justification of higher rates on fuel from southern mines to southern ports—Jacksonville to Norfolk, inclusive—than from northern mines to northern ports—Norfolk to New York, inclusive—and the application of similar rates to any port south of Cape Hatteras will reduce the cost of fuel at all points in eastern and southern Florida and enable southern coal to compete in the open markets of the world with all coals.

It is wrong to force the South to buy coal from the northern mines when it has its home supply, and it should not be overlooked that every ton of coal purchased in the North takes money out of the South, while every ton used from mines on the Southern Railway, for example, not only builds up that line but the money paid for it remains in the South.

It is likewise wrong to tax those interior towns in the Southeast which are endeavoring to build up a manufacturing business by the prevailing high railroad rates on fuel, which are far in excess of the rates charged to points equidistant but located on the Pennsylvania system, for example.

I will be glad to discuss these matters with you in Washington should you so desire.

Touching the real interest of the South, I do not consider any question before the Senate of more importance.

Yours, truly, FRANK C. WRIGHT.

LOCATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 332, submitted by Mr. HITCHCOCK on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the organization committee of the Federal Reserve Board be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all briefs and written arguments made by each city applying to the organization committee for the location of a Federal reserve bank, together with the reasons relied upon by the organization committee in fixing the boundaries of the reserve districts and locating the reserve cities.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to amend the resolution by inserting in line 5, after the word "with," the words "the poll of the banks and."

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has given notice that he desires to address the Senate on the railroad question, and in view of the further fact that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] desires to speak on this resolution of mine, I ask that it go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will go over without prejudice.

RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in the midst of the furious controversy respecting the tolls which ought to be imposed upon a few ships which may pass through the Panama Canal it may be that I can not interest the Senate in the subject which I have proposed for discussion. I do not belittle this controversy, for it involves the self-respect of a nation; and yet I beg to remind Senators that an advance in railroad rates of 5 per cent will amount to more in one year than all the tolls paid by all the ships that will go through the canal in 12 or 15 years, and more than our coastwise ships, if they were charged full tolls, would pay in more than half a century. Indeed, I think I am within the truth when I say that an advance of 5 per cent upon the railroad rates of this country would amount in one year to more than all the tolls that would be paid on all the coastwise ships, at the rate now fixed for foreign shipping, in more than 75 years. However important our commerce by way of Panama may become, it will always be insignificant when compared with the transportation of land carriers.

There is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission an application for a general increase of all freight rates in the eastern district of the United States. It will, I assume, be tried and determined upon its merits, and what I am about to say must not be considered as an attempt to influence the conclusion which the commission may reach. The commission will hear the evidence or arguments of counsel and render its judgment free, I am sure, from any extrinsic appeal or suggestion.

If the examination of the financial and physical condition of the railroads were confined to the forum in which the cause to which I have referred is upon trial, I would doubt the propriety at this time of a discussion of any phase of the general subject in the Senate, but, unfortunately, a broader and infinitely more important issue is being tried before the court of last resort—the people of the United States.

In connection with the proceeding before the commission there is in progress the most comprehensive, energetic, and persistent campaign I have ever witnessed to make the people of the country believe that the effort of the Government to regulate railways, railway rates, and railway practices has resulted in dismal, disastrous failure; that the Government in its endeavor to protect the people has impoverished the transportation companies; that it has driven them to the very verge of bankruptcy and ruin; that it has destroyed their credit and rendered them incapable of performing the service which commerce demands; that it has outlawed them from the confidence of capital and exiled them from the field of the investor.

This extraordinary campaign has filled the newspapers with headlines, with dispatches, with letters, and with editorials. It has taken possession of the magazines out of which week after week issue appeals for justice to the decadent railroads and to the despondent railroad managers, and it gives dinners and holds banquets where the eloquence of the postprandial orator paints lurid pictures of empty treasures, of worn-out tracks, of falling bridges, and dilapidated equipment. I have collected and preserved a great volume of evidence showing what the campaign is and how it is carried forward, but inasmuch as all that I have said is as well known to all of you as it is to myself, I will go no further by way of proof than to mention a few of the startling things that are being said and done.

In the last issue of Munsey's Magazine there is an article by Mr. Frank A. Munsey himself. Mr. Munsey is a man of great wealth and great energy. His prominence in literature, finance, and politics gives his declarations an unusual significance. Among other things, he says:

> Starving the railroads and hostility to capital are responsible for our business depression and industrial stagnation. The Government has overplayed its hand in humiliating capital and breaking up our big enterprises. Its obvious worry lest somebody, somewhere, somehow, might make a dollar has been overdone. Continue this policy of starving the railroads and we shall continue to starve ourselves, and shall have no good times. Let the railroads make a decent living, and the wheels of enterprise will leap into activity.

He then reviews the situation, insisting that the farmer and manufacturer who produce everything that the railroads carry can not bring about good times; that the merchants, middlemen, and consumers who buy, sell, and use the products of the farm and factory can not restore good conditions, but that the railroads which merely carry the things that the farmer and the manufacturer produce and the things which the merchants, middlemen, and consumers buy, sell, and use can instantly reinvigorate the whole body of business and will do it if the Government ceases to oppress them. Having thus reasoned himself into the belief that the way in which to lift the industries of the country from the depression into which they have fallen is to build more track and buy more equipment, although the railroads can not use what they have, he writes:

> Forcing railroad managements into a position where they have been compelled to squeeze paltry dividends out of half-fed, half-nourished properties that they might keep their roads out of bankruptcy is a rotten policy.

You can scarcely take up a newspaper in these days but that you see the substance of what I have just read from Mr. Munsey reiterated. In the New York Times of Saturday two weeks ago there appeared under bold headlines the statement that the New York Central had dismissed 25,000 workmen since December 1, 1913, and that the Pennsylvania Railroad had been compelled to discharge 15,000; and in the same paper was an account of the speech of Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and chairman of the presidents' committee of railroads in official classification territory, in which he referred to the case pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission and declared that the railroads were without sufficient money to maintain their properties and conduct their business; that men having money to invest would not put it in railroads unless they could be assured of a safe and satisfactory return, and so on in like strain throughout an extended and interesting address.

On Monday morning last a Washington paper printed a letter from Mr. E. P. Ripley, president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad system, complimenting the editors of the paper upon their clear understanding of the railway situation and their forcible and able discussion of the subject. Mr. Ripley, after bestowing these commendations, proceeded at great length to show how miserably inadequate freight rates now are and how impossible it will be for the roads to do the business of the country unless their revenues were substantially increased.

I could cite, I think, a thousand of these instances occurring within the last year or two, all directed toward a single end, namely, to prove the charge so picturesquely made by Mr. Munsey that the Government is starving the railroads, and that they will shortly become a great scrap heap unless the Government reverses the policy which it has hitherto pursued.

I do not inquire whether the campaign is being carried on to affect the commission, for we all feel that it can not be swerved a hair's breadth from the path of its duty, but I do assert that the movers in this campaign are trying to do an infinitely more objectionable thing. They are trying to pervert and mislead the judgment of the people. They are trying to awaken sympathy by false pretenses. They are trying to deceive the country with exaggerated cries of suffering and distress in order to escape the control which experience has demonstrated should be imposed upon all corporations which undertake a public service.

My purpose is to take a hand and bear a part in this campaign and bring forward some facts which have hitherto been overlooked or suppressed. I do not mean that they have been ignored in the proceeding before the commission, but they have not been impressed upon the public mind; and what I shall say is, I hope, but the beginning of an attempt to put the people of this country into the possession of all the facts which relate to this great factor in the life of the Nation.

It is utterly wrong for any man to say that there is hostility in the hearts of our people toward railroads. It is a contradiction in terms. The happiness and prosperity of the country are dependent upon the safety, adequacy, and efficiency of transportation. Everybody desires that every railroad shall be well constructed, well equipped, and well operated. Everybody knows that these things can not be accomplished unless the compensation for the service rendered is sufficient to pay for maintenance and operation and so to reward the capital invested that those who have money to invest will look upon the enterprise as an attractive one. I recognize that the duty which the Government has undertaken of regulating railway rates and railway practices is a difficult one, and I have no doubt that at times and places some injustice is done to the railroads, just as I have no doubt that at other times and places injustice is done to the people whose interests the Government is trying to guard.

There ought, however, to be an end of the ceaseless and senseless clamor which I have heard for years that the people, through their Government, are intent upon inflicting an injury upon an instrumentality vital to their own welfare. It is as absurd as it is untrue, and the demagogue who appears now and then and attempts to enhance his popularity by indiscriminate attacks upon railroads is no more to be despised nor condemned than the speaker or writer who weaves into his story the assumption that the Government is purposely endeavoring to harass, injure, and destroy these great highways of commerce. I have no doubt that there are rates that ought to be increased. I have no doubt that there are rates that ought to be decreased. This is a problem for the commission, and with it I have nothing to do. My sole object is to put before the country in a brief, concise way certain facts that are perfectly well known to those who have investigated the subject, which are accessible to every student of railroad history, but which most men, absorbed as they are in their several avocations, have neither the time nor the opportunity to ascertain.

Before I enter upon the particular inquiry before me I desire to remind the Senate that the rates now prevailing were substantially all made by the railroads themselves. It is, of course, a mere estimate, but I hazard the statement that more than 95 per cent of the freight revenues of the railroads are derived from freight rates made and published without any interference whatsoever upon the part of the Government. If they are insufficient as a whole, the fault lies, in the first instance at least, with the traffic bureaus of the several transportation companies. One thing more I ask you to bear in mind as I proceed. It will, I think, be admitted by everyone that the physical condition of the railroads is better at this moment than ever before in their history. I mean that the roadbeds are safer, the rails better and heavier, the bridges sounder and stronger, the station houses and other structures more commodious and permanent, the equipment more adequate and lasting, and the locomotive power greater than at any other time since the first railway train started on its journey.

It follows, of course, that the railroad property devoted to the public service is more valuable at this moment than at any other moment since railroads began. We ought to understand that we are dealing with the most complete railroad system that this world has ever seen, prepared to render more and better service than it ever rendered before, and all the declamation about the railroads passing into decay and becoming unsafe or insufficient is the rankest, baldest nonsense.

If the Senate will permit a preliminary statement, it is beyond doubt that the railroads are now—that is, for the last three or four months—experiencing a somewhat severe depression; the volume of traffic is greatly diminished as compared with one, two, or three years ago. The comparisons that I shall institute presently end with 1913, and they are sufficient for my immediate purpose, because I suppose that no one will claim that because we are in the midst of an industrial depression, in which people are not producing as much as they did, when people are not buying or consuming as much as they did, and many men are dismissed from the railway service, being unnecessary to carry on the business of the companies, that therefore rates should be advanced.

The depression began about the 1st of October last and has grown more serious with each month since that time. I shall not pause to inquire into the causes of the unfortunate situation, for if I were led into such an investigation I would be compelled to examine a subject that ought not to be treated as an incident of a discussion, but as its chief purpose. It suffices to say that for some reason people are not buying as much as they did; manufacturers are not producing as much as they did; consequently, there is not so much to haul from one part of the country to another. There is probably more railroad equipment now idle because it can not be put to use than was ever idle before. This condition may account in part for the dismissal of railroad employees whose services are no longer required. If there was work for them to do, they would continue to earn for their employers the revenues that were formerly received. I hope, and I may add that it is my belief, that these distressing conditions will be temporary and that speedily business will resume its normal proportions.

In this partial suspension of activity the railroads suffer just as all other industries suffer, and we must bear with patience the misfortune that has fallen upon the whole country.

The 70,000 men, if that be the number, who have been dismissed from the railway service find their counterparts in many times 70,000 men who have been dismissed from the industrial service of the country, and it is no fairer to ask the Government of the United States to guarantee to the railroad companies continued employment than it would be to ask that it shall guarantee to all the workingmen of this country continuous and profitable employment. We must all suffer in common this depression of which we are so conscious and the existence of which I think must be admitted.

It can not, however, be claimed that railroad rates must shift with these passing fluctuations in trade, for that would be the equivalent of insisting that while the farmer and manufacturer and the merchant must have their lean years and their fat years the railroads must be guaranteed that the capital which they have employed shall at all times receive the maximum reward.

With these general observations, I invite your attention to the especial facts which seem to me that all of us should have in mind when we are considering the charge that the Government has oppressed and is gradually destroying the railroads.

For many of the tables I shall use I am indebted to Mr. Clifford Thorne, one of the railroad commissioners of my own State, whose competency and industry in the field of transportation rates, their regulation and adjustment, are not surpassed by any man in the country. I have necessarily resorted to other sources of information, which I shall endeavor to identify as I proceed.

Contrary to the arrangement which seems to be natural, yet for reasons which will quickly appear, I invite your attention first to the study of this question, What is a reasonable rate of return upon invested capital? It is always a question of fact, for its correct answer depends upon the circumstances which surround the investment. It is not material to indulge in conjecture and speculation. There is but one way in which to discover the answer, and that is to ascertain what men with money are willing to take for its use when invested in various ways.

The pure money rate accepted and received by investors is best illustrated by the average yield upon investments in representative Government bonds. In these securities risk is practically eliminated and ordinarily they are not taxable. I have a table before me which shows the actual rates of interest yielded by investments in the obligations of the following Governments: United States, Great Britain, France, and Germany. Observe that I am not stating the rate of interest which the obligation bears, but the rate of interest yielded to the investor. The table comprises the years from 1890 to 1909, both inclusive. I give the first and the last of these years: United States, 2.43 per cent and 2.52 per cent; that is, in 1890 the average rate yielded by the Government bonds of the United States—these are 4 per cent bonds, I may say—was 2.43, and in 1909 it was 2.52. In Great Britain—and I am speaking now, of course, of British consols—in 1890 the average rate yielded was 2.88 per cent and in 1909 2.98 per cent. In France in 1890 the average rate was 3.32 per cent; in 1909, 3.09 per cent. In Germany in 1890 it was 3.45 per cent and in 1909 it was 3.34 per cent. With the consent of the Senate, I shall insert in my remarks without further reading the table, which has been prepared by an eminent statistician and appears in one of the reports of the National Monetary Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission to do so is granted.

The table referred to follows.

Actual rates of interest yielded by investments in bonds of the American, British, French, and German Governments.

	United States fours of 1907 and 1925.	English consols, 2¾ and 2½ per cent.	French rentes, 3 per cent.	German threes.

1908	2.44	2.91	3.13	3.62
1909	2.52	2.98	3.09	3.54

Mr. CUMMINS. It will thus be seen that five years ago—I have not been able to secure the information since that time, and I do not look upon time as material—that capital was willing to accept investments in these securities for a return of from 2.52 per cent in this country to 3.34 per cent in Germany.

The table I have just used appears in one of the reports of the National Monetary Commission, Senate document 570, Sixty-first Congress, page 281. It was taken from an investigation prepared and published by W. C. Mitchell, of the University of California, called "Rates of interest and prices of investment securities, 1890 to 1909."

Now I come to probably a more material thing. For the purpose of instituting a comparison Mr. Mitchell—mark you I do not make this selection—selected 10 typical railway companies and tabulated the actual rates of interest yielded by investments in their bonds. I ask to have the latter table incorporated in my address without reading it at length. Possibly I ought at this point to state the railroads that were selected by Mr Mitchell. They were the Chicago & Eastern Illinois; the Missouri, Kansas & Texas; the Wabash; the Chesapeake & Ohio; the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha; the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; the Central Railroad of New Jersey; the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; the New York, Chicago & St. Louis; and the West Shore. I am now, of course, speaking of bonds alone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the table referred to by the Senator from Iowa will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. CUMMINS. The foregoing rates of return are not the average on the face value of the security, but the actual yield, computed from the annual return and the actual price the investing public pays for such securities. The method of making the computation is described in the language of Mr. Mitchell, as follows:

The lowest and highest prices of these bonds in each month of 1890–1909 were obtained from the Financial Review. The means between these extreme quotations were struck after accrued interest, as of the middle of the month, had been deducted. Then net yields were computed for each month from these mean quotations by the aid of bond tables.

[1] $20,000 per mile.

It is sufficient to say that in 1890 the interest yielded upon these investments ranged from 3.88 to 5.24, and that in 1909 the rate actually yielded upon the investments ranged from 3.87 to 4.14. I am still speaking of the rate of interest actually yielded to the investor and not the rate borne by the obligations themselves. The conclusion is apparent and can not be gainsaid. It is that during these 20 years the public was willing to put its money into these bonds and receive as a reward upon the capital an annual return as indicated. As a supplement to the table upon which I have just commented I append a table showing the rate of interest actually paid upon the bonded debts of the railways in the United States and in Great Britain from 1899 to 1912.

I take the liberty of reading a very little from this table, for it is not only vastly interesting, but it is gratifying to the pride of every American.

In the United States—I am considering now the funded debt of the roads—in 1899 the average interest paid upon the funded debt of all the railroads—and I am not speaking now of short-time notes, but of bonds—was 4.42 per cent. In 1911, that being the last year for which I have information upon this point, the average rate of interest paid was 3.82 per cent. That was the general rate paid by the railroads of this country upon their bonds in 1911.

The railroads in England and Wales in 1899 paid 3.42 per cent, and in 1912 they paid 3.39 per cent. You will observe that the rate in England in 1912 was not appreciably less than that paid in the United States in 1911. In Scotland the same kind of securities paid in 1899, 3.57 per cent, and in 1912 they paid 3.57 per cent. In Ireland the same kind of securities paid in 1899, 3.99, and in 1912 they paid 3.81 per cent, almost the identical interest paid by our railroads in 1911.

The average rates of interest paid on all railway bonds in America and Great Britain during the last 10 years for which comparative figures were available are as follows:

Rate of interest.

	United States funded debt.	England and Wales, loans and debenture.	Scotland, loans and debt.	Ireland, loans and debt.

1912	.....	3.39	3.57	3.81

I hope you will bear these facts in mind, for they will become highly material when I reach the inquiry relating to the demands upon and distribution of the net revenues of the railroads in this country.

I now present certain tables taken from Bulletin No. 21 of the United States Census, Department of Commerce and Labor, showing the outcome of investments in certain railway stocks.

I pass now from bonds and come to stocks. These tables are prepared by Mr. Myers, a well-known statistician of the Bureau of the Census, now a statistician, I think, in the Department of Commerce, though I am not sure about that. They show at great length the investments in railway bonds and also the average market price of railway stocks and the rate per cent of annual return to the investor.

Anyone who desires to ascertain the status of railway stocks in the United States has only to refer to this most exhaustive and comprehensive table in order to secure full information upon that subject.

I can not detain you by a close analysis of these tables. It answers my present purpose to say that railway bonds yield a little over 4 per cent and stock about 5 per cent.

These are the rates of investment in this country. Just now it may be that bonds are difficult to sell, but that is not material to the point that I am attempting to make.

I present these facts for no other purpose than to show the composite public judgment respecting a fair return upon investments in railway properties and to give us a basis for the further inquiry into the amount of net revenue necessary in order to sustain the financial credit of railway companies among those who have money to invest and to enable us to answer the question so persistently propounded, Are the revenues from existing rates adequate to maintain the credit of capital obligations in the markets of the country? I am not considering the adequacy or inadequacy of the existing revenues to make returns upon a fair valuation of the railway property. I recognize that under the decisions of the courts a particular rate is to be tested by this standard, but we do not know what the fair value of the railway property is, and will not know until the Interstate Commerce Commission concludes the labor it has now undertaken.

I may pause here to say that if the principle or rule laid down by the New Jersey Utilities Commission, concerning which we had much to say recently and which Senators well understand, is applied to the railroads of this country, the value of this property will, in my judgment, be four, five, or six billion dollars more than its present capitalization. If the other rule is applied to the railway property, it is likely that its value will be found to be less than its present capitalization. It all depends upon the estimate which the Interstate Commerce Commission shall finally make with regard to the intangible value of the railroad property as to the conclusion which it may reach; but if this intangible value is added, then I have no doubt whatever that the railroads will be entitled to an increase. If you add four, five, or six billion dollars to the value of the railroad property in the United States, the railroads must secure an additional revenue of something like $300,000,000 a year in order to enable them to earn the same rate of return upon that value which they now earn upon their capitalization. I am hoping that, notwithstanding all our misadventures, we will not suffer that great disaster; but time alone can tell.

I repeat that I am not addressing myself to the issue which must arise when it becomes possible to ascertain the value of the property that renders the public service, but I am endeavoring to look into the sufficiency of the revenues to maintain the railroads in physical efficiency to pay all operating expenses and to hold their present capitalization in the confidence of the investing public.

Second. In logical sequence we ought next to ascertain the amount and character of the outstanding railroad securities in the hands of investors, the value of which has so been impaired by the severity and injustice of governmental supervision that they have been practically driven from the market places not only of our own country but of the world. The last reliable information on this subject will be found in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for 1911. The report shows that after deducting duplicated and intercorporate holdings the aggregate at par of all the debts—I am not now confining myself to bonded debts, but all debts; I mean, of course, net debts—and stocks of the railway companies was $15,008,707,570, of which $9,164,460,201 consisted of bonds and $5,844,247,369 of stocks. I shall not dwell upon the fact, well known by every student of the subject, that a very large proportion of the stock was originally issued either without any valuable consideration or upon the payment of a small proportion of its par value.

We have but to recall the overcapitalization of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; of the Chicago & Alton; of the St. Louis & San Francisco; of the New York, New Haven & Hartford—I hesitate to speak of that, although I had it on my tongue—we have but to remember what was so graphically described this morning by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] as to the action of the Union Pacific in borrowing $100,000,000 for the purpose of acquiring an entire railroad, or an interest in an entire railroad, and when it was compelled to forego that enterprise, instead of using the money that it borrowed for the purpose of discharging the obligation thereby created, it distributes the stock which had been acquired in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and distributes the cash which remained or had been covered into the treasury on account of the loan as a stock and cash dividend among its stockholders—my friend from Colorado says "common-stock holders," and I have no doubt that is so—a chapter in railroad financing humiliating to the people of the United States, because they had not hitherto enacted such legislation as would make an act of that sort impossible, and humiliating because it seems to be now reasonably certain that for all time to come the people of this country must bear the burden created by this most—I will not say unprecedented, because unfortunately it has too many precedents—but this utterly indefensible proceeding on the part of the Union Pacific Railway Co. I only hope that when the Interstate Commerce Commission comes to consider the value of these properties for the purpose of rate making it will be strong enough to eliminate these false financial operations and will impose upon the country only the burden that it ought to bear, and that the value of the property of the Union Pacific Railway Co. will be ascertained without any reference to these increases in the capital stock. It is also well known that a large part of the capital stock of railway companies was originally put out in the form of stock dividends, a device employed to capitalize either the unearned increment or betterments and extensions paid for out of surplus net earnings; that is to say, net earnings often accumulated through the imposition of excessive rates.

I am dealing with the question to-day upon the basis that we must care for the entire capitalization. We have not yet reached the time when we can sift the good from the bad and relieve the people of the burden of these financial operations. It may be we can do so in the future; we have not done so up to this time; and I am taking up this question and looking at it just as though we must care for all the capitalization which these companies have from time to time issued. It is claimed, and it may be true, that some, if not all, of this watered stock has been made good, either by the natural increase in the value of railway property, especially of rights of way and the like, or by its enlargement from earnings. This phase of the history of railway capitalization is at once the most interesting and the most regrettable chapter of the Nation's development, but its recital must be postponed until another opportunity presents itself.

For the purpose I have in view at this time, I take the capitalization as it is, not, mark you, as a basis of rate making, for it has been repeatedly declared that it is not the foundation upon which rates are to be constructed. I take it, as I have more than once said, to determine whether the tendency of railroad revenues leads us to the conclusion that they will give these securities the proper standing in the markets of this and other countries. I am not able to state with absolute accuracy the exact increase in capitalization since 1911, inasmuch as many of the financial operations in which the railway companies have engaged have involved the refunding, or substitution of securities, as well as additions to them. I believe, however, that it is entirely safe to say that the added net debts do not exceed $350,000,000, and that the added stock is not more than $250,000,000. If, then, the funded obligations, or bonds and other debts, of the railway companies aggregate substantially $9,400,000,000, and if, as we have seen, the average rate of interest is not more than 4.2 per cent, the sum annually required to pay the interest upon the railway debt is $394,000,000; and the sum required to pay a 5 per cent dividend—and we have seen that the American public is willing and anxious to invest its money in railway stocks which pay a 5 per cent dividend—is $310,000,000, making a total of $704,000,000 required to pay all the interest upon the railway debt and to pay a 5 per cent dividend upon all the capital stock now outstanding.

To test the accuracy of these results, I suggest that the actual interest paid in 1911 was $380,412,000, and the actual dividends paid in that year were $291,000,000. It will not be forgotten that I have already shown conclusively that under normal conditions investors are glad to put their money in railway bonds yielding substantially 4 per cent interest, and in railway stocks paying 5 per cent dividends. It may be that just at this moment investors require a little more than 4 per cent upon bonds and 5 per cent upon stocks; but if it be so, the condition is but temporary; and it can not be fairly insisted that to care for a fluctuating or temporary condition it is necessary that additional revenues shall be granted to these companies. It is not to be denied that there are times and circumstances at which, and under which, it is difficult to secure money for any purpose or upon any security, but if we are living in such a time and surrounded by such circumstances, the misfortune must be attributed not to the regulation of our railways but to other conditions from which the people suffer, and which we must all endure until happily they may pass away.

Third. These considerations bring me to an examination of the past and present revenues of the railroads and to the task of tracing the tendency which these revenues disclose. Now, mark you, I am dealing with this as a problem affecting all the railroads of the United States. I have not selected those railroads whose application is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I hold in my hands a table showing the total revenue, the total expense, including taxes, and the net revenue of all the railroads in the United States, beginning with 1890, and ending with 1913. It is divided into periods of five years, with the exception of the last four years, and it exhibits the average of each of these items for each of the periods, and in that connection states the percentage of increase in net revenue over the first year, 1890. The net revenue of all the railroads in 1890 was $328,576,192 and in 1913 was $814,331,842. I want that firmly impressed upon the mind, that last year the net revenues of all the railroads of the United States, after deducting taxes, was $814,331,842, a net increase of 147.80 per cent over 1890, a larger increase than for any other year in the twenty-four, save one—1910.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I am interested in many of the statements the Senator is making. I should like to ask him a question. Has he the dividends paid in 1911?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have. I mentioned that figure a moment ago.

Mr. McLEAN. That was in 1911, as I understand?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. I have not the dividends paid last year.

Mr. McLEAN. I understood the Senator to say that in 1911 the total of dividends was $290,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Two hundred and ninety-one million dollars.

Mr. McLEAN. Did that include dividends from surplus?

Mr. CUMMINS. The $291,000,000? It did not.

Mr. McLEAN. It did not include any dividends from surplus?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what the Senator means by "dividends from surplus."

Mr. McLEAN. I think there was about $90,000,000 paid from surplus—that is, it was not earned in 1911.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so.

Mr. McLEAN. And I think something like $100,000,000 was paid from subsidiary roads—leased roads.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not remember, and I can not answer that question; but if so, the earnings for 1911 were greater than for any other year in the history of railroads prior to that time, save 1910.

Mr. McLEAN. My inquiry was directed to that point because I should like to know what the stockholders got, not in dividends declared by operating and leased lines but in dividends actually paid.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not those figures for 1913, nor do I believe that anybody has. That is a matter entirely at the pleasure of the railroad companies. I shall show presently that if the railroad companies did not pay dividends of 5 per cent or more in 1913 it was because they thought they had a more profitable use for their money, and that they spent more money in 1913 than they ever before spent in the history of the railroads, and deducted more for maintenance and operation and for equipment in 1913 than they ever before deducted in the history of the business in the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator if later on, in considering this comparison between 1900 and 1913, he takes into consideration at all the difference in the mileage of 1913 and 1900? He gives the total of the net earnings.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And I suppose that depends more or less upon the mileage.

Mr. CUMMINS. I make that comparison, of course, later on.

The average net revenue for the first period—now, this is from 1890 to 1894, inclusive—was 2.06 per cent over 1890. In the case of the average net revenue for the second period—that is, the one ending with 1899—the increase over 1890 was 7.69 per cent. For the period ending in 1904 the increase over 1890 was 64.36 per cent. For the period ending in 1909 the average increase over 1890 was 111 per cent.

Now, I will read the next four years, because the full period has not elapsed. In 1910 the net revenue of the railroads was $824,241,301. That is 150.85 per cent increase over 1890.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa further yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. McLEAN. I have been told that the net dividend received by the stockholder was less than 2 per cent, and I was interested to know about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what they paid in 1913. I only know what they had to pay. If they did not desire to pay it, of course they may have had reasons which were satisfactory to them; but I have not the information suggested by the Senator from Connecticut.

In 1911 the net revenue was $766,398,000. That was 133 per cent increase over 1890. In 1912 the net revenue was $737,584,000—124.48 per cent increase over 1890. In 1913, which is the last year of which we have a completed report, the net revenue, as I have more than once stated, was $814,221,842—larger than in any other year of railroad history save in 1910; and 1910 seems to be conceded by all who have studied the subject to have been an exceptional and extraordinary year.

Now, let us see. Here the railroads have $814,000,000 applicable for distribution among their bondholders and their stockholders. In order to discharge the full obligation for interest on bonds, the companies pay substantially, as I have shown, $394,000,000. Deduct this amount from the total net revenue and we have the remaining sum of $420,000,000 applicable for dividends. This means that the railway companies as a whole earned enough in 1913 to pay 7 per cent upon all their capital stock, whereas we have seen that 5 per cent, or, at the most, 5½ per cent, actually paid makes such stock attractive to the investing public and is sufficient to invite complete confidence.

There is no dispute with regard to these facts. The railway companies do not dispute that they earned $814,000,000 in 1913. If they did, they earned enough to pay all their interest, both on long-time and short-time obligations, and to pay 7 per cent upon their capital stock. If they had taken 2 per cent and used it as surplus—and it would be fair and reasonable for them to do that, I think—they still would have had 5 per cent upon their entire capital stock for distribution.

The most remarkable thing about the table to which I have referred is the tendency which it establishes, namely, a strong, undeniable upward direction in net revenues. The net revenue last year was, in round numbers, $120,000,000 more than the average for the five-year period ending with 1909. It was $270,000,000 more than for the five-year period closing with 1904. It was $460,000,000 more than for the five-year period ending with 1899, and was $475,000,000 more than for the five-year period terminating with the year 1894.

It is almost unbelievable that in the face of these facts intelligent men will continue to denounce the attitude of the Government toward the railroads as hostile or unjust.

I ask to incorporate in my remarks, without further reading, the table to which I have just been referring.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be inserted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[1] Revenues and expenses for years subsequent to 1907 are not entirely comparable to previous years because of change in classification of accounts.

Basic figures from 1890 to 1911 (both included), taken from statistical reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Those for years 1912 and 1913 taken from Bulletin of Revenues and Expenses of steam roads in the United States for month of June, 1913—summary for United States of large roads (having miles operated in 1912 of 219,666.45, and in 1913 of 221,748.58 miles), having more than $1,000,000 operating revenue.

Figures for 1890–1907 are taken from the Annual Statistical Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Commencing in 1908 the commission omitted in said annual reports the figures for switching and terminal companies.

A somewhat comparable figure would therefore be obtained by using the commission's Bulletin of Revenues and Expenses, which continued to include said switching and terminal companies. We have done this in the table given below.

Final figures for 1912 and 1913, however, will probably be larger than given in this table, because for those years the bulletins only give the statistics for companies having more than $1,000,000 operating revenues, while for previous years they also gave the figures for smaller roads.

The use of the final figures given in the commission's Annual Reports of Statistics of Railways for the United States, or those given in the Bulletin, does not materially change the general trend. Illustrating this, we here insert figures from 1908, using the said bulletins:

Year.	Total revenues.	Total expense (including taxes).	Net revenue.	Increase over year 1890.

1908	$2,421,542,005	$1,770,920,845	$650,621,160	.....

1913	3,057,163,763	2,242,941,921	814,221,842	147.80

[1] The above average is computed for the five-year period 1905–1909, by using the figures for 1905–1907, as given in preceding tables, with these revised figures for 1908–9.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now come to the point just suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. It is whether his tables comprehend any statement as to how much of that net return was put into the construction of new railway lines or newly projected lines.

Mr. CUMMINS. The table I shall shortly offer to the Senate will show just how much has been put in under maintenance of ways, structures, and equipment. I do not know how much of the 7 per cent to which I have just been referring was distributed by the railroads in the way of dividends, or how much of it was invested by them in the enlargement or extension of their lines.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to divert the Senator from his very thoroughly prepared address. I have no doubt the table will sufficiently inform me. I appreciate the Senator's response.

Mr. CUMMINS. To further establish the unvarying tendency already so completely proven, I call attention to the two fundamental units of transportation ordinarily used by statisticians and always employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I mean the train-mile and the mile of road. I will not consume the time that would be necessary in order to analyze them, and will content myself with the assertion that they still further show the ever-increasing net revenue. I can not refrain, however, from suggesting that in 1890 the net earnings of all the railroads per mile of line were $2,300, while in 1913 the net earnings were $4,233 per mile of line, a larger net earning than in any year since fire was kindled in a locomotive engine.

Last year for every mile of railroad—I am speaking of course of the first track, the single-track railroad—for every mile of railroad in the United States there was earned $4,233, and that is nearly double the earnings per mile of 1890 and is greater than the earning per mile in any other year in the history of this business.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator refer to net earnings?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am now referring to net earnings.

I have a most interesting table upon this subject, which I desire to incorporate in my remarks. The table shows the earnings of all the railroads of the country per train-mile, as well as per mile of line. I think possibly I may be pardoned if I refer a little more at length to the last table.

In 1890 the average gross earnings per mile were $6,725. In 1913 the gross earnings per mile were $13,787. In 1890 the operating expense was $4,425 per mile. In 1913 the operating expense was $9,554 per mile.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. Does the Senator take the figures from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I get the figures from the reports of the railroad companies.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to ask the Senator if in those reports there are no duplications? To make clear what I mean, a leased line may pay a certain revenue to the operating line, and the operating line includes that in its report, so that there is a duplication. Has the Senator's attention been called to that?

Mr. CUMMINS. All the duplications have, as I am informed, been eliminated in the table. The net earnings per mile, as I said before, were in 1890 $2,300, and in 1913 $4,233. The chief reason for the great increase in gross as well as net revenue is found in the density of the traffic in later years as compared with earlier years. I beg to submit tables on that subject which will be found most instructive as well as interesting.

I ask that these tables be also printed as a part of my remarks without reading. They show the increase in density of traffic throughout the United States during the 24 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, leave will be granted.

(b) Change in accounting classification slightly offsets comparison with previous years.

(d) Figures from Bulletin of Revenues and Expenses for June, 1913.

NOTE.—Figures for 1890–1907 are taken from the annual statistical reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Commencing in 1908, the commission omitted in said annual reports the figures for switching and terminal companies.

A somewhat comparable figure would therefore be obtained by using the commission's Bulletin of Revenues and Expenses, which continued to include said switching and terminal companies. We have done this in the table given below.

Final figures for 1912 and 1913, however, will probably be larger than given in this table, because for those years the bulletins only give the statistics for companies having more than $1,000,000 operating revenues, while for previous years they also gave the figures for smaller roads.

The use of the final figures given in the commission's annual reports of statistics of railways for the United States, or those given in the bulletin, does not materially change the general trend; illustrating this, we here insert figures from 1908, using the said bulletin:

[1] In the 1905 Annual Statistical Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission the following note is given under table appearing on page 67: "A few items in this summary differ from corresponding ones previously shown, the adjustments being chiefly due to corrections recently submitted by one of the larger roads."

The table as given only carries the adjusted figures back to the year 1895. The adjustment involves the following items in the table given: "Tons reported as carried" and "Typical haul on the average railway."

In the above table we have used the adjusted figures for the column "Typical haul on average railway," as given in the 1905 report, from 1895; for years prior to 1895 the 1895 statistical report of the commission was used.

Authority: Eighth, Eighteenth, and Twenty-fourth Annual Reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the statistics of railways in the United States.

NOTE.—The number of tons per train-mile prior to 1900 are computed by finding the average per revenue freight-train mile including 75 per cent of revenue mixed-train miles. Beginning with 1900 the total of revenue mixed-train miles has been included by the commission in the basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Iowa to complete his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, that course will be pursued. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. The proof I have offered respecting net earnings would seem to leave little doubt of their sufficiency to pay full interest upon the bonded debt and a generous dividend upon the stock, and I now take up the further misunderstanding which has been created by the uninformed speakers and writers in the campaign to which I have already referred. It is said, in substance, that, granting the adequacy of the net earnings as shown in the railway reports, these net earnings have been secured by a false economy in the expenditures for maintenance of both ways and structures and equipment; that is to say, that the railroads in their anxiety to preserve their net revenues have cut down their allowances for maintenance, and thus impaired the safety and efficiency of the railroad property. This claim is without the least foundation in fact. The truth of the matter will appear in a table now before me, which shows the expenditures of all the railroads in the United States for maintenance of ways and structure and for equipment for 24 years. Beginning with 1890, it shows the expenditures per mile of track, and this is the proper unit for comparative purposes. A ton or a passenger is hauled a mile. It is the task which the railroad performs. If it has two, three, or four tracks, fifty engines or a thousand engines, they are merely the additional facilities for moving the freight or the passenger so many linear miles.

In 1890 the amount expended for the maintenance of ways and structures was $152,710,887, or $976.44 per mile. This is the sum that the railroad companies have expended on each mile of that track for the maintenance of what is known as ways and structures; that is, the roadbed, the ties, the rails, the bridges, and the like. In 1913 the amount expended was $407,171,756, or $1,836.19 per mile. Last year, the year in which some people think the railroad companies were compelled to withhold their net earnings from the stockholders in order to maintain their property, the railroads spent $1,836 per mile for this purpose as against $956 in 1890. For the maintenance of equipment the expenditure in 1890 was $114,038,756, or $729.13 per mile; in 1913 the expenditure for the same purpose was $501,671,011, or $2,262.34 per mile. That means that in 1913 the railroad companies spent in the maintenance of their equipment nearly three times as much per mile as they did in 1890. All these sums were deducted from the gross revenues in reaching the net revenue to which I have already referred.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose equipment means the rolling stock?

Mr. CUMMINS. It means locomotives and cars of all kinds.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is but fair that we should take into consideration the fact that the enormously increased traffic has required much more expensive locomotives, and the change of cars from wooden to steel construction has likewise necessitated a very greatly increased expense. Is that not so?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is quite fair to take that into account. I am simply showing that the railroad companies did not starve themselves; that they spent a great deal more last year than they ever spent before; and that the result is that they have better tracks and better cars and better locomotives than they ever had before.

The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the increase in the cost of locomotives. That is quite true; but one locomotive at this time will haul three times as much as many of the locomotives in use in 1890, and the increase in the cost of equipment is oftentimes compensated for by the increased efficiency of the equipment so purchased and maintained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Doubtless the Senator is right in that suggestion; and yet it is proper that we should still further consider that there has been a popular demand that the railroads should improve their equipment, that they should build more costly stations, that they should have more substantial rails, and that they should in every way expend more money than they were in the habit of doing 20 years ago or even 5 years ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly the Senator from New Hampshire has just come into the Chamber. I hope he will not understand that I am criticizing this policy on the part of the railroad companies. On the contrary, I applaud it. I am showing, however, that notwithstanding all these expenditures, which have been made in response to a public demand, they are made, I think, not only because it is more profitable to the railway companies that their roadbeds shall be good and their equipment adequate, but because they want to please and serve the people of the United States. I am simply using these figures to show that the railroads in the last year have not robbed their properties in order to reach a net revenue, that their expenditures were more than ever before for these very proper purposes, and that still their net revenues were enough to pay 7 per cent upon all their capital stock.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not been privileged to hear all that the Senator has said, much to my regret, because I wanted to listen to the Senator. I think I comprehended exactly what the Senator had in mind, and yet I thought it well to suggest that the railroads have responded to a popular demand along this line, and very properly so, and they might well have been criticized had they not done that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not disagree with the Senator from New Hampshire at all. I think they have gone on very wisely and properly and enlarged their property and rendered it safer, more efficient, and more adequate than ever before. But the people of the country have contributed the money in the way of railroad rates necessary to enable the railroad companies to make these improvements and enlargements.

The total expenditure per mile for these purposes in 1890 was $1,705.57, and, in 1913, $4,098.53, an increase over 1890 of 140.51 per cent.

The expenditure per mile for maintenance in 1913 was greater than any other year in the history of railroads. It was $495 per mile more than in 1912, $872 more than in 1911, $853 more than in 1910, $1,242 more than in 1909, $1,609 more than in 1904, $2,332 more than in 1899, and $2,438 more than in 1894.

These are the expenditures which the railroad companies have made from their gross revenue and which, being deducted, leave the net revenue which I have already suggested.

The significance of this showing is obvious. It proves conclusively the statement I made early in my address, that the railroads are in better condition physically than they have ever been before.

I shall not take up the probable tendency of the railway companies to charge in their maintenance accounts many expenditures that might well be included in their construction or capital account. It is true that the Interstate Commerce Commission has prescribed rules in this regard, but in the very nature of things these rules are capable of different interpretations; and I believe it to be true that if the accounts were kept in strict accordance with the spirit of these rules that the net revenues would be much more than they now apppear to be.

Fifth. This inquiry would not be complete without a reference to the actual standing of railroad securities in the markets or exchanges of the country and the institution of a comparison between the market values of railway stocks and those issued by industrial enterprises.

The claim is that the hand of the Government has been laid upon the railroads with such severity that their securities have no standing in the market; that they are unable to maintain their credit among investors, and therefore they seek to escape this measure of regulation and control.

The Wall Street Journal has been publishing for many years what is called the average daily prices of 20 active railway stocks and 12 industrial stocks.

I suppose there are a great many people in this country who believe that the railway credit has been destroyed, that their stocks and their bonds have almost disappeared from our exchanges and our market places, and that during the years that have gone by our regulation and supervision over railroads have done very much to impair their standing with the people who have money to invest. I am sure that what I am about to submit will be very interesting in view of that prevalent opinion.

The Wall Street Journal selected these railroads; I did not. The Wall Street Journal can not be accused of undue partiality for the position that I am endeavoring to maintain. I therefore submit this selection with a good deal of confidence.

The 20 railway common stocks used are: Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co., Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., Canadian Pacific Railway Co., Chicago & North Western Railway Co., Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., Delaware & Hudson Co., Erie Railroad Co., Illinois Central Railroad Co., Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., Missouri Pacific Railway Co., New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., Rock Island Co., Southern Pacific Co., Southern Railway Co., Norfolk & Western Railway Co., Northern Pacific Railway Co., Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Reading Co., and Union Pacific Railroad Co.

And the 12 industrial stocks used are: Amalgamated Copper Co., American Car & Foundry Co., American Smelting & Refining Co., American Sugar Refining Co., Central Leather Co., General Electric Co., National Lead Co., People's Gas, Light & Coke Co. of Chicago, United States Rubber Co., United Rubber Co. first preferred, United States Steel Co., and United States Steel Co. preferred.

The Wall Street Journal has assumed, and I think very properly, that an inquiry with regard to the fluctuation in the values of these stocks would lead to a fair conclusion respecting the standing of industrial stocks in our markets as compared with railway stocks.

I may say, in passing, that there have been some changes from time to time during the 20 years, but the publication has endeavored to keep the companies that were for various reasons substituted all the while representative.

The table before me shows the turning points of these securities from 1896 until the present time. I am dealing now with the average market prices of the stocks of these several companies. I begin with June 10, 1896. On that day the average market price of the 12 industrial stocks was $38.41 upon the basis of $100 par.

Now, remember, I have cited 12 of the best-known industrial stocks of the country. I mean those that are dealt with most commonly upon the New York Stock Exchange. Upon the same day the average price of the railroad stocks to which I have referred was $51.89 upon the basis of $100 par.

On June 17, 1896, the industrials rallied to $40.54 and the railways rallied to $55.36. Then follows every month from that time until the present time, sometimes two or three quotations in the same month, showing the average price of these 12 industrial stocks compared with the price of the 20 railway stocks.

It was not until May 1, 1901, that the average price of the railway stocks rose to par. We are not apt to think of 1901 as a period of great depression; we are apt to think of it as one of the most satisfactory years in business and industry that we have ever experienced in this country; and yet it was not until May 1, 1901, or about that time, that the average price of the railroad stocks of these 20 companies rose to par, and at the same time the average price of the 12 industrial stocks rose to $64.77. They had risen from $38.41 to $64.77 and the railroad stocks had risen from $51.89 to $117.86.

I will not pursue all these years. Sometimes they were under par, sometimes above par; but I come to January, 1914. On January 15, 1914, the average price of the 12 industrial stocks was $80.95 and the average price of the 20 railroad stocks was $106.65.

There has not been a year since 1906 in which the average price of the railway stocks of these 20 representative, typical railway stocks was not higher than the 12 industrial stocks. There has not been a month in that period in which the railway stocks have not been higher than the industrial stocks. There has not been a day since 1896 in which the railway stocks have not been higher upon the New York Stock Exchange than the typical industrial stocks.

With an average price of $106 for railroad stocks, admittedly swelled to bursting with water, overrun from time to time by exaggerated issues either to take up supposed additions to the value of the property or simply by main strength, I can not believe that when stocks of that kind hold their place steadily, even to the present moment, above par the people of this country have lost their confidence in the ability of the railway companies to earn a sufficient revenue.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to interject the remark that from the Senator's showing it seems to me these industrial concerns will need an advance of 5 per cent in their charges to the public rather than the railways.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator made any computation as between the preferred and common stock of the industrials? Of course the common stock, as the Senator knows, is usually water, or pretty much so. I was wondering if he has made, as I hope he may have done, a computation of the difference between the two classes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator possibly did not hear me. I would hesitate myself to select the railways and the industrial companies between which the comparison is to be instituted. It would be said that I was a partial judge. I have taken simply the comparison instituted by the Wall Street Journal, a record of which has been kept now for 20 years, and have presented it to the Senate and to the country for the purpose of showing that the railroad securities of the country—that is, the railroad stocks—not including the bonds, have always been high above any other stocks of that character. I suppose there are industrial stocks that hold a higher price than these railroad stocks, but when so experienced and capable a judge as the Wall Street Journal attempts to select 12 stocks that are typical of industry and 20 stocks that are typical of the railway business of the country, and finds that during the period from 1896, when we began to recover from a long depression, until this moment the railway stocks have always commanded the preference with the investing public, and when we find that since 1896 the railway stocks themselves have risen nearly 100 per cent and now are worth in the markets of the country, dollar for dollar, nearly twice as much as they were in 1896, I confess that I can not see the basis for this vehement complaint that railway securities have lost the confidence of the investing public.

The tables referred to are as follows:

RANGE OF PRICES ON INDUSTRIAL AND RAILWAY STOCKS.

(June 10, 1896, to February 28, 1914.)

The Wall Street Journal has been publishing for many years what is called "the daily average price of 20 active railway stocks and 12 industrials."

The 20 railway common stocks used are: Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co., Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., Canadian Pacific Railway Co., Chicago & North Western Railway Co., Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., Delaware & Hudson Co., Erie Railroad Co., Illinois Central Railroad Co., Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., Missouri Pacific Railway Co., New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., Rock Island Co., Southern Pacific Co., Southern Railway Co., Norfolk & Western Railway Co., Northern Pacific Railway Co., Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Reading Co., and Union Pacific Railroad Co.

The range of these prices is indicated by the following table, which has been compiled and furnished through the courtesy of Dow, Jones & Co., publishers of the Wall Street Journal, New York City:

NOTE.—The composite figures representing the market quotations on the various dates in the foregoing tables were compiled for the following companies for the times specified, the publishers of the Wall Street Journal exercising their judgment in the selection of representative active industrial and railroad stocks for the various periods of time, this being necessitated by stocks passing out of existence because of consolidations, receiverships, or other causes which changed the market for them and necessitated the substitution of representative stocks of a similar character enjoying an active market.

The original stocks used in making up the Dow-Jones averages were:

Industrials: American Cotton Oil, American Spirits Manufacturing, American Sugar, American Tobacco, Chicago Gas, General Electric, Laclede Gas, National Lead, Pacific Mail, Tennessee Coal & Iron, Standard Rope & Twine, United States Leather preferred.

Railroads: Atchison, Jersey Central, Chesapeake & Ohio, Chicago North Western, Burlington, St. Paul, Rock Island, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis, Erie, Lake Shore, Louisville & Nashville, Manhattan Elevated, Missouri, Kansas & Texas preferred, Missouri Pacific, New York Central, Ontario & Western, Northern Pacific preferred certificates, Reading, Southern Railway preferred, and Wabash preferred.

In November, 1897, People's Gas was substituted for Chicago Gas.

In July, 1898, Metropolitan Traction, Union Pacific common, and Northern Pacific common were substituted for Lake Shore, Ontario & Western, and Northern Pacific preferred, respectively.

In September, 1898, United States Rubber common was substituted for General Electric.

In April, 1899, the list of industrials was changed in several particulars, and in that month it was made up of American Cotton Oil, Consolidated Tobacco, Federal Steel, General Electric, United States Leather preferred, National Lead, Pacific Mail, People's Gas, United States Rubber common, American Steel & Wire, American Sugar, and Tennessee Coal & Iron.

In July, 1899, Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Denver & Rio Grande preferred, and Norfolk & Western preferred were substituted for Metropolitan Traction, Reading, and Erie.

Southern Pacific common and Union Pacific preferred displaced Wabash preferred and Norfolk & Western preferred in July, 1900.

In June, 1901, the 12 industrials were changed to Amalgamated Copper, American Sugar, Consolidated Tobacco, International Paper preferred, National Lead, People's Gas, American Smelting & Refining common, Tennessee Coal & Iron, American Smelting & Refining preferred, United States Rubber common, United States Steel common, and United States Steel preferred; and the railroads to Atchison, Jersey Central, Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Chesapeake & Ohio, North Western, Baltimore & Ohio, St. Paul, Rock Island, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis, Denver & Rio Grande preferred, Louisville & Nashville, Manhattan Elevated, Missouri, Kansas & Texas preferred, Missouri Pacific, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Illinois Central, Southern Railway, Union Pacific common, and Union Pacific preferred.

In January, 1902, United States Leather preferred, American Car & Foundry, and Colorado Fuel & Iron were substituted in the industrials for Consolidated Tobacco, International Paper preferred, and Smelters preferred.

In January, 1903, Canadian Pacific, Delaware & Hudson, and Reading were substituted for Jersey Central, Chesapeake & Ohio, and Rock Island, and Minneapolis & St. Louis was substituted for Missouri, Kansas & Texas preferred.

In June, 1904, Metropolitan Street Railway took the place of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis.

In May, 1905, Norfolk & Western and Northern Pacific were substituted for Manhattan Street Railway and Union Pacific preferred.

In April, 1905, United States Rubber first preferred took the place of United States Leather preferred.

In May, 1906, Twin City was substituted for Metropolitan Street Railway.

In November, 1907, General Electric took the place of Tennessee Coal & Iron.
In May, 1912, Rock Island and Lehigh Valley were substituted for Brooklyn Rapid Transit and Twin City.
In May, 1912, Central Leather common was substituted for Colorado Fuel & Iron.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator inserted, or is he going to insert, the particular industrials with which that comparison was made?

Mr. CUMMINS. I read them a moment ago.

Mr. BORAH. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will read them again.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator need not do that.

Mr. WARREN. As I understand, it has been from 38 and a fraction to 80 and a fraction.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Wyoming wait until I answer the question of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The 12 industrial stocks are Amalgamated Copper, American Car & Foundry Co., the American Smelting & Refining Co., the American Sugar Refining Co., the Central Leather Co., the General Electric Co., the National Lead Co., the People's Gas, Light & Coke Co. of Chicago, the United States Rubber Co., the United States Rubber Co. first preferred, the United States Steel Co., and the United States Steel Co. preferred. Those were the industrial companies chosen by the Journal in order to make the comparison—not chosen recently, not chosen since this controversy arose, but the selection was made prior, at least, to 1896; and in each issue every week since that time this comparison will be found in the Journal.

I have here a chart which shows the situation very graphically; and if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will help me hold it a moment, I think Senators can all see its general import. There [exhibiting] is a chart running over the period from 1896 to the present time. The upper line [indicating] is the line of these 20 railway stocks. One can see how the price has fluctuated from year to year, from time to time. The lower line [indicating] is the line representing the average price of 12 industrial stocks. I show it to you simply to put it beyond any controversy that there has never been a moment in this period in which the railway stocks were not above, and generally high above, the best-known industrial stocks of the country.

You will observe this closes in the middle of the year 1913 at this point [indicating]. Where I now point [indicating] illustrates the average height of the industrial stocks; where I now point [indicating] shows the average height of the railway stocks. This, supplemented by the quotation which I read as to the actual market prices in New York on the 15th of January—I have no information since that time—can leave no doubt with regard to the standing of railway stocks in the United States and in our markets.

There are certain railway companies that can not borrow money; I understand that perfectly well. There are certain railway companies that ought not to be able to borrow money until they are thoroughly reorganized and until some honesty is infused into their management. Our difficulty has been that we have reasoned from these few instances of dishonesty and conspicuous infidelity to the public interest to a general conclusion that the railway securities of the country are under the condemnation of the investing public. It is not true. I assert that the railroad securities of this country—and I will now confine myself to bonds—the railway bonds of the United States have fluctuated less in value than has any other security that is known to our market. These bonds have fluctuated less in 30 years than have the best securities of the English Government itself. That sounds almost unbelievable, but I make the assertion, after inquiry, that the bonds of the railways of the United States have fluctuated less in value than have the British consols. I anticipate a retort that a few years ago there was a change in the rate of interest paid upon British consols. So there was; I think that was along in 1893 or 1894; but taking the average price of British consols since that time, there has been a greater fluctuation in them than there has been in the railroad bonds of the United States, and British consols are at this moment lower proportionately than are the bonds of the railroad companies in this country. They are lower just now than they have been, I think, in 80 years, with possibly one exception.

We must all realize that there are other conditions than the regulation of corporations which affect business and affect the rate of interest and affect the confidence of the public, and we are apparently passing through a period that is full of those conditions. My only purpose is to show that, so far as our railroad companies are concerned, they have not been unjustly dealt with by the Government. On the other hand, the exercise of our power has been rather by way of protection and of maintenance than by way of destruction or of overthrow. I do not think that there is any property in the United States so safely anchored in the public confidence as is the railway property, for there are no other properties so essential to all phases of our industrial and social life. I would, if I could, destroy the effect of their own lack of faith. I have marveled that our railway managers, seemingly indifferent with respect to the consequences of their publications, have been sedulously teaching the people of this country that their properties were of no value; that the railroads were about to become bankrupt; that unless speedily lifted out of the depression into which they have fallen they must cease operation. I have marveled that men holding stations so responsible in the business of the United States should foster the feeling which has been created.

I submit, Senators, that as a whole the railroads of this country are now charging rates and securing revenues ample to care for all their securities in the markets of the country. I grant that they are experiencing depression; I grant that there is less to do now than there was a year ago; I deplore that they find it necessary to dismiss armies of workingmen; but they are not dismissing them because their rates are too low, for their revenues are sufficient; they are dismissing them because they have nothing for them to do. No change in rates will increase business. They must have something to haul in order to earn a revenue. If we can busy ourselves at Washington in reconstructing or rebuilding a fallen fabric of industry, we may accomplish something for the railways, but without that reconstruction it is idle to expect that their revenues can remain as they have been.

During the delivery of Mr. CUMMINS's speech.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order of business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask how that bill comes up to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It comes up under Rule X.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it was made the special order for a certain day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was; and the rule reads:

Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have no desire to interrupt the distinguished Senator from Iowa. I am in hope that this bill may be brought up at some other time and that it may have continuous consideration until it is disposed of. I accordingly ask that the special order be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is Senate bill 120—what is known as the grain-inspection bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not the bill to which the Senator from Montana refers?

Mr. WALSH. I am referring to Senate bill 4405—the radium bill—which was the special order at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has asked unanimous consent to lay it aside?

Mr. WALSH. I have.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interfere with what seems to be the favorite course of the Senate, which is to discuss matters which are not before the Senate and put matters which are before the Senate in arrears. I shall not object at this time, but I give notice that hereafter, even when speeches are being made, if there is unfinished business of the Senate to be attended to and the speech is not being made upon the subject matter which ought to be engaging the attention of the Senate, I shall object. I have not thought it right to do so now, because I had given no notice of any such intention; but I think we are falling too much into the habit of giving notice beforehand that speeches will be made, farming out the time of the Senate for that purpose, without reference to the unfinished business upon the calendar. There are two measures that are unfinished yet, neither one having been voted upon. One is at almost its final issue and the other is in the course of progress to its issue.

I shall not object at this time to the request made by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President a parliamentary inquiry. The radium bill was made the special order for April 10, 1914, at 1 o'clock p. m. At 1 o'clock p. m. on that day it was called up. The parliamentary inquiry I desire to submit is under what rule does the special order come up at 1 o'clock upon any succeeding day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair read the rule once this morning, and thinks there can be absolutely no doubt about it. It is Rule X. Unless it becomes the unfinished business it remains the special order at 1 o'clock until it does become the unfinished business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The rule provides that—

Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day.

It is perfectly plain that the bill should have been and was properly laid before the Senate at 1 o'clock on the 10th.

And if it is not finally disposed of on that date it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

I do not understand by that rule that the bill comes up automatically each day at 1 o'clock, because the effect of that would be to make it the unfinished business coming up at 1 o'clock every day with another piece of unfinished business coming up at 2 o'clock. It simply takes its place upon the Special Calendar in the order of time at which it was made special. The rule means, as I understand it, that if there are two special orders and this bill was first made the special order it would come up first, but I do not understand that there is any rule under which it may be brought up automatically at 1 o'clock each day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled on Friday as the Chair has ruled again to-day. The Chair has no pride of opinion about this matter. The Senate makes its own rules. If the construction of the Chair is, in the opinion of the Senate, incorrect, an appeal from the decision of the Chair will reverse the ruling. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the bill is the special order for 1 o'clock each day until it is either disposed of or becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest that section 2 of Rule X seems to fully support the view of the Chair on that proposition, because it says:

When two or more special orders have been made for the same time, they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate.

It would seem that section 2 supports the Chair in the proposition that the bill comes up each day at 1 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Section 2 of the rule, as I understand it, simply applies to the first day on which the bill has been made the special order, that is all; in this case to Friday, the 10th. If we had made this bill the special order for 1 o'clock and following that had made another bill the special order for 1 o'clock the same day, this bill would have taken precedence; but the rule, as I understand it, has no application whatever to the succeeding day upon which the calendar may be called.

I do not desire to prolong the discussion at this time, but when the matter comes up again I shall ask for the action of the Senate upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to know what is meant by laying the special order aside now.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that as far as I can remember when a bill has been made a special order for a certain day and is not disposed of on that calendar day, it then ceases to be the special order for the succeeding day or any day thereafter. That is as I remember the practice of the Senate. I also understand that whenever a special order is laid aside, either by unanimous consent or by a vote of the Senate, it ceases to be a special order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already said that the Senate has a right to make its own rules, but the Chair must exercise some judgment and discretion. As the Chair stated, the Chair has no pride of opinion about it. If a special order made for one day is a special order for only that day, the balance of the rule amounts to nothing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was about to make a suggestion that I thought would be agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, so that he might conclude his remarks. It was to ask unanimous consent that this matter be passed over for the present without prejudice, so that it may have to-morrow whatever position and advantage it has at present, under the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was the inquiry of the Chair as to whether that was the purpose of the request.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In order to make it clear——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the special order will go over until to-morrow without prejudice. If the ruling of the Chair is correct, it will be the special order at 1 o'clock to-morrow, and if the Senate thinks the ruling of the Chair is not correct, it will dispose of the question at that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and equally so to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], for the opportunity that they have given me to finish what I have to say upon the subject on which I am addressing the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. CUMMINS's speech,

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 120.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

[Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois whether he desires to conclude his remarks this evening, or will he yield for an executive session?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield for an executive session.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, upon the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], I will address the Senate on the pending grain-inspection bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 14, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 13, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, ever ready to hear and answer the prayers of those who seek Thee diligently, teach us, we beseech Thee, the beauty of holiness, that we may live together in peace and harmony. Strengthen us for the new duties of this day, that with clear conceptions, pure motives, and earnest endeavors we may strive for the mastery. That Thy kingdom may speedily come and Thy will be done in all our hearts. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. On the 4th day of July next 88 years will have passed since the great spirit of Jefferson winged its flight to the better world. The author of the Declaration of Independence died on the fiftieth anniversary of that immortal document, and his body was laid to rest in the bosom of the "Old Dominion," at his beloved Monticello. No monuments of bronze or marble are needed to perpetuate the fame of the father of democracy; no tablet of brass or stone is necessary upon which to preserve the story of his patriotic deeds. His fame is secure in the hearts and minds of his countrymen, and his patriotic and unselfish work for humanity constitutes the foundation stones of the Republic.

So long as that immortal document—the Declaration of Independence—shall be read by men; so long as democratic principles shall find an advocate; so long as the Republic shall survive; so long as human liberty shall exist upon the earth, just so long will the name of Thomas Jefferson be revered and loved. But, Mr. Speaker, while we can add nothing to the imperishable honor and fame of Thomas Jefferson, we can honor ourselves in the performance of a simple duty we owe him. His birth place is unmarked. The place where Jefferson was born should be known to all patriotic Americans and a suitable tablet placed upon the spot where the father of constitutional liberty was given to humanity. It is sacred ground. With this end in view I ask unanimous consent to introduce the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That a commission, to be composed of the President of the United States, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be, and the same is hereby, created for the purpose of investigating and suggesting to the Congress of the United States some proper and suitable tablet or memorial to permanently mark the birthplace of Thomas Jefferson, at Old Shadwell, in the State of Virginia. Said commission is authorized to examine plans and designs and to select a suitable plan or design to suggest to Congress for adoption and make report thereof at as early a day as may be practicable, together with such inscription to be placed thereon as they may deem advisable, and the amount of money necessary to secure and place the same in position.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expense of said commission in the performance of its duties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, on account of the interference with other business, I object.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 13765. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4544. An act to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Caribou National Forest Reserve; and

H. R. 12169. An act providing for an additional appropriation for a public building in the city of Monroe, N. C.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10138) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of such soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 516).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10138) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 7, 11, 35, 40, 45, 47.

JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. A. M. ADAIR,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
N. P. BRYAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was agreed to.

RAILROAD FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of House resolution 447.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 447.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, the cause and reason why the Interstate Commerce Commission has failed to grant an increase in freight rates to the railroads where no objection to such increase has been filed, and where the shippers have requested that an increase be granted on the ground that they were just and equitable.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. ADAMSON. That it is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. ADAMSON. It calls for an opinion; and, in the second place, the President has nothing to do with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The information is not peculiarly within the knowledge of the President. It would require an independent investigation on his part.

Mr. ADAMSON. He is not supposed to run the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this calls for the "cause and reason," and that is not a question of fact.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reads:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, the cause and reason why the Interstate Commerce Commission has failed to grant an increase of freight rates to the railroads—

And so forth. The Chair thinks that that is not in order.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, there is a ruling of Mr. Cannon, who, as Speaker, ruled on a resolution similar to this.

The SPEAKER. That ruling does not show what Speaker Cannon ruled on.

Mr. LEVY. In volume 3 of Hinds' Precedents, section 1864, appears this authority:

On January 29, 1906, Mr. Oscar W. Gillespie, of Texas, claiming the floor for a privileged question, moved to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from consideration of the following resolution of inquiry, which had been referred to that committee more than one week previously:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, all the facts within the knowledge of the Interstate Commerce Commission which shows or tends to show that there exists at this time, or heretofore within the last 12 months has existed, a combination or arrangement between the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., the Pennsylvania Co., the Norfolk & Western Railway Co., the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., the Northern Central Railway Co., and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., or any two or more of said railroad companies, in violation of the act passed July 2, 1890, and entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' or acts amendatory thereof."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, whenever anyone does get one of these resolutions in that is out of order, I want to suggest the reduction of freight rates where they are too high.

The SPEAKER. This resolution cited by the gentleman from New York is not on all fours with the pending resolution. In the Gillespie resolution the President of the United States is requested to report all the facts. Of course that would be in order; but this is a resolution to report information as to the "cause and reason," and it would take an investigation to obtain that information. The Chair sustains the point of order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering legislation for the District of Columbia.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman allow me, pending that motion, to ask unanimous consent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana upon what subject?

Mr. DUPRÉ. It is a memorial adopted by the city council of the city of New Orleans relating to regional banks.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. BARNHART objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

TAXATION OF REAL ESTATE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 12873) relating to the assessment for taxation of real estate in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, may I now, without losing any of my rights, reserve the remainder of my time for use later by myself?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PROUTY rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and six Members present; a quorum.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE], but on account of an amendment offered by myself and adopted by the committee he has renounced it and is now opposing it.

I am visibly embarrassed by the situation. I suddenly find myself jostling and caressing a foundling that was left on the steps of the District Committee by its putative father, left abandoned, deserted, and disinherited. The committee has adopted the little one and will do its best to care for it, although that care necessarily can not be so loving and gracious as that which could have been bestowed by its real parent. It seems rather cold and inhuman for a parent to abandon his child because it has met with an accident and become slightly disfigured, and may we not trust that the bringing together of parent and child in this presence may reinspire parental instinct so that before the close of this hearing we may again find this little one in the fondling arms of its kind father.

This bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] was wisely designed to secure an equitable assessment of real estate at its fair value. More than two years ago a subcommittee from the Committee on the District of Columbia was charged with the duty of making a careful examination of the taxation problem. This committee filed its report on August 20, 1912. It was a most complete and thorough examination of the whole question, and this committee has rendered a great service not merely to Congress but to the whole country. The report showed clearly the gross injustice and inequalities in the assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia not only as compared with itself but as compared with other classes of property. On page 13 the report says:

> On personal property the tax rate is 1½ per cent of the full true value. On real estate the tax rate as applied is less. The commissioners call it 1½ per cent on two-thirds of the value, which would make the rate 1 per cent, if the assessor had assessed the true value. But he has not. The assessment shows approximately but 44 per cent of the true value, so that the 1½ per cent on a theoretical two-thirds reduces itself to 0.66⅔ of 1 per cent on the true valuation. Therefore, the real tax rate, which looks like one dollar in a hundred, turns out to be only 66⅔ cents on the $100.
> Or 6.65 mills on the actual value.

DIFFERENT CLASSES OF REAL ESTATE.

The report of this committee also revealed the fact that there was a gross discrimination in the assessment of different kinds of real estate. This report divided the city into sections for the purpose of comparison. It found that section 1, composed of small homes, was assessed at about 75 per cent of its actual true value, which was higher than the rate fixed by law. It found that in sections 2, 3, and 4, being the area occupied by the middle classes, the assessment was approximately 60 per cent of the actual true value; that in section 5, being the area occupied by fine residences, the assessment was 40 per cent of the true value; that in section 6, being known as the business area, real estate was assessed at about 45 per cent of the true value; that in sections 7, 8, 9, and 10 of the city, known as the suburban or speculative area, property was assessed at about 45 per cent of its actual true value. This situation is indefensible and intolerable in any city and especially in the capital of the Nation. There can be no justification in the practice of assessing higher relatively the humble homes of the poor than the magnificent homes of the rich. There can be no justification of the practice in vogue here of assessing the homes of the poor and the middle classes at a much higher rate than lucrative and profitable business property, and there certainly can be no just excuse for assessing property held for speculative purposes at a lower rate than that occupied by actual homes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. How long has this system of taxation been going on?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, of course it is not possible for me to tell. I was not on the subcommittee that made this report. I am quoting from the figures of the committee that prepared it, and I have the splendid privilege and satisfaction of quoting from the gentleman who is now opposed to the measure that I am advocating. The purpose of this bill is to correct, as far as possible, these inequalities and discriminations.

Mr. MADDEN. Will it interfere with the gentleman's trend of thought if I ask him a question?

Mr. PROUTY. No; not if the gentleman simply asks a question, but I have not the time to yield for speeches.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not in the habit of making speeches in other gentlemen's time.

Mr. PROUTY. No; the gentleman from Illinois is very kind about that.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know, if the gentleman can state it, how the committee which made this report reached the conclusion that 45 per cent of the actual value was the basis of assessment in some cases, 60 per cent in other cases, 75 per cent in other cases, and 66 per cent in other cases. How do they know what the actual value is? That is what I want to find out.

Mr. PROUTY. Of course I have already stated I was not on that committee; but I have read their report, and I know they have spent practically a year's time in determining it, and they determine it like anybody else would determine it, upon a very careful personal investigation of the facts and circumstances. Of course no man's judgment is absolutely perfect. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE], who prepared the report, is on his feet, and if he wishes I will let him answer that question.

Mr. GEORGE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any dispute between the majority and the minority in respect to a full-value assessment.

Mr. PROUTY. There is not; we are perfectly in accord on that proposition, and I will point out to the House a little later where our paths diverge.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has not answered the question which I asked him.

Mr. PROUTY. I have answered it the best I could. I have said that it is upon a personal careful consideration of the facts, and they spent practically a year's time in doing it.

Mr. MADDEN. How can anybody tell what the actual value of the property is?

Mr. PROUTY. Ask omniscience, not me.

Mr. MADDEN. But the committee comes in with a statement——

Mr. PROUTY. If the gentleman from Illinois will read the report; I have not the time to read it, as it is 150 pages long. I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. My object was to ask the gentleman from New York to explain the report, particularly showing the difference in the value of the property. If the gentleman is going to make a speech in his own time, I will not ask the question now.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not care to take up the time of the gentleman from Iowa now.

Mr. PROUTY. I desire to be very courteous in this matter, but the gentleman will have an hour's time in his own right. I am using his figures, and I certainly ought not to be accused of partiality when I use my opponent's figures. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT. What means are resorted to or used for the purpose of ascertaining the value for the purpose of taxing property at its two-thirds value here in the District of Columbia? By what means do the assessors undertake to do it?

Mr. PROUTY. Under the law as it now is in force the assessor, through a board of assistant assessors, undertakes to pass upon the value by going and seeing it.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the rate of taxation is limited to $1.50?

Mr. PROUTY. It is limited to $1.50 on two-thirds of the value, or 10 mills on the actual value.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it fixed at $1.50, so it does not exceed $1.50?

Mr. PROUTY. It does not exceed $1.50.

Mr. CROSSER. It is fixed at a dollar and a half.

Mr. PROUTY. I am not going into an argument with my friend as to the technical reading of the law. It can not be assessed more than 15 mills.

Mr. BARTLETT. I was asking for information solely.

Mr. PROUTY. I recognize my friend's right to ask the question, but the gentleman and myself do not exactly agree on the construction of a certain section of the statute.

Mr. KINDEL. I will ask you if they utilized the Summer system or the Wagner system of taxation?

Mr. PROUTY. Will you not reserve those questions for the gentleman who has prepared the report?

Mr. KINDEL. I thought you knew.

Mr. PROUTY. As I have repeatedly said, I am not a member of that committee, and have nothing to do with it. I was not even a member of the District Committee when that committee was appointed, and I am simply compelled to accept their figures. With my very high personal regard for the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE], knowing his conservatism, his candor, and care, I feel warranted in accepting his figures without further serious question.

Mr. KINDEL. I only asked the question in line with the question asked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. This inequality of assessment on a two-thirds basis is due to the mistakes and lack of judgment of the assessors, is it not?

Mr. PROUTY. I would not like to go into the discussion I really have in my heart on that subject. It would take all of my hour to state all of my sincere convictions on that question. But I will say in a word that since I have been a member of this committee and have been investigating the relations between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, one thing has ever stood out prominently in every investigation that I have made, and that is that there has been a certain little plunderbund set of fellows that has controlled the situation largely for their own advantage and benefit.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. And that sinister influence has been brought to bear on the assessors?

Mr. PROUTY. Whether it has been brought to bear or not, they have been made to feel it keenly, and no one can go back over the history of the District of Columbia without being impressed with that fact. But I do not want to go into that fact. I am trying to keep myself down to the cold facts that I know.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. The only object of my question is, if the gentleman will permit, that if that influence is present under the present system, have you guarded against that influence if the assessment is made on a full valuation?

Mr. PROUTY. We have tried to do so. No man can ever get away from that influence, but if you just take the situation as it is now in this District, can anybody doubt the conclusion to be drawn from it? When a poor man's property is assessed at 75 cents on the dollar, and the rich men who live in these magnificent homes—men who own these thousands of acres of land around here, which they are holding for speculative purposes—are assessed at practically one-half, can anyone doubt where the influence comes from?

I have been led to make these strictures without any intention on my part, but the facts are here and any man who wants to read can find them out. As was intimated by a question from Mr. GEORGE——

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit one interruption?

Mr. PROUTY. For a question.

Mr. COOPER. When the fact of the overassessment of the poor man's property and the underassessment of the rich man's property was brought out before the committee, what excuse was made?

Mr. PROUTY. I have given the reasons. The first was that they did not have time to make up the assessment, they did not have enough fellows to assist; and the other was that it came triennially, so they could not reach the increment.

Mr. COOPER. If they had as much time to make a rich man's assessment as a poor man's assessment, what reason did they give for the discrimination?

Mr. PROUTY. I have been up against this proposition, as you know, and no man connected with the assessor's department or any other department of this city has given any other reasons than I have given to this House. It leaves the House and myself the right to draw our own conclusions.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. PROUTY. I do.

Mr. FALCONER. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not think the citizens of the District of Columbia ought to have the privilege of the franchise, to put them on the same basis as other people?

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, there is no question about that. Taxation without representation is just as indefensible as representation without taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman put in his speech that chart that he has on the blackboard?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

The bill provides that all real estate must be assessed at its actual, true value without any reference to the nature of its ownership or occupancy. This bill if enacted into law and carried into effect would, in a large measure, remove the discrimination between the wealthy and the poor classes of citizens which has been very much apparent for many years. The assessor of the city claims that this discrimination has grown up very largely from the fact that he has not had a sufficient assessing force to properly do the work. This bill furnishes him with an ample force of assessors and creates a system and organization by which these inequalities can be corrected if properly handled by the assessor and his assistants in good faith.

UNDERVALUATION.

This bill is intended to correct another very serious abuse, and that is the general undervaluation of real estate. The last assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia amounted to about $340,000,000. The committee that made this investigation found that the actual cash value at a very conservative basis was $744,000,000. On page 18 of the report they say:

> The total taxable realty values of the District of Columbia fixed by your committee at $744,000,000 falls well within the sum indicated by a forthcoming census bulletin.

They say the Government's estimate is $31,000,000 in excess of this. It is the purpose of this bill to have real estate assessed at its actual, true value. One of the things that has prevented, in a measure, that kind of assessment is the fact that heretofore assessments have been triennial. This bill provides for annual assessments. This provision will aid very materially in catching the increment of value on property that rises rapidly. There are sections of the city where property has more than doubled in value in the last three years, and triennial assessments are not calculated to reach this sudden increase.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. In stating the totals of your value of real estate in the District you are excluding Government property?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. I assumed so, but I wanted it to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. PROUTY. The actual amount is something over $1,300,000,000. But $744,000,000 is the property held in private ownership, not including parks and things of that kind.

Mr. SISSON. Has the gentleman an estimate of the real and personal property exclusive of Government property?

Mr. PROUTY. I have given it—$744,000,000 as the real estate.

COMMITTEE A UNIT.

Up to this point I believe I am warranted in saying the Committee on the District of Columbia is a unit. The bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from New York, however, made no reference to either tangible or intangible personal property. It did not change or affect the rate now in force under the act of 1902. It left the assessment of tangible personal property still at 15 mills on the dollar, while it provided that the rate on real estate should be fixed from time to time by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The majority of the members of our committee, however, believed that it was grossly unjust to have real estate assessed at a lower rate than personal property, and an amendment creating absolute equality in rates is contained in the amendment to this bill as favorably reported by the majority of the committee. The law now assesses tangible personal property at 15 mills on the dollar. A mere glance at the financial situation of the District of Columbia would show that if it was only intended to collect enough money in the District to represent its one-half of the budget, that real estate would necessarily be assessed at a very low rate, probably not to exceed 7 mills on the dollar, or one-half at most of the rate assessed on tangible personal property. The majority members of this committee deemed that unfair and indefensible, and have put in an amendment fixing the rate on personal and real property at the same figure without specifically naming the rate. The majority members of the committee were not able to find any sound, humane, or economic reason for putting a heavier burden of taxation on personal property than upon real property. There are people who honestly believe that all taxes should be levied on real estate or ground values, but no one has ever contended that real estate should bear a lower rate of taxation than tangible personal property. And yet this bill, as it came to the committee, clearly and unequivocally both recognized and enforced that inequality.

Under the law now in force intangible personal property is not assessed at all. Stocks, bonds, moneys, and credits entirely escape taxation in this jurisdiction, and the original bill continued that exemption. The majority members of this committee have not been able to see any good reason why moneys and credits should not bear their just proportion of the burdens of taxation. Under what is commonly called the organic act this class of property was assessable and continued assessable up to the year 1902. Since that time this class of property has not paid any taxes in the District. As a result of this situation a vast amount of hoarded surplus wealth has migrated toward this District. The fact that moneys and credits were thus exempt from taxation in this District while assessable in practically every other jurisdiction in the United States has induced men possessed of a large amount of this class of wealth to make Washington at least their technical home. There are many men possessed of a large amount of wealth that have made Washington their technical home for no other purpose than that of escaping taxation at their real home. This situation is accentuated by the fact that there is no inheritance tax in the District of Columbia, while there is such a tax in almost every other jurisdiction. There is probably now no city in the United States of its size that has as much of this class of wealth as the city of Washington. The exact amount of it, of course, is not known, but it certainly amounts to several hundreds of millions of dollars. It is currently reported that there are two men who make their technical residence in Washington who have more than $100,000,000 of this class of property in safety vaults of the city. There is no possible defense of a policy that exempts that class of property from bearing its just proportion of the expenses of the local government. These men secure as much benefit to themselves personally and as much protection to their property as do any other class of citizens, and there is no just reason why it should be exempt from carrying its just proportion of the public expense. The majority members of the committee fully recognize the fact that it is difficult to find and assess this class of property, but they feel, and feel keenly, that that is no reason why an attempt, at least, should not be made to reach and assess it. Upon the very broadest principle of justice and fairness to all of our people the Federal Government has no right to create an isle to which the rich can fly to escape local taxation. It is unfair to other municipalities and jurisdictions, even though it might be of possible advantage to the District of Columbia. But it is not fair to the people of the District of Columbia. There is no justification of a policy that levies taxes upon the teams, tools, and machinery of the poor man with which he habitually earns his living and exempts from taxation the wealth of men who get their living from the earnings of stocks and bonds in which they have invested their accumulated wealth. No nation, no State, no municipality that wants to be fair can continue that discrimination.

There is doubtless at least $100,000,000 of this kind of capital now escaping taxation that could and would be reached with the proper enforcement of the provisions of this act. This, assessed at 15 mills on the dollar, would produce $1,500,000 of revenue. The District of Columbia last year collected $2,187,000 from taxes on personal property, licenses, and so forth. If there is in the District of Columbia $744,000,000 worth of real estate when assessed at its true value, as reported by the George committee, then, if it were assessed at 15 mills on the dollar, it would produce $11,160,000; or, in other words, if you would assess all the property in the District of Columbia at 15 mills on the dollar, it would produce substantially $14,837,000. Here arises the embarrassment of the situation. Every man that has investigated the subject of taxation in other municipalities knows that 15 mills on the dollar is a very low rate of taxation. The average rate of all the cities of the United States of the class of Washington is approximately 19 mills on the dollar. And your committee was, and Congress is now, squarely facing the proposition as to whether or not the people of the District of Columbia are entitled to have a lower rate of taxation on their property than is paid by the average citizen of the United States similarly situated. There has been no reason suggested to my mind why a citizen living in the District of Columbia and holding property here should pay a less rate of taxation than men living in cities elsewhere. It will be noted by the figures that I have just quoted that if the property in the District of Columbia was assessed as it is assessed elsewhere it would raise more than enough to meet the entire budget expenses of the District of Columbia. Congress is squarely confronted with the proposition of providing a much lower rate of taxation in the District of Columbia than that paid elsewhere or reducing the amount to be contributed by the Federal Government. I, for one, believe that before this people have any just right to call upon the remaining people of the United States to contribute to the support of their purely local affairs they must pay substantially as high a rate as the persons from whom they ask and demand contribution.

TAXATION BASED ON PRESENT ASSESSED VALUATION.

I have so far discussed this question based on the facts collected and set forth in the so-called George report. I have done this designedly. The encomiums that the local press and local organizations have heaped upon that gentleman during the last month I thought would make it rather embarrassing for them to call in question the accuracy and impartiality of his figures; but, for fear that some one might be disposed to repudiate his figures and conclusions, I wish to spend just a moment in showing you the situation when based on the assessor's figures. The present actual value of real estate in the District of Columbia, as will be shown by the forthcoming assessor's report, will be about $570,000,000. This, assessed the same as elsewhere, at 19 mills on the dollar, as I will presently show, would produce:

Actual value of real estate in District of Columbia, assessed at 19 mills	$10,830,000.00
Moneys and credits ($100,000,000 worth)	1,900,000.00
Collected last year from tangible personal property taxes	1,130,840.52
From penalties and interest on delinquent taxes	45,802.31
Licenses and other miscellaneous collections	1,010,648.92
Total	14,917,291.75

The committee of one hundred knows full well that if property in the District of Columbia was taxed substantially the same as it is taxed in other cities it would produce over $15,000,000, while it requires about $14,000,000 to pay all expenses. But even this item includes $938,000 for pavements and sidewalks. This has no legitimate place in the general budget. The bulk, at least, of this expense should be assessed against abutting property owners.

These cold facts can not be successfully contradicted. The newspapers of the city of Washington and the Chamber of Commerce try to avoid the effect of these figures in two ways: First, they say that real estate in the city of Washington is assessed higher proportionately than in other cities. There is no general data at command to either prove or contradict that statement. These figures are based on the law in force in various jurisdictions and reduced to actual cash value. It is possible that some other cities do not assess full value even when it is required by law. It is sure that it is not done in the District of Columbia, if we accept the George report as substantially correct. While the law has required that it shall be assessed at 66⅔ per cent of its actual true value, that report says that it is assessed at only 44 per cent of its true value, which, when reduced to full value, makes it only 66⅔ per cent of its actual true value. I hardly think that other cities exceed that reduction.

The above figures are based on the 66⅔ per cent valuation. None of the newspapers and none of the documents of the chamber of commerce have called in question the fact that property in similar cities elsewhere is assessed at an average of about 19 mills on the dollar; but they try to make a showing for the city of Washington by changing to another basis, namely, the per capita assessment; and they quote figures quite successfully to show that the per capita tax of Washington is substantially as large as the per capita tax elsewhere. But that is begging the whole question. In this country we do not levy a per capita tax, but a property tax. The census of the United States shows the people of Washington to be the wealthiest people per capita of any city in the United States of its size, and of course the taxes per capita would necessarily be higher. To illustrate my thought, suppose that all the property in the city of Washington belonged to 10 men. The rate might be very low on property and yet the per capita tax would be extremely high.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN MAJORITY AND MINORITY BILLS.

Since the majority report has been filed the minority has filed a minority report and a minority bill. This report and bill correct one defect in the original bill introduced by Mr. GEORGE, namely, it purports to assess personal and real estate at the same rate. But it continues two of the defects in the original bill. First, it entirely exempts from taxation moneys, credits, stocks, and bonds. I shall await with some patience to hear a good reason why this class of property should be exempt from taxation in the District of Columbia while it is taxed practically everywhere else in the United States. Second, it leaves the rate of taxation to be fixed by the commissioners instead of continuing the rate, as provided in the organic act, of 15 mills on the dollar. My amendment to the original George bill contemplated the retaining by Congress of the power to fix the rate of taxation, and for the time being it was left where it was left in the organic act; that is, 15 mills on the dollar. I do not believe that there is a candid Member on the floor of this House that does not believe that property ought to be assessed in the District of Columbia substantially as it is assessed elsewhere. The average rate of taxation in like cities as Washington is 19 mills on the actual cash value of property. I here set out a list of the leading cities with the tax rate levied on the actual value:

Average, 19 mills.

Can anyone give me a good reason why a man should be allowed to own property in Washington and pay a less rate of taxation than he would in other cities? Should not he pay substantially the same before he has the right to call on the American people for help? My amendment does not propose anything unfair, and there is not a candid man on this floor nor in the District that will say that it does. It provides for the assessment of real estate and personal property on the same basis of 15 mills on the actual value. It provides for the including in personal property of moneys, credits, stocks, bonds, and so forth. What is causing, therefore, all this clamor? What has brought into existence the committee of one hundred? What has caused this continued discussion in the newspapers and commercial exchanges of this city? What has caused them to send out millions of misleading circulars to create a backfire? It is not because they can or will say that a single one of the propositions contained in my amendment is unjust or unfair. But this is a shrewd people. They easily scented from afar the situation that my bill would produce. It would demonstrate this: That if property in the District was assessed substantially as it is elsewhere, it would produce enough revenue to more than meet the present needs of the District of Columbia, and consequently do away with their claim for contribution of $7,000,000 a year from the Federal Government. The people of Washington are shrewd men. They realized that they did not dare to let that kind of a showing be made. They have always played the part of the wily miser that hides and conceals his wealth so that he may have a face for asking alms.

Now, let us see what would happen if the bill as recommended by the minority should pass. The District's share of the budget is about $7,000,000. Last year the District collected $2,356,451 from gross income tax, licenses, and so forth. That would leave $4,643,549 to be collected from a levy on real estate. If assessed at its true value, according to the George report, at $744,000,000, it would only require a levy of 6.3 mills. In other words, if it was left to the District Commissioners to fix the rate, they could not fix a rate at more than 6.3 mills without creating a surplus. Now, this presents the real question and the real situation. Is Congress willing to vote for a proposition with its eyes wide open that would allow real estate here to escape with taxation at 6.3 mills on actual value while it pays practically 19 mills elsewhere? Or, putting the proposition still more accurately, is it willing to tax the people of the United States, that now are carrying a heavy burden of taxation, so as to create a gratuity for this people that would reduce the taxes to practically 6.3 mills? That is the question, gentlemen. You may not see it, but the committee of one hundred sees it. In these figures I have still left out the $100,000,000 or more of moneys and credits that should be assessed. If they are included, it would reduce the rate to 5.7 mills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the tax now collected in the District of Columbia would amount to six mills and a fraction on the full value of the property?

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman correctly understood me.

Mr. MANN. Is that correct?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; assuming the George report to be correct.

Mr. MANN. And if you should add to that the one-half paid by the General Government, the total amount used for expenditure would be something less than 14 mills on the dollar for the total expenditures in the District?

Mr. PROUTY. It would be about 14 mills.

Mr. MANN. That is quite a tribute to the form of government of the District, is it not?

Mr. PROUTY. It is.

Mr. MANN. Is there any other city in the United States that begins to have as good a government, so economically administered? Take the gentleman's city of Des Moines, where the rate is 22 mills on the dollar, nearly twice as much as the total expenditures on his basis in the District. I would ask the gentleman if the government in Des Moines, in his judgment, is quite as efficient and beneficial as the District government here?

Mr. PROUTY. I will answer that question fairly and squarely. Des Moines—and I am using that as my home town—has just been going through the period of home development; in the position that the District of Columbia was in in 1874 and 1878, when she had an indebtedness of $25,000,000, with a very small tax rate, at the time Congress came in and helped her out. The District has its buildings now largely erected. It has its streets paved. Des Moines is just going through this process of marvelous development, and I will go on record and say that if the Federal Government will do in the city of Des Moines what it has done in the District of Columbia I will guarantee that in 30 years we will be able to run our city government as cheaply or more cheaply than the Federal Government is running the city of Washington.

Mr. MANN. One question further, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does this taxation rate that the gentleman gives to Des Moines represent only the present tax rate or the reasonable average for a number of years, or is this an exceptional tax rate, and has the tax rate here been so much less than that at Des Moines that 13 mills would represent both the local and State taxes there while these improvements were being made?

Mr. PROUTY. This rate is substantially what it has been for 10 years. I would not say it is exactly the same, because everybody knows it has fluctuated back and forth, but it has been during the time we were going through the process of development—paving streets and extending our lines in all directions. Nevertheless, it is substantially the same as it has been for 10 years.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the 22.2 mills in Des Moines include street paving and sidewalks and all other general improvements?

Mr. PROUTY. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Then that would be added to it.

Mr. PROUTY. It would be added to it in addition to the 22.2 mills. Here I will say that property in Iowa is assessed at one-fourth of its value. The actual rate paid on that assessed value in Des Moines is 88.8 mills, which reduced to the rate on the actual value is 22.2; and having lived there for 20 years or more, I say that that represents the actual cash value as nearly as human judgment can make it.

Mr. MADDEN. How much would the pavement of the streets and the construction of sewers and the building of the sidewalks add to the 22.2 mills?

Mr. PROUTY. Of course, it is impossible to determine that accurately.

Mr. MADDEN. You could reach an average, could you not?

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, I might, but I have not attempted it.

Mr. MADDEN. It would be very greatly in excess of the amount we are paying here all told, would it not?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And is Des Moines as well paved, as well cleaned, as well kept, as well managed, as well policed, as well protected from fire as is the District of Columbia?

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, well, I do not like to boast of my city. I am too modest.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it better?

Mr. PROUTY. It is quite as well done.

Mr. MADDEN. But at a much higher price.

Mr. PROUTY. It is better lighted than the city of Washington.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I see I am going to let you fellows use up all my time; but go ahead.

Mr. GOOD. On your chart there I notice you state the taxes in Des Moines to be 22.2 mills.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. That does not include any taxes that are assessed as county taxes, does it?

Mr PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Does it include school taxes?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; it includes all the taxes we have to pay.

Mr. GOOD. Does it include county taxes?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. You do not have to pay county taxes ordinarily in a city.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; we do.

Mr. BRYAN. You do not in my State.

Mr. PROUTY. While that question is before the minds of the Members of this House I want to call your attention to a fact that to my mind is very important, and that is that while the people in practically every other municipality in the United States have to pay a part of the revenue that they collect from their own property for the benefit of the State and county in which they live, in Washington the people do not have to raise any money for anybody except themselves.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not this equivalent to a State?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; it is equivalent to a State, with somebody else paying the bills of the State. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. But the combined payments here are about one-third of the payments made in your town.

Mr. PROUTY. You will notice that the rate in my town is pretty high. Some of them are lower. But looking at the chart, I want to call your attention to one thing, and that is that Washington is paying just about one-half on her real estate and other property that other cities are paying. And further, I wish to call your attention to the fact that there is no city in the United States that pays as low a rate as do the people of the city of Washington, and that is caused specifically, as anyone can figure, by reason of the contributions to this municipality which are collected from the very men who are paying more than twice as much at home as these people are paying here.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. SISSON. Ten mills here represent only one-half of the amount of money expended in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PROUTY. It would be 20 mills if it were all charged to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SISSON. While the other figures on the chart represent the entire amount expended.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; all except special assessments. These figures do not represent special assessments for the other cities, while in the District of Columbia the 10 mills does represent special assessments, with the Federal Government paying 10 mills and the District paying 10 mills, making 20 mills that actually goes into the operations of this city; and you will notice that that just about equates with the general run of assessments all over the United States. Because in addition to the 19 mills on an average paid by other cities there is a special tax levied against the abutting property owners for special assessments, whereas here it goes into the general fund and is paid out of the general fund. To give you the exact figures, we pay out in the District of Columbia $938,000 for paving, sidewalks, and curbing, and constructing roads in this city in front of other men's property.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I want to know for my own information whether or not in addition to the rates displayed on the chart these various cities contribute to county and State taxes, or is that the municipal tax?

Mr. PROUTY. No; that is supposed to be all the general tax levied.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is the aggregate of their taxes?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes. I think there are cities in the United States which, because of their peculiar isolation, have no county taxes to pay. All of them have State taxes. St. Louis, for instance, is a county by itself.

Mr. SISSON. I will ask the gentleman this additional question, which I had in mind a moment ago——

Mr. PROUTY. Proceed. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] if he will give me some of his time. I am letting my time be used up by other gentlemen.

Mr. SISSON. In all the other cities the parks are kept up out of the city taxes.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. How are the parks in the District of Columbia kept up?

Mr. PROUTY. One-half by the city and one-half by the Federal Government.

Mr. SISSON. What about the larger parks like Rock Creek and Potomac Park?

Mr. PROUTY. Rock Creek Park, I think, is kept up by the General Government, but not Potomac Park.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Rock Creek Park is kept up entirely by the National Government.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Can the gentleman give us the valuation of property owned by the Government, like parks, buildings, and so forth?

Mr. PROUTY. I could give the gentleman that, but it would take the most of my time.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I was only asking for the totals.

Mr. PROUTY. I am going to get to the discussion of that question very soon, and the gentleman's question will be proper then. Now, gentlemen, you have got me a good ways from the real question.

PATRIOTISM.

When the citizens of Washington are baffled by cold figures they appeal to patriotism. Of course we should all be proud of our National Capital and we should be proud of the city in which we live, but our instinct of patriotism ought not to benumb our sense of justice. We can not afford to do an economic wrong to merely gratify our pride or the pride of the people living in this municipality. My motto is "Justice first, and then pride." They reiterate in most every sentence the statement that the American people are proud of their National Capital and do not begrudge the trifling contribution necessary to pay one-half of the expenses of the Federal Capital. When based upon a purely penurious argument, that is probably correct. But where does penurious argument lead to? I suspect that, based upon purely penurious grounds, the American people would not hesitate to double the contribution. Two trifles do not make much more than one. By this trifling contribution the American people could relieve the people of Washington of all their burdens. You would then have a holy city where the select could dwell in luxury, tax free. For 2,000 years the Manchurians fooled the Chinamen in the same way. They appealed to the national pride. While the Manchurian autocracy dwelt in untaxed palaces, the outside provinces were fooled into being taxed to support them in their luxury. But after a while that situation percolated throughout the dense minds of even the Chinamen, and they revolted and overthrew the Manchurian dynasty, and property now in that holy city is taxed just the same as property in the other parts of the realm. Let me warn the citizens of the District of Columbia and the Members of this House that some day the sunlit citizens of America will become as bright as the moonlit denizens of China.

IMPARTIAL CONSIDERATION.

The time has arrived for Congress calmly and impartially to consider the relations between the Federal Government and the city of Washington. Since 1878 the Federal Government, out of the funds collected from all the people of the United States, has paid one-half of the municipal expenses of this city. It has paid for one-half of the schooling of the children of the city, one-half of the expenses of constructing public buildings, one-half of the cost of paving streets and alleys, sewers, and so forth, and one-half of the expense necessary to maintain police and fire protection—in fact, one-half of all the expenses of the city. Last year the expenses of running the municipality were about $14,000,000. Of this the Federal Government contributed $7,000,000. In order that we may get some idea of these figures we should remember that this is a larger sum than most of the States of the Union collect and spend for the entire expenses of the State, including the pay of all State officers, its legislature, and the maintenance of its universities, eleemosynary institutions, penitentiaries, and State departments. The following table taken from the last bulletin issued by the Census Bureau shows the amount of money spent for State governments:

Alabama	$2,673,287
Arizona	530,050
Arkansas	1,262,316
California	8,458,929

This table shows that at the time of the issuing of that bulletin there were 42 States that spent less for their State government than the Federal Treasury contributed to the support of Washington, while 6 States spent more. This $7,000,000 that is contributed to Washington comes out of the people of the United States. You can not pay out money from the Public Treasury without having collected it from somebody.

FUNDAMENTAL PROPOSITIONS.

In order to discuss this question candidly and logically we should keep in mind the fundamental principles of taxation. Those charged with the collection and distribution of taxes should, as far as possible, collect the same equitably from all the people and distribute them in like manner. No partiality or favoritism should be shown. No greater material wrong can be done by a nation than to use its sovereign taxing power to collect money from one individual or community and give it to another, unless it is made necessary by humanity or by a high prevailing equity. We can not give to the people of the District of Columbia that which does not justly belong to them without taking from the people of the United States money or benefits justly belonging to them. It is the duty of Congress to deal equitably with all of our people. We should not take the money belonging to the general people and give it to the people of the city of Washington unless there is some strong reason for it. Keeping these principles in mind, I wish to examine carefully the grounds upon which it is now claimed that the District of Columbia is entitled to this contribution from the American people.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. IGOE. Does not the minority bill make the same provision for real estate and personal property to be assessed at the same figure?

Mr. PROUTY. I will say this, that I have understood the committee, since this bill has been reported by the majority, realizing that they would have to meet that situation on this floor, did amend their original bill, so as to include it, but I say, and the gentleman knows, that that provision was not in the bill when it was corrected by the committee.

Mr. IGOE. No; and the gentleman knows, too, that in the committee every provision in the bill relating to personal property was stricken out, and that was the theory on which the committee proceeded all of the time until within the last few days an amendment was brought in such as the gentleman describes, and that is the reason that personal-property provision was not in the bill. It was stricken out. It was in the bill at first and was stricken out.

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman says it was in the bill at first.

Mr. IGOE. I say it was.

Mr. PROUTY. I say it was not in the bill when it was brought to the committee. I do not know when it was stricken, but it did not come to the committee in that shape.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman is correct about it having been stricken out.

Mr. PROUTY. I do not know what was done in some private chamber before it was introduced into the House, but as the bill was first introduced into the House it left the assessment of personal property at 15 mills on the dollar.

Mr. IGOE. This bill related to real estate alone, and every provision in the bill where the words "personal property" was mentioned was stricken out.

Mr. PROUTY. I say it was not stricken out in committee. I say it was inserted in committee, that the bill that came to this House from the committee left the personal property assessed at 15 mills on the dollar.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman probably misunderstands me, or I him. I say that the original bill provided for taxation of real estate, and in the bill there was some mention made about the board of personal property assessors, and so that there would be no confusion, so that the bill would stand as a real estate taxation bill, every word in it relating to personal property taxation was stricken out, and afterwards this amendment to section 2 was brought in.

Mr. PROUTY. I have to repeat what I said before, that that was not in the bill when it was introduced into the House and when it came to the committee.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman mean to say that he would tax bonds paying, say, 4 per cent, at the same rate that he would tax real estate?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes. I am not discussing the question of rates. I will discuss it, however, since the gentleman has raised that question.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman that in our State we found that by taxing bonds heavily they were not turned in, and it did not produce as much revenue as a smaller taxation would produce; and so, at the recent meeting of the legislature, we passed an act which fixed the taxation on bonds for local assessment at 30 cents and for State purposes at 15 cents on the hundred, making a total taxation on bonds at 45 cents for State and local communities.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to allow myself to be drawn off into a discussion of just exactly the fineness upon which these assessments should be made, but I would like to ask the gentleman this question: As an honest man, would he exempt the accumulations of men that they had earned, perhaps in speculation or otherwise, so that they had enough out of which to pay for themselves and their families, exempt them from all taxation, and go down here on the street and find a poor man with a horse and cart, with which he earned his daily living, and assess that at full value? That is the proposition. For more than 10 years in the city of Washington there have been thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars escaping taxation. I am not prepared to say that you can always find this property and assess it, but that does not relieve us from the responsibility of trying to do it. [Applause.] If you have studied Washington, you will have found a peculiar situation. There is practically no other jurisdiction within 3,000 miles of the city of Washington where a man can escape the taxation that he can escape here. They have no inheritance tax here. There are a few cities where they do not assess personal property—I mean money and credits.

Mr. MADDEN. There are other States where they have no inheritance tax.

Mr. PROUTY. There are a few, but none of them close by.

Mr. MADDEN. There are a good many not 3,000 miles away.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman mean direct or collateral?

Mr. PROUTY. I mean collateral inheritance tax. Of course I am not going to speak by the book, but I do know this, that there are plenty and plenty of men making Washington a technical residence, who do not live here, for the very purpose of escaping taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MANN. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PROUTY. That depends entirely upon how many questions are asked.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman take a half hour or an hour?

Mr. PROUTY. More than half an hour if I say all I wish to say.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest the gentleman be given all the time he needs, even until next Monday week or the Monday two weeks after next.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for 45 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PROUTY. Let me finish this one little thought. By reason of the fact that there is no inheritance tax and the fact that moneys and credits escape taxation has made this an asylum for the rich, and I will go on record on the proposition, after some investigation, that there is no city of its size in the United States that has as much extra surplus wealth in the form of moneys and credits as have the citizens of Washington. Now, disregarding everything else, gentlemen, I say with all candor and sincerity that the people of the United States represented in the American Congress have no right to create an asylum here, an isle, if you please, to which the rich may flee from local taxation and escape taxation everywhere. It is unfair to the other classes of society of this country.

If Maryland, if Virginia, if New York, if New Jersey wishes to put a tax upon her citizens, she ought to have the right to do it and the United States ought not to create an isle to which these men can flee and thus escape taxation; but, even though it may be to the interest of the District of Columbia, it is not fair to the people at large—and, by the way, it is not fair to the people here. Can anyone give me any good reason why the man who has money invested in stocks and bonds, in moneys and credits, should live in this city protected by all the forces of this great organization and not pay a cent? I could show you, gentlemen, upon the tax rolls of this city where men who have been worth more than $40,000,000—in one instance a man has lived for 25 or 30 years in this District and only paid $27 tax in that whole time, and that happened to be upon goods which were in storage.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Does the gentleman mean to say that stocks and bonds are not the representative of real property that is taxed elsewhere? Does the gentleman mean to say the man who has stocks and bonds does not pay taxes upon those stocks and bonds as represented by the property for which they stand or for which they are collateral?

Mr. PROUTY. It might or it might not. There are thousands of well-paying bonds, represented in real condensed value, that can be found and taxed by the assessor. Let me ask you—suppose you have $100,000 in money, and you are going to invest it. First you say, I will invest in real estate here; no, I will not do that, because they will tax it. Then you say, I believe I will invest it in some stock. No, you say; the property that it represents will be assessed. I will just loan it to my brother who lives out in Iowa, and he will pay me 6 per cent on it, and I will draw that amount and bring it here, and I will live in the District of Columbia and enjoy all of its blessings. Under the present law you can bid defiance to all powers that are here to make you pay a cent for the luxury of living in the grandest city in the world. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I understood the gentleman to say that under the organic act personal property was to be taxed.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr J. M. C. SMITH. And if that is true, what reason or how did it come about that it is not being taxed at the present time?

Mr. PROUTY. Well, by act of Congress. Gentlemen, if you would understand the pressure and influences that are standing and operating here against any man who undertakes to do anything for the people of the United States as against the District of Columbia, it will explain how easy it is.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. PROUTY. And if you will just read the pages of the Revised Statutes of the United States you will see without any wonder that there have been few men who have been willing to stand on the floor of this House and defend the people of the United States against the avarice and greed of these people. Now, that will make splendid headlines in the morning newspapers of the city of Washington. [Applause.] But it is true, gentlemen; and as you all know I am not a candidate for reelection, and I am here, for one at least, to tell the truth. I suppose I might be weak kneed if I was afraid of some of these fellows sending out circulars in my district, sending them over the country by the millions. I suppose I might be scared a little, I do not know, but I am not in the habit of getting scared.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman does not mean that seriously.

Mr. PROUTY. I mean it seriously.

Mr. MANN. That is somewhat of a reflection upon the associate Members of the gentleman in this House.

Mr. PROUTY. Of course a part of it was jesting about my being scared myself. If I am willing to say I might get scared, it is no disgrace to say the gentleman from Chicago might get scared, too.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman considers it a disgrace, I am not scared about this or anything else [applause], and I do not believe the Members of the House are scared about it.

Mr. PROUTY. I am going to find out about that, because I want to know if the people here, representing the people of the United States, are willing to stand the local pressure and influence that is brought to bear here every minute in favor of the District of Columbia and stand for the people who sent them here.

There will not be a word to slip my lips that will be unfair to the District of Columbia. I am not here asking to do them any wrong. Why should I ask that any wrong be done to the District of Columbia? Why, they are my friends. I meet them daily, and notwithstanding I am such a bad fellow in the press they treat me kindly, personally. Why, if it meant nothing but a personal favor on my part, I would like to grant them anything they pleased. Every man knows how much easier it is to grant a favor to the men with whom he comes in daily contact than it is to stand erect and defend the rights of the men into whose faces he will never look.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. PROUTY. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I have no doubt in the world of the gentleman's courage and independence, but does he not know that wherever the effort is made to assess money and mortgages and bonds and securities on the same roll and by the same manner as real estate, stocks of goods, lumber, and saw logs are taxed the effort is a lamentable failure; and does he not know that it creates injustice wherever it is attempted?

Mr. PROUTY. No; I do not.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman evidently thinks that one who is possessed of a sum of money can live on it without using it. Why, it is of absolutely no use to him if it is in his pocket or locked up in his vault. He must get it out into circulation, and the moment he does so that moment it gets into property which is subject to taxation by ordinary methods and where assessors can reach it. It creates tangible property which is subject to assessment.

Mr. PROUTY. Now, I would like to be generous, but I can not afford to surrender the floor altogether.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I did not rise to ask a question. I asked permission to interrupt the gentleman for the purpose of giving him some information. I shall try to get time later to do so.

Mr. PROUTY. There will be plenty of time on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield further.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do I understand that here in the city of Washington the adjacent real estate has never been liable for any expense of paving?

Mr. PROUTY. It has not in the last 36 years. That is as far as I have gone back.

Mr. CRAMTON. As a rule, in other cities the adjacent property stands for two-thirds of the cost.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. And that 10 mills includes the paving, whereas in the compared figures it does not.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

Mr. PROUTY. It is said by the citizens of the District of Columbia that their primal claim for Federal assistance to their local municipality arises out of the Constitution itself. The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power—to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, and arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

An examination of the debates made at the time and of the circumstances surrounding the adoption of this article of the Constitution clearly shows that the organizers of our Government desired to have the Federal Capital located in a territory over which no State could exercise any jurisdiction. The happenings in Philadelphia at the close of the Revolutionary War clearly showed the necessity of this provision. Congress, sitting in Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, was threatened with mob violence, and it was claimed that the State of Pennsylvania did not give to Congress reasonable protection. It was, therefore, thought necessary to have the seat of government located in a territory over which the Federal Government should have sovereignty rather than in a territory over which the State should exercise that sovereignty.

The second reason for this constitutional provision was that there was intense jealousy between the States, and every State felt that the location of the Capital within any State would give that State undue influence and power in national legislation. But there is nothing in this provision that gives the slightest hint of the creation of a liability on the part of the Federal Government for the expenses of any municipality that might be erected within that territory. The relation of the Federal Government to this territory under this provision is exactly the same as the relation of the State government to the municipality erected within its sovereign jurisdiction.

Under this provision Congress has the absolute right to determine the terms and conditions under which municipalities may be created within the District of Columbia and the powers and restrictions under which they may operate, just the same as every State has the right to create municipalities and determine under what rights and restrictions they shall operate. No one yet has ever argued or contended that because the States have the absolute power to exercise jurisdiction over the territory within their borders they have thereby assumed a liability, moral or otherwise, to contribute to the expenses of running purely municipal affairs. And it is equally plain that for the first 70 years of this Republic no one considered that this reservation of power put any such obligation on the part of the Federal Government. Until 1874 the people of Washington paid their own local expenses, just like cities located in the various States. A careful reading of this constitutional provision will, in its own terms, disclose the fact that no such thought was in the minds of the framers of it. This provision expressly provides that Congress shall "exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, and arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings." It will be noticed that Congress has exactly the same power over territory acquired for these purposes that it has over the territory in the District of Columbia. And no one yet has ever claimed that this exercise of authority over territory acquired in the States for these purposes involved an obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay any part of the local expenses of the municipality in which they might be located. For instance, the Federal Government has three public buildings and an Army post in my city, the city of Des Moines, and yet my people have never thought to urge that the Federal Government became liable for an aliquot part of the expenses of educating their children and maintaining the expenses of the local government, nor has any other city in the United States, outside of Washington, made that claim. I can assure Congress that, so far as my city is concerned, we are glad to welcome the location of Federal buildings without making any such claim.

ORGANIC ACT.

Every newspaper and every man that has spoken on that side of the question has referred to the organic act of 1878 as constituting a compact between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia which can not now be set aside. That is a strange doctrine. The act of 1878 was a law of Congress which can be repealed, altered, or changed by Congress at any time that the equities demand. The law when it was passed may have been fully justified by circumstances then existing, but no constitutional lawyer will claim for a moment that that barred Congress from the right to change that law if circumstances and equities changed. It is a fundamental principle that no municipality can secure a vested right by a mere statutory enactment. In 1878 Congress repealed the laws which for nearly three-quarters of a century had made Washington responsible for its own expenses. No one was heard at that time to say that that law gave a vested right in the United States to have the city of Washington pay its own expenses; that was as much of a compact as the present one. But everyone conceded that Congress then had the right to change that relation, and no well-informed constitutional lawyer will now claim for a moment that Congress has not the right to change this relation if it deems it equitable to do so.

ORIGINAL LAND GRANT.

In the pamphlet recently issued by the Washington Chamber of Commerce the first argument for Federal aid is based on the fact that the promoters of the city of Washington gave to the Government the alternate lots for its own use. The history of this transaction shows that some gentlemen purchased a large tract of land, on which is now located the city of Washington, and offered to have it laid out as a city and donate the streets and alleys and give every alternate lot to the United States if the Federal Government would locate its Capital on that territory. This is nothing more nor less than the ordinary speculative method resorted to by promoters of town sites. Hundreds of promoters in various parts of the United States have engaged in exactly the same project.

These parties realized that the land which they had purchased for a very few dollars per acre would become very valuable if the Federal Government should locate its capital in the municipality to be erected on that land, and they could well afford to give to the Federal Government one-half the ground so as to thereby increase the value of the remainder. These people were possessed of a sagacity and candor that the people of Washington now either conceal or have forgotten, and that is that the presence of the National Capital would be a benefit and not a burden to the land held in private ownership. George Washington was a business man as well as a soldier. He made these people pay a bonus to get the Capital located here. What would he think if he would come back and find that we are now paying $7,000,000 annually for the privilege of staying here? He would be forced to the conclusion either that he was a Shylock or that we are chumps. But certainly no candid man will for a moment seriously claim because some town-site boomers more than a hundred years ago gave to the Federal Government certain land then almost worthless that that now creates a liability on the part of the Federal Government to pay one-half the burden of taxation upon all the property in the District of Columbia, very much of which was not then included in that arrangement.

GOVERNMENT'S OWNERSHIP OF LAND HERE.

This same pamphlet, issued by the chamber of commerce, bases its second argument on the ground that the Government owns more than one-half of the land in the District of Columbia. The figures that are offered to prove this proposition are rather amusing. The report says:

	Acres.
Total number taken for the city	6,110.94
Donated to the United States for avenues, streets, and alleys	3,606.00
Donated to the United States (10,136 building lots)	942.00

It will be noted that in order to make it appear that the United States owns more than one-half of the land in the city of Washington, it charges up to the United States, as its part, the streets and alleys. These figures show that considerably more than half of all Washington is embraced within streets and alleys, and that out of the 6,000 acres more than thirty-six hundred are thus donated. It is true that the title to the streets and alleys is taken in the name of the Federal Government. But the Supreme Court of the United States has long ago decided that while the legal title stood in the United States it merely held the title as trustee for the use and benefit of the people of Washington. This corresponds with the practice in nearly all the States of taking the legal title in the name either of the State or some municipality to be held in trust for the people.

The streets and alleys of the city of Washington belong to the people of Washington as cestui que trusts. They use them. They have the benefit of them, and not the remaining people of the United States. It is true that when people come here they walk on the sidewalks or drive on the streets just the same as would the people of Washington walk on the sidewalks and drive on the streets of any other municipality that they might visit. There can be no legal or equitable basis for imposing liability upon the Federal Government to pay a moiety of the expenses of this municipality because it holds the legal title to the streets and alleys which the citizens of this city habitually use. Much of the property in the District of Columbia, the legal title to which stands in the name of the Federal Government, is used exclusively by the District of Columbia for schoolhouses, public buildings, and parks.

An engineer appointed for that purpose has reported that there are 123½ acres in old Washington used exclusively by the Federal Government for its own purposes. The claim is constantly made that the Federal Government owns 50 per cent of the property in the District of Columbia. Now, that statement is true if you include streets, alleys, parks, and school and municipal grounds held in trust by the United States but used for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia; but of the property used exclusively for its own purposes by the Federal Government, it has only 2 per cent of the land included in the old city of Washington. This amount of property held by the United States may create some moral obligation on the part of the Government to bear a part of the expenses of the District of Columbia, but even that proposition is a doubtful one. All will agree that if the location of the Federal Government here imposes a burden on the District of Columbia which it does not fairly compensate it for, then the Federal Government ought to contribute to the support of the municipality. Every other city of the United States is most anxious to secure the erection of public buildings by the Federal Government in its municipality, and gladly waives the right of taxing that property. This is done on the economic theory that the presence of Federal buildings adds as much or more to the value of the remaining property as it takes away by appropriation to its own use.

As a proof that the people of this city so regard the erection of public buildings in Washington, it is noticed that they are always anxious for the Federal Government to acquire additional property here and erect buildings thereon, although they know that under no circumstances would they or could they be taxed. Every time that the Federal Government acquires title to property in the District of Columbia and erects thereon a building it increases the general value of all the property in the city. The taking or appropriating of such property by the Federal Government does not diminish the actual cash or taxable value of the property of the District of Columbia, but, on the other hand, it increases both its cash value and taxable value. A good way to satisfy yourself on this proposition is to consider the value of real estate in Washington with all the Government property here and then consider its value with all the Government property removed. The fact that Government property in the District of Columbia is exempt from taxation is no anomaly. It is not assessed in any jurisdiction in the United States. And yet all other cities seem to be glad to have the Government erect its buildings in their jurisdiction. The only argument that has come to my ears from the other side on this proposition is that the Government owns a great deal more property here than it does elsewhere. If so, might it not be with equal truthfulness said that the District of Columbia secures a proportionately greater benefit? In other words, if 1 building in a city produces enough benefit to exempt it from taxation, might it not be said with equal propriety that 10 or 15 buildings would hold the same relation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to invite his attention to the fact that in the District of Columbia there are now 45,000 acres that are sharing the benefits which formerly accrued to old Washington alone.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; but I was going to be so just and fair as to confine it to the place where the Federal Government really had the basis of its organization, and that is in the old city of Washington. What the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] says is true, but I am going to take the most liberal view that can be taken of it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In estimating the amount of land actually used by the Government, how did you make the estimate; take the Capitol building, for instance. Do you estimate the Capitol Grounds?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Take the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum. How do you figure that?

Mr. PROUTY. I am taking another fellow's figures. I have the Treasury Department statement and the statement from the city engineer. There is a slight difference between the two based on the Smithsonian Institution, but I do not care to get into a discussion about that.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire that the gentleman should take the time to do that.

Mr. PROUTY. I am accepting their figures, and they take all the property, including the Smithsonian Institution, although I am frank to say I do not think they should include that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman spoke about the title to the streets and alleys in Washington being in the United States as trustee. Where licenses are paid for peddling or operating street cars or anything of that sort over the streets, who collects the license, the trustee or the beneficiary?

Mr. PROUTY. The beneficiary, of course. It is entitled to it. The gentleman from South Carolina well knows that all the benefits for the use of the trustee, the District of Columbia, do not go into the Federal Treasury, it goes into the local treasury. That would not be so bad, but up against every dollar that goes into the treasury that way the United States has to plank down another dollar under the law which now prevails.

USE OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

The contention is made with considerable plausibility that because the Government has a large amount of property here it ought to pay one-half of the taxes. This is based on two arguments: First, that the owning of this property by the Federal Government removes that much from the taxable property of the District of Columbia; and, second, that the presence of this property imposes a burden upon the District of Columbia to protect it.

The report of the engineering department shows that there are 123½ acres in the old city of Washington used exclusively by the Federal Government in the transaction of its business, as follows: Capitol Grounds, Congressional Library, Navy Yard, Pension Office, War College, Patent Office, Land Office, Treasury Department, White House, State, War and Navy Building, Bureau of Public Health and Marine Hospital, Government Printing Office, Senate Annex, House Annex, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Agricultural Department, Fish Commission, Marine Barracks, and Weather Bureau. As there are, according to the District engineer's report, 7,162 acres in the old city of Washington it will be noted that this is less than 2 per cent of the entire territory.

We can probably get a better viewpoint of this discussion by considering this whole area as one National Government park, owned, controlled, and the management of it paid for by the Federal Government. That would as effectually as now take it out of the taxable area of the District. But would any candid man seriously claim that such a use of property in this District by the Federal Government would be either a drawback or burden upon the District of Columbia such as to require the Federal Government to pay one-half of the taxes here? Suppose it was a park with beautiful landscapes, coursed with winding and beautiful drives, to which all the people of Washington had access. Suppose it had in it beautiful monuments and statues, memorial buildings of classic design filled with the richest paintings, choicest sculptures, and the finest library to be found in the world. Would anyone consider this such a burden on the city as would justify her in demanding contribution for furnishing such luxury or such attractions for the city or the people? There is not a large city in the United States that would not contribute millions of dollars for the creation of such a park, and yet that is just what the Nation's holdings in Washington are. These grounds and buildings and their contents are the chief attractions of the city, and they bring in more people, not only of the United States but of the whole world, to spend their money here than all other attractions in this city combined.

THE LIBRARY.

Take, for instance, the Congressional Library. This is one of the properties the presence of which the District claims creates an obligation on the part of the Government to pay taxes. Now, let us analyze that for a moment. Here is a property that cost nearly $12,000,000. This was all paid for by the people of the United States. It costs more than a quarter of a million dollars every year to conduct it. This is paid for by the people of the United States. Now, who uses it? Being located here it is constantly open to the people of the District of Columbia. At least three-fourths of the people that read the books and papers in that Library are dwellers in the District of Columbia. At least 80,000,000 of the people that helped erect it and annually pay for its upkeep never have and never will see it and will never turn a leaf in this spacious library.

The people of the District of Columbia get the benefit of this generous contribution from the Federal Government without paying a cent from the District fund. Would it be a glaring wrong to require the District of Columbia to pay one-half of this expense when its citizens get more than half of its benefits? I do not object to the Government furnishing to this District this educational advantage and sight-seeing attraction. That can be justified on the ground of charity and philanthropy. But when the recipients of this benefaction of the Government make that the basis, even in part, for a claim for $7,000,000 further contribution every year it passes the pale of charity or philanthropy and becomes simply refined gall—gall that is surpassed only by the guest that demanded from his host a suit of clothes because his host had given him generous entertainment.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The gentleman stated that the citizens of the District of Columbia did not contribute to the erection of the Congressional Library. I would like to ask him how a taxpayer in the State of Colorado could contribute to the erection or to the construction of the Congressional Library and a citizen of the District of Columbia would be exempt?

Mr. PROUTY. I did not say that. I said that not a dollar came out of the District treasury.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I understood the gentleman to say that the citizens of the District of Columbia were exempt from contributing.

Mr. PROUTY. No; I said that not a dollar came out of the District treasury. Here is the proposition in a nutshell: Everybody contributes to the assistance of the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to yield the gentleman from Iowa such additional time as he desires out of the hour which the gentleman from Kentucky has.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. JOHNSON authorized me to yield the gentleman such time as he desired.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, that is very generous, and I will try not to consume all of it.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, under the rules that could not be done, but I have no objection to it. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PROUTY. It depends so much upon how many questions are asked me that I can not tell, but I think I ought to get through in 15 or 20 or 25 minutes—possibly 30 minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky have an hour?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; but the gentleman from Kentucky is not entitled to recognition at this time.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky was recognized for an hour and reserved the balance of his time.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but he is not entitled to recognition at this time, two gentlemen having been recognized on one side.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But certainly it would be agreeable to allow the gentleman out of the gentleman from Kentucky's time such time as he desires.

Mr. MANN. I think no one has any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I would like to have 30 minutes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if it is the intention to give those who are opposed to the bill an equal amount of time as has been granted by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. I understand that will be the case.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the gentleman have any idea how long this debate is going to last?

Mr. MANN. I think it is quite sure that it will run over to-day.

Mr. GEORGE. How much more time, if one speaker takes so much time on this subject and has not reached the point?

Mr. MANN. I was in hopes that we would give him time enough to reach the point.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; I do not object.

Mr. MANN. The subject is really worth a full discussion.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not object.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I yield the gentleman 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE CAPITOL.

Mr. PROUTY. Take this Capitol Building and grounds. They are policed, protected, embellished, and kept up solely by the Federal Government, and not a dollar comes from the District treasury and not a dime of burden is heaped upon it. Yet daily professional guides lead the visiting throngs through these corridors. Every visitor here leaves something in the pockets of the citizens, but they leave nothing in the Federal Treasury. Uncle Sam furnishes the show; the people of the District collect the gate receipts and keep them. I do not begrudge them that source of either pleasure or profit. But when they undertake to make that the basis for a just claim against the Federal Government its pure affrontery shocks my intelligence. It is not even refined gall.

PROTECTION.

The second proposition is that it imposes a burden on the District to protect them. An analysis of the real facts will show how pitiably trivial is this claim. The Government pays out of its own pocket for the policing of this building and grounds. It has its own guards, paid for out of its own money, in all the department buildings. There is just one exception to this rule, and that is the White House. The District of Columbia furnishes one-half of the expenses of policing it, but the Government even there pays for all the Secret-Service men. The people of this District always call your attention to the fact that the Metropolitan police attend every reception at the White House and guard the guests and their property. This is no higher or greater service than they would render if John Hays Hammond or any other private citizen should give a great reception. And yet, for the few men that are thus detailed for that purpose, the Federal Government pays out each year for the support of the 500 or more policemen of the city $510,144. If that constitutes a business transaction between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, I fail to comprehend legitimate business arrangements.

It is next claimed that the fire department of the District of Columbia protects the Government buildings and property. Now, with one exception, the Government buildings are fireproof, and have their own apparatus for fire protection. As a proof of their own efficient construction and protection, the records of the fire department show that in the last year the fire department of this city was called out but once to these Federal buildings; and yet the Federal Government pays out $333,735 for the support of the local fire department. If this is a fair business arrangement, I fail to understand business.

SCHOOLS.

Last year the Federal Government paid $1,598,355 for the education of the people living in the District of Columbia. Every man, however, that argues this question with you will call your attention to the fact that Congressmen's children go to school here without paying tuition. But at most there are only a few hundred of them, and if charged full tuition rates it would certainly not amount to more than a few hundred dollars. And yet we pay for this little humble privilege more than a million and a half dollars. But in my humble opinion Congressmen's children ought not to be exempt from paying tuition. It is a gratuity which, under the law, they are not entitled to. It is but a trifle, but it is thrown out as a kind of sop to the legislators for the purpose of influencing their legislative action on the half-and-half matter.

INAUGURATION DAY.

One of the leading papers of the city recently set up as a claim for this contribution that the District of Columbia had to furnish additional police on inauguration day to take care of the procession. There is not a little village, city, or hamlet in the United States that does not take up a collection from its prominent business men to create some kind of an attraction for the purpose of bringing people to town, fully understanding the financial proposition that if they can get people to town to spend their money they will get some of it. Here Uncle Sam furnishes the attraction to bring people to town and does not make a cent out of it nor charge a cent for it. The District Commissioners, in their annual report, say that more than 500,000 people outside of the District visited Washington on the last inauguration day. It is perfectly safe to say that the visitors on that occasion left an average of $25 apiece in this city. If they did, they left $12,500,000. It seems to me that the people of the District of Columbia might take their change out of this without making further claim for benefactions from the Public Treasury. Other cities do. Why, in fairness, should not Washington?

You might examine every claim that is made and apply to it the acid test of common sense and they would all be found to be equally indefensible. They would all be found to be equally without merit.

COMPARATIVE INDEBTEDNESS.

In determining equities, humanity should have its true place. When the Federal Government, in 1878, came to the rescue of the District of Columbia it found it in a deplorable condition. With a small population and a light tax roll it had an indebtedness of about $25,000,000. Its credit was gone. As I have said before, I have never questioned either the motives or the judgment of the men of that Congress in coming to the assistance of the city of Washington. But those conditions have entirely changed. Washington now has the least indebtedness of any city of the United States, whether based upon her capita or tax values. I here set out a list of all the cities of the United States the size of Washington or larger, showing their population, indebtedness, and indebtedness per capita. This table shows that Washington has the least per capita and assessment values indebtedness of any city in the United States:

Indebtedness of cities of the United States as large or larger than Washington.

City.	Population.	Indebtedness.	Per capita indebtedness.
Baltimore	572,000	$42,071,423.00	$74.00
Boston	720,100	76, 10,187.00	106.00
Buffalo	446,000	29,369,432.00	65.00
Cincinnati	405,000	21,619,514.00	53.00
Cleveland	620,000	37,617,427.00	60.00
Detroit	567,944	8,689,659.00	15.00
Los Angeles	450,000	33,228,827.00	74.00
Milwaukee	392,181	9,868,350.00	25.00
Newark, N. J	375,000	20,714,062.00	55.00
New Orleans	375,000	42,898,610.00	114.00
New York	5,173,064	794,949,404.00	153.00
Philadelphia	1,625,000	99,540,950.00	61.00
San Francisco	455,000	27,500,000.00	60.00
St. Louis	730,000	25,806,690.00	35.00
Washington, D. C	350,000	5,194,988.00	14.75

If we apply the humane doctrine, "Bear ye one another's burdens," there is not a large city in the United States that might not justly call for help from Washington. Can anyone give me a good reason, based either on business or humanity, why the citizens of Boston, with a per capita indebtedness of $106, should be called upon to help the citizens of Washington carry its burden of indebtedness when it amounts to less than $15 per capita? Can anyone give me a reason why the citizens of Cleveland, with a per capita indebtedness of $60, or the citizens of New Orleans, with a per capita indebtedness of $114, or the citizens of Philadelphia, with a per capita indebtedness of $61, or the citizens of San Francisco, with a per capita indebtedness of $60, or the citizens of Los Angeles, with a per capita indebtedness of $74, or of Baltimore, with a per capita indebtedness of $74, or of New York City, with a per capita indebtedness of $153, should be required to come over and help carry the burdens of the citizens of Washington, with a per capita indebtedness of less than $15? The only answer that is made or can be made is that "This is the National Capital and we are proud of her." But this hardly meets the demand of either justice or humanity. This is no longer a question of being fair to the District of Columbia, but it rises to the question of being fair to the remaining people of the United States. The people of the United States have helped this people to pave their streets, build their sidewalks, construct their school buildings and municipal buildings and the splendid improvements, and paid their debts. It is the boast of this municipality that it is now in the best physical condition of any city in the United States of its size. It is certainly in the best financial condition. To do this the people of the United States have taxed themselves and poured into the laps of this people more than $150,000,000. You are the fifteenth city in size in the United States. You have become strong and powerful, and certainly influential. You are certainly influential if you can bring local pressure enough to bear on Congress, under the showing above made, to induce it to continue carrying one-half of your expenses and paying one-half of your bills. I am not standing here trying to persuade Congress to be unfair to the District of Columbia. The local influence surrounding you here will certainly induce you to do that much, if not more. But I am appealing to men that have the conscience, the courage, and the character to withstand local influence and do that which is simply right as between the District of Columbia and the people that they represent.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY THE STATES.

Our system of indirect taxation is often deceptive. We are naturally inclined to overlook the fact that we can not pay a dollar to the District of Columbia out of the Federal Treasury unless we collect it from some one. This burden of $7,000,000, when distributed among the States, imposes not an insignificant burden upon the people of each State. I here set out a table that I have prepared, showing substantially the amount that each State contributes for the maintenance of Washington:

Amounts contributed by the various States.

Alabama	$144,571
Arizona	13,770
Arkansas	106,081
California	160,206
Colorado	53,841

My State contributes about $150,000 a year; the State of Illinois contributes about $380,000; the State of Ohio about $321,000; Texas, about $262,000; Georgia, about $175,000; Kentucky, about $154,000. Can anyone give me a good, logical, or humane reason why the people of these States should make this contribution to the support of the citizens of Washington while they are at home paying a much higher rate of taxation for these same benefits than the people of Washington are paying? Can anyone give me a good reason why the citizens of my city, who have to pay for all their own sidewalks, pavements, and sewers, should be required to come down here to Washington and contribute to paying one-half of that burden for the property owner here while the citizens of Washington are carrying less than one-half of the general burden of taxation that my people are carrying? The present system is indefensible and intolerable if viewed from the standpoint of simple justice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Government pays more to keep up the city of Washington than it does to care for the entire Indian population of the United States? The bill shows that to be the fact.

Mr. PROUTY. I have not the figures, but if the gentleman says so, of course I believe it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman states that the streets and roads of the District of Columbia are above the average streets and roads in the other cities of the country. What other cities in the United States have better roads and streets than they have in the District of Columbia, if any?

Mr. PROUTY. I have not found but one city that I thought had better streets, and that was Macon, Ga. I was down there a few days ago, at Senator Bacon's funeral, and I pronounce that a better paved and a better lighted city than the city of Washington. The streets are much wider than they are here, and they are kept, I think, in better condition; and, strange to say, the Federal Government does not contribute a dollar to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman been in Oklahoma City?

Mr. PROUTY. I have not been in Oklahoma City since a number of years ago, when they were going through the process of evolution. At that time their streets were not as good as those of the city of Washington.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt my friend just a moment?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. They have done all the work of beautifying the city of Macon, Ga., by taxation not exceeding $1.25 on the hundred. We have issued a million dollars' worth of bonds.

Mr. PROUTY. I was going to call your attention to that.

Mr. BARTLETT. But they have paid the interest on the bonds at 1½ per cent with a taxation of only $1.25 per hundred.

Mr. PROUTY. Those are municipal taxes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. The streets of the city are only paid for by municipal taxation.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; that is right. But of course you do have to carry down there another burden for your State and county.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; we do.

Mr. PROUTY. Of which I advised myself when down there.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the State and the county tax is only $1.50, I will say.

Mr. PROUTY. In last evening's paper was an article calling attention to the fact——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit, I think I understood the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] to say that the total tax of the city of Macon, Ga., including municipal tax, county tax, and State tax, is $2.50?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. PROUTY. That is 25 mills.

Mr. BARTLETT. Because we have to pay for carrying on our portion of the State government and local government

Mr. PROUTY. That is just what I was trying to say there. Cities located elsewhere, the same as the city represented by the gentleman who has just spoken, pay as much for the State and county affairs as they have to pay for the municipal affairs, while in the city of Washington the people do not have to pay anything for that purpose. The legislative branch is supported by the Federal Government, and all the time the District committee has to spend and all the time this House has to spend is paid for by Uncle Sam and not out of the local treasury of the District.

RAISING THE TAXES ON SMALL HOMES.

The committee of one hundred here is raising a terrific howl about the fact that this bill would raise the taxes on the poor man's home in Washington. Certainly the levying of a tax on money, credits, stocks, bonds, and jewels would not have a tendency to increase the taxes that would have to be levied on the poor man's home. I notice that the fellows that are doing the howling here are the wolves and not the poor sheep. They are trying to use the sheep as a protection for their own greed. It is perfectly in line with the conduct of ruling forces in this city for many years. The "plunderbund" of this District have not only plundered the Federal Treasury, but they have plundered the poorer classes. They have had influence enough to secure the assessment of their own property at 45 cents on the dollar, while the poorer people have had their property assessed at substantially 75 cents on the dollar. But I am not attempting to conceal the fact that if property is taxed and assessed in accordance with this bill it will raise the taxes on real property in the District of Columbia, but I assert that this is necessary in order to make it equate with similar property owned by similar individuals elsewhere. To illustrate what I mean: If a poor man in this city has a little home that is actually worth $1,000, he is assessed $10 under the present law. If a poor man owns a similar property worth exactly $1,000 in the city of Baltimore, he is compelled to pay $19.80.

Gentlemen, as legislators we must be fair even between poor men. Why should the poor man in Baltimore be asked or expected to contribute to the burdens of Washington so as to lower the poor man's tax here while he is paying twice as much taxes himself at home? And the illustration I here give applies to all the people of the United States. Why should the poor people in my city that own their little homes and pay 22.2 mills taxes on their property and pay for their sidewalks and other improvements be required to make contribution to even the poor man living in Washington who pays less than one-half the same amount of taxes on the same kind of property? True statesmanship takes into consideration the welfare and rights of poor people wherever situated. It has no right to favor the poor in one place at the expense of the poor in another.

The last and clinching argument offered by the committee of one hundred against the passage of my little amendment is that it would raise the taxes on the 40,000 small-home dwellers here. Now, let us see. This bill would raise the assessment and taxation upon the occupants of the fine residences and profitable business property. This is now assessed at about 40 cents on the dollar. It would then be raised to 100 cents on the dollar. Certainly the entering of this value in the equation would not raise the taxes of the humble home dweller. The provision of my amendment requiring the assessment and taxation of moneys and credits, stocks and bonds, and accumulated wealth would not so affect the equation as to increase the taxation on the humble home dweller. For more than a decade the humble home owner of this city has been grossly discriminated against. While his property has been assessed at 75 per cent of its actual value, the dwellers in these fine mansions, the owners of these great blocks, have had theirs assessed at 40 to 45 per cent. For more than a decade moneys, credits, and accumulated wealth have entirely escaped taxation in this city, while the teams and tools of the humble laborer have been taxed at their full value. No man on earth will claim that was right, and yet why did not this committee of one hundred organize to remedy it?

If they had such a deep and profound sympathy for the poor, there was a splendid opportunity. But they did not begin to shed their crocodile tears for the poor until my little amendment was introduced seeking to tax their hoarded wealth and palatial residences and property. I have said many things during this discussion complimentary and commendatory of the zeal of this committee of 100, but when they undertake to defeat this bill by standing behind the humble home owner of this city they are guilty of an act of cowardice, just such cowardice as the villain reveals when he holds a woman between himself and flying bullets. But suppose that this bill does increase the taxes of the humble home dweller. No proposed increase would bring them to the point of equality with the taxes paid by like home dwellers in other cities. I always feel sorry for the humble and honest poor. I am always ready to extend them a helping hand, but I can not help them at the expense of others equally poor. Let me remind the people of this District that the quivering lip of poverty is not confined to Washington. The burdens of taxation bear heavily not alone upon the people of this District. In every town, in every hamlet, in every city of the United States are men just as poor, just as poorly paid as are the people of this District, who pay at home twice the burdens borne by their like brethren here and then are asked to contribute to lightening the burdens of their certainly equally fortunate brethren. You can not by legislation remove burdens, but you can adjust them, and adjust them so that every man shall carry his fair and reasonable share. That is all that this amendment proposes or suggests.

ABILITY OF WASHINGTON TO BEAR ITS OWN BURDENS.

Viewed from every point that I can find, the city of Washington is now in the best condition financially to bear the burdens of her own domestic government of any city of its size in the United States. It has the greatest per capita taxable wealth of any city of its size in the United States. It has the lowest amount of indebtedness of any city of its size in the United States. Its streets, alleys, and public buildings are in the most advanced stage of completion and perfection of any city of its size in the United States, and hence the least prospective burdens. It has no State or municipal burdens to bear except its own. The municipalities in the States are compelled to give a portion of their revenues derived from taxes to the support of the State and county in which they are located. But every dollar raised from taxation on the property of this District can be used for the District of Columbia's own purpose. It is relieved of a burden of taxation that every other city has to bear. If it bore all the burdens of its own local self-government, it would still have a preferential advantage over other cities. In the newspapers and in private discussion it is contended by the citizens of the District that they pay taxes to the support of the Federal Government. That is true. They pay just the same taxes relatively to the support of the General Government as do the citizens of other cities. The inequality arises from the fact, however, that a part of the money paid into the Federal Treasury by the people outside of the District of Columbia is turned over to the District of Columbia for the running of its own affairs, while none of the money that is paid in by the citizens of the District of Columbia is given to any other municipality for the running of its affairs.

BEAUTIFICATION.

Every man in the United States is naturally proud of its Capital. He desires to see it a beautiful city. Whether or not the Federal Government contributes anything to the support of the District, from the very nature of the situation it will add much to its beautification. It now has here many beautiful buildings that are the natural attraction of sightseers. It should and will erect many other beautiful buildings. I believe that public buildings should be erected for the use of all the employees of the departments. This will add many new and beautiful buildings to Washington. This city is noted for its beautiful avenues, parks, and statues. I believe that the Federal Government should, upon the basis of national pride, contribute to all these things that tend to the beautification of the city, but I can find no equitable ground for contribution from the Federal Treasury to the purely local and sordid affairs of the city. I believe that the Government should pay for sidewalks, pavements, and other improvements in front of its own property, although that is not done elsewhere. Nevertheless I believe it is right. I furthermore believe that the Federal Government should contribute something to the upkeep of the boulevards of the city that become a necessary part of its beautification. Further than that, I can find no equity calling for contributions.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

The policy that would make this District responsible for its own expenses carries with it the corollary that they should have local self-government, with a Delegate in Congress.

It would be unfair for Congress to levy the taxes upon this people without giving them any right to say how much that tax should be or for what purpose it should be used. Taxation without representation is just as bad as representation without taxation. This people, for their own good and for the good of Congress, should have the right to levy their own taxes and spend their own money, subject only to such supervision by the Federal Government as is exercised by State legislatures over the municipalities under their jurisdiction. I know it is claimed by many good men that the people of Washington are not capable of self-government. That is a slander upon republican institutions. If the people of Washington are not capable of self-government, there is no other city in the United States that is.

The people here are the wealthiest and most intelligent people to be found in the United States. If they are not capable of self-government, may we not despair of the task of bringing the Filipinos up to a point of self-government? The relation and situation here are abnormal. The people of the Capital City of the greatest Republic on earth are the only people that I know of that are disfranchised. The people in the capital of Russia are allowed to vote on their domestic affairs. And no other government in the world has paid the price of that disfranchisement as have the people of the United States. The time has fairly arrived, in my judgment, when the Capital of the United States should be brought into harmony with our republican institutions.

TIME OF CONGRESS.

Under the rules of the House and Senate one-fourteenth of all the time of Congress is set aside for the consideration of the affairs of the District of Columbia. The expanding business of the United States has now made it necessary for Congress to remain in session practically the entire year to properly dispose of the constantly increasing legislative work. I think the time has fairly arrived when the purely local affairs of this municipality should be left to a local body, so that Congress might devote its time and energy to the consideration of questions involving the welfare of the whole Nation. Each Congress costs the United States approximately $6,712,110.75. As one-fourteenth of the time is spent on the District of Columbia, the Federal Government pays out each year in legislative expenses for the District of Columbia $479,436.48. The work could be done much better and more cheaply by a small local body.

PAY ROLL.

Every city realizes the importance of securing institutions that will collect money from the general public and spend it in the local community. For this reason every booming city has not only exempted from taxation but offered to give big bonuses to secure the location in their cities of factories and similar institutions. The philosophy of this transaction is that it brings men and money to the city. Elsewhere cities are willing to tax themselves to secure these reflex benefits. Here the people talk like such a burden as that calls for contributions to them rather than from them. There is about $70,000,000 of Federal money gathered up all over the United States and poured into the lap of this citizenship every year. What a bonus would any other city give for an institution that would provide such a pay roll! And this pay roll is sure and certain. There is no danger that the factory will shut down or that the hands will be thrown out of employment and the pay roll stopped. In good times and in hard times this stream flows along just the same. The merchant here can plan on a certainty. Money may be hard to get elsewhere, but here every month, regardless of financial conditions, the Government dumps about $6,000,000 which thus finds its way into the channels of trade. Most communities would consider such an institution a blessing and not a burden. Most communities would be perfectly willing to tax themselves for such an institution instead of appealing for help. Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco taxed their citizens millions of dollars to have such a feeder located in their cities for just a few months.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman state the correct figures when he said there was $6,000,000 expenditure in the departments a month?

Mr. PROUTY. That is substantially correct.

JEWELS AND JEWELRY.

The same law of 1902 that reduced the tax on real property from 15 mills to 10 mills on its actual value exempted jewelry. I am wholly unable to understand on what theory of taxation this class of property should be exempt from assessment. It is wealth; it is accumulated wealth; it is wealth that receives and demands protection. It is not wealth that is necessary for subsistence; it is purely luxury. Washington is filled with that class of property. It dazzles your eye at every ball and reception. And yet not a dollar of it appears on the tax roll, while the horse and cart and the tools of the mechanic, with which men earn their daily bread, are on the tax roll.

I noticed a few months ago a statement in a dispatch from London where one of the fair ladies of Washington appeared at a royal function bedecked with more than one-half a million dollars' worth of jewels, the gift of her wealthy husband. Why should that gift place a half a million dollars of actual wealth beyond the pale of taxation. Imagine that queenly lady sitting in the rocking-chair in her parlor, bedecked with her jewels in preparation for an afternoon matinee, and suppose that an assessor should approach her and inquire concerning her taxable property and she should wave him away, at the same time pointing down the street to the man with the cart and mules removing the rubbish from the streets, saying: "There are the ones that you should look to for your revenue to support the District's expenses, not me." Gentlemen, that condition is wrong under any theory of civilized society. Why should not carts and mules and tools, with which men earn a scanty living, be exempt from taxation rather than this idle and glittering wealth? I am no Socialist, but I do believe in treating all men fairly.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Are you and I assessed on our diamonds?

Mr. PROUTY. Not here. Of course, I do not wear any. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. Neither do I.

Mr. PROUTY. I never owned a diamond in my life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

TAX ON GROSS INCOMES.

Mr. PROUTY. The method in vogue in this city of assessing moneyed corporations upon their gross income is well calculated to conceal and mislead at the same time. These corporations are taxed from 2 per cent to 6 per cent on gross incomes. It is not possible to throw these figures into a mill tax on value without assuming some rational basis of figuring. It is well known that the earning capacity of stock practically determines its actual value. I assume, for the purpose of this comparison, that the stock of a concern would be at least at par which shows a gross income of 10 per cent on its capital stock. Assuming this as a reasonable hypothesis, what does this system reveal:

Building and loan associations: Two per cent on gross earnings equals 2 mills on par value of stock.

Savings banks: Four per cent on gross earnings equals 4 mills on par value of stock.

Electric light companies: Four per cent on gross earnings equals 4 mills on par value of stock.

Telephone companies: Four per cent on gross earnings equals 4 mills on par value of stock.

Gaslight companies: Five per cent on gross earnings equals 5 mills on par value of stock.

National banks: Six per cent on gross earnings equals 6 mills on par value of stock.

Street railways: Four per cent on gross earnings equals 4 mills on par value of stock.

When these per cents of taxation are paid by these corporations the owners of these stocks are exempt from taxation; or, putting it in other words, if these mills on the dollar are paid by the corporations out of the earnings that would otherwise go to the stockholders the stockholders are exempt from further taxation. Now let us compare that with the situation at Alexandria, just across the river. There the assessment is 18 mills on the actual value of the stock. To make this comparison clear and vivid, suppose that a man owned stock in a savings bank in Alexandria that was worth par; he would be taxed $18 on the thousand. If the same man owned stock in a savings bank in the District of Columbia, which stock was worth par, he would pay $4 on it. Can anyone give me any good reason why national legislators should create a situation that results in such discrimination among its citizens? And yet that is the law as it now stands on the statute books of the United States. It makes the man who has to pay $18 on the thousand on his stock in Alexandria contribute to the fund that makes taxes here so low that the stockholder in the bank here escapes with a $4 assessment. Such discrimination will not endure. It will be wiped out by the American people when they know the facts. The only problem is, How can the American people ever be made to know the facts?

LOCAL PROPAGANDA.

All the newspapers and all the ordinary avenues for dissemination of information to the people emanating from this District are subject to the influence, if not the absolute domination, of local sentiment. Every instrumentality known to the skillful propagandist is being used to convey to the general public the distorted facts and specious arguments calculated to uphold this wrong. A committee of one hundred, backed by the wealth and influence of this city, is now tapping every news agency of this country to get distorted news to the public. It is sending out millions of circulars, pamphlets, and misleading tables so as to educate, if possible, the public mind for the continuance of this local graft. Allowing that selfish interest is the controlling factor, no one can seriously criticize either the committee or this citizenship for making this great effort. The stake involved justifies it.

The securing of a contribution of $7,000,000 a year to this municipality is a prize worthy of the efforts of the best minds in it, and gauged by that rule alone would warrant the expenditure of a tremendous sum. What would the Booster Club of Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, San Francisco, Memphis, Boston, or Baltimore expend to secure a contribution of $7,000,000 a year, not only for this year but for all time? Figuring interest at 4 per cent, this would be equal to the establishment of a permanent endowment of $175,000,000. The people of Washington would make a splendid investment if they would expend $10,000,000 right now to set in motion influences that would forever perpetuate this system. They would be shortsighted and penurious if they did not freely spend it. From the boasted workings of the committee of one hundred that come to us daily through the public press I am convinced that this people is neither miserly nor penurious when it comes to spending money on this proposition. But what is the little band of Congressmen that are making a fight for the people of the United States going to do to counteract this propaganda and meet this influence? They have no millions at their disposal to furnish the facts to the people. They have no millions at their disposal to assist Congressmen who help them in the fight or to defeat Congressmen that oppose them. They have no way of getting the facts to the people except through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which few see and fewer read. This is the ordinary fight of organized and equipped selfishness against the common cause of right. But the history of the past shows that in the end the people will learn the facts, and when they learn them they will right wrong. As discouraging as the situation may seem, I for one am neither discouraged nor dismayed. I intend to do my humble part in letting the people of the United States know the exact facts, and I know that when once they find out the true facts they will do justice.

WHY LARGE PER CAPITA WEALTH IN WASHINGTON.

To some it seems a surprise that the per capita wealth of the city of Washington is greater than in other cities. This is not at all surprising when the facts are ascertained and analyzed. Exemption from taxation should and does show itself in accumulated wealth. In the 36 years that the half-and-half plan has been in operation the Federal Government has paid approximately $150,000,000 in support of the local self-government which the people themselves here would have been required to pay except for the contribution by this Federal Government. As there are now about 350,000 people in the District of Columbia, the Government has contributed approximately $428 for every man, woman, and child in the District of Columbia, including the colored population. And this advantage in taxing situation reveals itself in the higher per capita wealth of this city. But that is not the only thing that has contributed to the high per capita wealth of this city. During the same period the Federal Government has paid out about $1,500,000,000 in this city as pay rolls and construction accounts. This is $4,280 per capita, including colored population. This money has been collected up from all over the United States and expended here. Such a constant stream of money flowing into a community can not help but enrich it.

CRITICISM.

Ever since this bill has been up for consideration before the District Committee every member of that committee that has tried to look after the interests of the United States has been attacked, criticized, and caricatured by the public press and the various organizations of this city. Personally I have not escaped a prominent headline on the front page of every newspaper in this city for the last two weeks or escaped denunciation in the resolutions passed by every civic organization and sewing circle in this city. Now, if you think I like that kind of work, you are mistaken. I like kind words as well as anybody. I like the glad greetings of those with whom I associate as much as anybody. If you think I appreciate and enjoy being portrayed as the villain of the play, while my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is given the rôle of hero every time a matter of the District comes up on the floor of this House, you are misjudging me. I am as susceptible to flattery and as sensitive to unjust criticism as he, and I am fully conscious of the fact that I could easily play his rôle by generously conceding to the people of this District everything they want. The cartoon recently appearing in one of the evening papers representing the majority members of this committee as a class of blockheads at first irritated me, and then it amused me, and then, in a kind of sickly way, it pleased me. The cartoonist had done me the distinguished honor of placing me at the head of this class of blockheads and had done me the fairness of making my block square and not flat. I would be delighted to circulate in good fellowship and comradeship with these people, and if I could do this by merely surrendering a personal right, I would gladly do it. But when they ask me to surrender my convictions upon a public right they are asking too much, and if they think that they are going to affect my action or public conduct by either criticism or caricature, they are sadly mistaken.

REMOVING FRICTION.

This anomalous situation naturally breeds discord. It is no secret that the people of this District look with suspicion and disrespect on Congress. This people feel that they are governed by a foreign and to them alien people. They feel that they have no rights or privileges except such as can be wrung from an unwilling Congress. This naturally makes them spiteful and resentful. On the other hand, they feel that anything they can get out of Congress is pure gain. They look upon every man that attempts to stand in their way as a public enemy. The very fact that the General Government pays one-half of all the expenses of the improvements of this city makes the Public Treasury their common goal. This whole city will rally in support of any proposition that looks to the securing of additional funds from the Public Treasury, and the man that can do most is the greatest hero. Any man in this town who can lobby through an appropriation of a large amount from the Federal Treasury for local improvements is the idol of the citizens. It gives him the same prestige and éclat that a Member of Congress receives when he secures an appropriation for his home city. All the men, women, and children in the District belong to the booster club, and spend most of their efforts on Congress. Since I have been somewhat conspicuous in this matter I have not been able to get my shoes blacked or my hair cut. I have not been able to go to church or the theater or to public functions without being the victim of the most intense lobbying. I have not felt disposed to criticize the people of Washington nor the public press. Selfishness is perhaps the strongest impulse of human life. Most men yield to it. But Members of Congress occupy a different position from that occupied by the citizens of Washington. It is their perfect privilege to get all they can. It is the duty of Congressmen, however, to see that they do not get anything except what they are entitled to. The people of Washington represent Washington. Congress represents the people of the United States. I have been rather amused at the public press, however. If anyone will yield to their solicitations and help them, he is an idol. Every man who stands in their way is an enemy of the District. No man can arise in Congress and say a single word in defense of the people of the United States living outside of Washington without being assaulted, maligned, and caricatured. If he happens to say a few words for the District, he is a statesman, a patriot, and the personification of national pride. He is flattered, cajoled, and petted by the social set. He is praised, puffed, and heralded by the press. But if he undertakes to hold the even hand of justice between the interests of this people and the interests of his own people, he is attacked by the local press with such endearing epithets as "hill billy," "reuben," "tight wad," "pinhead," or "blockhead." So long as Congress, composed of men gathered from all over the United States, undertakes to run this local city without knowledge of its needs or without real sympathy for some of its purposes, so long will there be friction and resentment between the ruling forces of this city and Congress.

So long as Congress undertakes to perform the function of alderman it will be treated as a ward alderman. It will be subject to all the contempt and disrespect that usually pertain to aldermen of large cities without, I trust, securing the emolument that is commonly considered as furnishing some compensation for this humiliating service. But so long as Congress undertakes to act as alderman it must expect to be subject to all the criticisms and irritations of the position and must expect to bring down upon its head the wrath of every man, woman, and child that does not get the street lamps, public parks, and other improvements that will add to the comfort, pleasure, or profit of every local community. And so long as there are Members of Congress on this floor who will dare to oppose any of their schemes of graft and plunder, so long will there be friction. Men must lay down or have trouble. So long as any man has enough virility to fight for what he believes is right as between the people of this District and his own people, so long will he feel the crushing, irritating, dominating force of local sentiment; and, in my opinion, that condition will never be removed until there is a complete divorcement of the purely local administration and expenses of the city of Washington from the Federal Government. If you will remove the cause, you will soon correct the condition. In my opinion Congress, for its own preservation and self-respect, must give to this people local self-government, must take itself out of their purely local and domestic affairs, and must make them self-controlling and self-dependent. It must so adjust matters that this people must look to themselves for good government and not to the Congress of the United States. It must be so adjusted that this people, if they have good government, can take all the credit upon themselves, and if a bad government, can only blame themselves.

I can not believe this people is not capable of self-government. At least I am willing to let them try it. If after 40 years of tutelage they are not able now to govern themselves and care for themselves, I do not know when they will be. If this people is so corrupt, so given to local strife, so prone to graft and friction that these things must be, I prefer, gentlemen, that they graft and fight among themselves and not constantly draw Congress into it. We have trouble enough of our own without mixing in the purely local and domestic affairs of this city.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] is recognized.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair finds 100 Members present—a quorum. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] will proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, after more than two hours of oratory from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] we get where? Everywhere, except in touch with the dispute in the District Committee over this bill. It is that dispute that now brings me to my feet. I dislike to differ from my colleagues. I particularly dislike to contend with the chairman of the committee [Mr. JOHNSON] or with my colleague, Judge PROUTY. But, nevertheless, I should not be faithful to this House and what I believe to be the rightful interests of the District of Columbia were I not to make strennous objection to the bill that has been reported by the majority—the bill still bearing my name and called the George bill. It is not the George bill as introduced. It is a plain negation of the principal purposes of the original George bill.

I think I can explain much about this bill and about the controversy over it by stating how the bill came into being. When I became a member of this House I found myself placed on this committee. I made the early acquaintance of the chairman of the committee and explained to him that I had never had any legislative experience; that I did not know of what use I could be on the committee, but that I was willing to work, and I believed I could work on one subject better than on any other, and that that subject was taxation; that I had been down here years before as a press correspondent and had sat in the press gllery when Tom L. Johnson, of Ohio, was a member of this body, and made an exhaustive examination of taxation matters in the District of Columbia; that I had been close to Mr. Johnson in various ways and had taken a lively interest in the matter that he was investigating. I told him that from that investigation I believed myself qualified to undertake a similar investigation here in the District if the chairman would put me on a proper subcommittee of the House District Committee.

The chairman replied that there was no subcommittee on assessment and taxation, but that he would specially create one and make me chairman, which he did. That is how I came to be called chairman of the investigation out of which this bill came.

MR. JOHNSON, CHAIRMAN.

But the investigation which brought forth the George bill was conducted by another subcommittee of the District Committee, under House resolutions Nos. 154 and 200. Of that subcommittee Mr. JOHNSON himself became chairman, and I became an active member.

An early draft of a bill drawn by me on my own investigation contained the main features of the bill reported to this House, but that early draft was abandoned to await results of the investigation by the committee of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] was chairman. Realizing the difficulty of embracing all kinds of taxation in the inquiry, the committee, at my suggestion, restricted itself to the subject of real estate. The committee left most of the work to me, as the member who, by preliminary inquiry, was best equipped for it, and the subsequent report was written by me and signed by every member of the committee.

The report revealed the fact of great inequality in the assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia that worked a marked benefit for the owners of the higher-priced business and residence properties, and particularly for the speculators who owned the extensive outlying vacant tracts. On the other hand, it worked great hardship on the thousands and thousands of small home owners in the District. The owners of valuable properties, and particularly of the vacant tracts, were greatly underassessed and therefore bore light taxation. The 40,000 small homes of the department clerks and laborers in the District were correspondingly overassessed and heavily taxed.

COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Therefore the plain duty of the committee was to report to the House the fact of this inequality in assessments and the best method of correcting them. The committee accordingly made an exhaustive report and made certain corrective recommendations to this House. These recommendations were very simple. They called for the assessment of the full, true value; the exercise by the assessor of his full powers for adducing testimony under oath relative to real estate values; annual instead of triennial assessments; repeal of the fixed tax rate of 1½ per cent and leaving the tax rate to be determined annually in accordance with the requirements of the budget; substitution of 12 field assessors for the 3 assistant assessors on field work; the creation of a board of tax appeals, from which the field assessors making assessments should be excluded; the restoration to the District of Columbia Commissioners of power to remove the assessor or any of the assistant assessors; and the transfer of the duty of making tax bills from the office of the assessor to that of the tax collector.

This report, containing these recommendations, was signed by all the members of the investigating committee, namely: BEN JOHNSON, HENRY GEORGE, jr., W. A. OLDFIELD, William C. Redfield, C. O. LOBECK, Cyrus A. Sulloway, L. C. DYER, and Victor L. Berger.

One of the recommendations in the report had already been embodied in a separate measure introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. JOHNSON. That measure has passed this House and gone to the Senate. It provides for the recording of the true consideration in all real estate transfers. The other recommendations in the report were embodied in a bill by me, which, after several drafts, became known as the George bill.

It should be noted that this bill related primarily to real estate. When it came up for consideration in the committee the question was asked why personal property was not included. The reply was made that personal property was never considered by the committee; that the subject of personal property had not been examined by the committee; that the law on personal property should be left as it stood on the statute books, at any rate until the committee had had an opportunity to study the matter and was qualified to draft a separate bill on that subject.

PERSONAL PROPERTY TROUBLES.

But when objection was made that this might work a discrimination against personal property by leaving it subject to the fixed tax rate of 1½ per cent, while real estate would be subject to a fluctuating budget rate, and therefore at times at least to a lower rate, I made a new draft of the bill to include the assessment of the kind of personal property that is at present assessed under the law, "tangible" personal property; providing, however, that the tax rate on such tangible personal property be not a fixed one of 1½ per cent, but be determined by the needs of the budget, precisely as provided in the bill for fixing the rate of taxation on real estate.

But when this new draft of the bill was brought in objection was made that, having introduced personal property into the bill, all kinds of personal property, and not merely the "tangible" kind, should be treated, and that an amendment to increase the kinds of personal property would probably be introduced and be urged on the floor of the House. To avoid this danger yet another draft of the bill was made which struck out the whole question of personal property, leaving the law in respect to personal property as it stands, which law taxes only "tangible" personal property and at the fixed rate of 1½ per cent.

To make the matter very clear, I should repeat that the bill as it then stood provided for the assessment of real estate only and for the fixing each year of a tax rate on real estate by the District Commissioners according to the revenue needs. There was no reference in the bill to personal property.

COMMISSIONERS APPROVE.

At this stage the bill was, in the regular course of things, submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their criticism, and received the following hearty approval:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 17, 1914.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON, Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to request of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives for report on House bill 12873, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to reply as follows:

The Commissioners urgently recommend the enactment of the bill into law. They are in complete accord with the purposes of the bill and are of the opinion that the work contemplated by its provisions is one of the most needed services in the District government.

The important provisions of the bill are as follows:

First. The establishment of annual assessments instead of triennial assessments as made at present.

Second. An increase in the assessment valuation from two-thirds to full value.

Third. The establishment of a fluctuating tax rate to be fixed by the Commissioners with a view to providing whatever revenue is needed by the District.

Fourth. The creation of an organization that can adequately and effectively carry out the purposes of the bill.

In the opinion of the Commissioners the bill adequately and comprehensively makes rational and constructive provision for placing the process of assessing property and raising revenue upon a sound, practical, and efficient basis under the taxation theory in force in the District of Columbia. It meets the fundamental criticism of assessments in the District of Columbia based upon the exhaustive investigation of that subject by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives and expressed as a matter of common knowledge in and out of the District for a great many years. That criticism is that it is utterly impossible under the existing law to make proper and intelligent assessments in this jurisdiction. The fact that assessments are triennial, the fact that they are made on a two-third interest of a full valuation, and the fact that only three men can be employed to do the work necessarily produce an assessment in which inequalities are bound to obtain. Although only three real estate assessors are provided the law requires that all three shall personally view every parcel of ground assessed. It is obvious, therefore, that the close attention and investigation demanded if an assessment is to be accurate and just can not be given under the existing system.

When to this is added the fact that the assessments are made every three years and that property values are constantly and in some sections rapidly changing, the impossibility of making a scientific assessment under the present law is doubly manifest. In establishing annual assessments in the District of Columbia Congress will be doing no more than following the well-demonstrated tendency of the world away from biennial or triennial assessments and toward annual or continuing assessments.

In the opinion of the commissioners, there is no theory upon which can be justified the assessment of property at anything less than its full value. There is no more reason for the District government to determine values upon a percentage basis of their full value than for private parties dealing with each other to consider property on a percentage of its full value. The experience of communities generally in the United States has been that assessments made upon a percentage valuation have merely offered opportunity for inequalities and injustice, either by design or by error. The simpler and more effective method of regulating the amount of taxes which the individual shall pay is by raising or lowering the tax levy, always upon a full valuation of the property affected.

The commissioners approve the provision of the bill which places in the hands of the commissioners the authority and responsibility for fixing the tax rate. In their opinion, a rigid tax rate fixed by law and immovable except by congressional action is economically unsound and an encouragement to extravagance in the expenditure of revenues. Practically every city in the United States except Washington approaches the raising and expenditure of revenues from a standpoint exactly opposite the one used here. In other cities the municipal officers charged with that responsibility make up a budget including the estimated necessary expenditures for the coming year and then fix their tax rate at a figure which will produce the amount of money required.

In the District of Columbia the commissioners and Congress first determine how much revenue the District will have, and then prepare a budget which it is estimated will consume that revenue. In other words, other cities make their revenues meet their needs, but in Washington the commissioners and Congress make their needs meet their revenues. The reason for this difference is that in the District of Columbia the tax rate is rigid and produces a certain sum of money automatically without regard to the needs of the community, while in other cities the tax rate is fixed each year to provile a certain needed sum. The system used in other cities is economically sound and tends to economy in municipal administration; the system in the District of Columbia is economically unsound and tends to extravagance in municipal administration.

The commissioners desire to point out that in view of the fact that it is impossible for the three assessors now provided by law justly and intelligently to assess the property of the District of Columbia every three years, it is obvious that it would be impossible for that many men to assess the property of the District of Columbia every year. It is imperative, therefore, that to accomplish the improvements contemplated under this bill and to make effective the reforms outlined above more assessors will be necessary. The commissioners by reference to similar work in other cities find that the number of assessors provided in the bill will be no more than adequate. Their experience and observation also cause them to believe that the salaries for assessor and assistant assessors provided in the bill are necessary in order to get men of such a character and training as will make certain the accomplishment of the purposes of the measure.

Very respectfully,
THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By O. P. NEWMAN, President.

COMMITTEE DIVIDES.

But notwithstanding this high approval by the Commissioners of the District, some of the committee, led by the chairman, determined to change the character of the bill, and by a majority vote carried out their purpose. They struck out the budget plan of fixing a tax rate by the Commissioners based upon the revenue needs—a high rate if the revenue needs should be large, a low rate if the revenue need should be small, and in the place of this adjustable rate they placed the present fixed rate of 1½ per cent. They moreover reinserted personal property into the bill, and not only included "tangible" but also intangible personal property. Thus the result of their work was not only to extend the categories of taxable personal property but to fix a high rate of taxation upon them. In this form the so-called George bill has been reported to the House by the gentleman from Iowa, Judge PROUTY, for the majority of the committee. Nothing remained for the minority of the committee to do but to present as a minority report an earlier draft of the George bill which restricted taxable personal property to the tangible kind, as the law now stands, and which provided for the flexible budget plan of tax rate to be fixed by the Commissioners for such personal property the same as for real estate—a high tax rate if the revenue needs should be large, a low tax rate if the revenue needs should be small. This is the draft of the George bill which I, on behalf of the minority of the committee, have presented to the House, and which the gentleman from Iowa is pleased to think embodies an entirely new idea.

The bill introduced by the minority members of this committee is offered to this House in substitution of the bill introduced by the majority of the committee, and is practically the original George bill. The effect of the majority bill would be to increase materially the taxes of a very large proportion of the people of the District without benefiting the District government, for the need of the local government is not more revenue. More revenue can be secured at any time. Nobody doubts that the District of Columbia could be made to yield more revenue. The rates can be changed if there is necessity for more revenue.

This House, I believe, wants to pass a proper bill—wants to do justice. But I think there can be no justice in a kind of taxation provided under the majority bill. It was not the original purpose of the committee to report such a bill. It could not be the purpose of at least two of the men on the committee to so report. These men were in the former Congress and were among those who reported the exhaustive real estate examination. They are the chairman of the District Committee and myself. We both signed the report, and that report called for a just assessment of real estate and its taxation under a budget plan, which is the prevailing system now in the larger cities of this country and in many parts of the world. Why, then, should the majority of the committee seek another course? Why should they try to raise more revenue than the present needs call for? Why fix a rate of taxation instead of adopting a fluctuating, adjustable plan? The answer is, because of the "half-and-half" principle.

HALF AND HALF.

This half-and-half principle is a feature of the existing law, which provides that the United States Government shall contribute a dollar toward District expenses for every dollar raised for such purpose by the District government. Each Government pays one-half of the local expenses. The District Committee of this House has had this feature of the law under consideration and has reported a bill abolishing it. That bill is on the Calendar of the House at this time and has been there for several weeks past. It could have been called up to-day for consideration in place of the so-called George bill. It could have been called up on the last preceding District day, and in fact might have been considered by the House on any District day for some time past, but it has not been called up; nor is there any certainty of when it will be called up. For there is great doubt as to whether or not the bill if called up would pass this House. In fact there is strong feeling in this committee that if the bill were to be called up at this time it would be defeated.

But there is a belief that if the half-and-half principle can not be killed now by a direct repeal act it might be killed indirectly through the so-called George bill, by causing that bill to raise enough revenue to meet all the needs of the District government without any contribution whatever from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, I myself have strong feelings about the half-and-half principle. I made a speech upon that subject soon after becoming a Member of Congress. I took the ground that the half-and-half principle was not a good principle. The effect of taking money out of the Federal Treasury and giving it to the District of Columbia in appropriations in effect makes Washington a better place to live in and therefore booms the price of land here. The people of the District are charged in higher rents for any advantage given by the Federal Government through a half-and-half principle. You can see what would be the effect if the Federal Government should supply all the revenue needed by the District of Columbia. That would mean that the people who own Washington would not have to pay any taxes. Higher would go rents here because of this gift out of the Federal Treasury.

The fact of the matter is that this half-and-half principle enters into the consideration of all manner of questions before the District Committee, just as it has entered into the consideration of the so-called George bill.

ORIGINAL BILL WOULD HAVE PASSED.

The original George bill would have been reported to this House, I have no doubt, and would have passed this House without any difficulty whatever if the half-and-half principle had not been tangled up with it in this way. The gentleman from Iowa who has reported the George bill, as it has been reported to this House, has, in my belief, had the purpose to show how, by a high fixed tax rate on a high valuation of various kinds of property, and more particularly on new kinds of property, an immense revenue would be raised that would make quite unnecessary any gift out of the Federal Treasury to meet the budget, and consequently effect the abolition of the half-and-half law.

The gentleman from Iowa has talked on a great number of subjects that I think are unnecessary to discuss in this debate. It is not necessary, for instance, to talk now about the form of government or of suffrage. The whole matter at issue comes down to a very simple question. Some gentlemen of the majority believe that we should report a bill that fixes 1½ per cent as the rate of taxation on real estate and upon personal property—tangible and intangible personal property—and without examination of what "intangible" property is or what is done about it elsewhere. It has been repeatedly urged by me in the committee to take up personal property for investigation, to go into it elaborately, call witnesses and experts, and make a full report before presenting a bill on the subject to Congress. But the majority of the committee decided to act without such an investigation, and so injected every kind of personal property into the George bill.

This action on the part of the majority was, moreover, a calm assumption that the taxation of all kinds of personal property is perfectly certain taxation, whereas nothing is more uncertain. A taxation maxim warns us not to attempt to tax anything that can run away, and the universal testimony of assessors is to the effect that such taxation falls heavily upon the poor, who can not evade or get away, and lightly upon the rich, who can seek less burdensome places. A very able lawyer practicing in the District of Columbia told me in conversation about personal-property taxation that he believed Congress could not frame a law in this respect that he could not show a client how to evade, and one of my colleagues here in this House, Mr. KEATING of Colorado, puts in my hands a clipping from a newspaper in his district—the Colorado Springs Gagette—in which I find the report of a very brilliant speech recently delivered by Mr. John B. McGauran in All Souls Unitarian Church. Mr. McGauran said:

SCIENTIFIC BURGLAR'S JOB.

Pick out the most scientific and successful burglar you can find for the next assessor of El Paso County. He is the only one who will be able to find out how much personal property has been untaxed in your community for years, not through the failure of the assessor to do his duty but through the present lax system which puts a premium on perjury in dishonest returns on his tax sheet.

I also offer in this connection an extract from an article by Henry M. Hyde that appeared recently in the Chicago Tribune, telling of the actions of Tax Commissioner "Joe" Pastoriza in Houston, Tex.

Mr. Hyde says:

As soon as he was appointed, Pastoriza announced that he would not try to collect any taxes on personal property. Not one-tenth of the personal property was ever discovered; it simply made half the people of the town perjure themselves; and all the real taxable value was in real estate anyhow. * * *

Presently and naturally the big real estate owners of the city got frightened. They called on the mayor and demanded that Pastoriza must stop his revolutionary talk. * * *

"All right," said Pastoriza, finally, "I will do as you say and obey the law just as it is written." He picked up a sheet of paper and a lead pencil. "I'll begin with myself. I've got $5,000 cash in bank, $13,000 loaned out on mortgages, and $20,000 in real estate. I'll write them all down opposite my own name.

"Now we'll take you, Mr. Smith," he said addressing the chairman of the committee and one of the richest men in the city. "If I have $5,000 in bank, you must have at least $50,000. We'll put that down. If I have $13,000 loaned out, you must have at least $75,000 invested in mortgages. We'll put that down."

Pastoriza went on with two or three other members of the committee in the same way. Finally they all threw up their hands. If Pastoriza's talk about taxing nothing but land was revolutionary, this threat that he would really enforce the law and tax all personal property was complete madness. Anything was better than that. They agreed to let Pastoriza go ahead with his scheme.

A POOR WOMAN'S CASE.

Returning to the District of Columbia the assessor's books show some pitiable entries, to wit: Mrs. Martha J. Bigoness on the Chain Bridge Road. She is taxed on garden tools, $10; 1 mare, $80; 2 cows, $70; 3 dozen hens, $15; 1 carriage, two seats, $40; 1 wagon, $25; 1 buggy, $25. Total value, $265. Tax, $3.98.

This case is but a single illustration of one of the ways which personal-property taxation operates upon the poor in the District of Columbia. Had Mrs. Bigoness been a rich woman perhaps her personal property, obviously of so little value, would not have been considered worth putting on the tax list and while the amount of the tax she has been called upon to pay is small it has materially increased the cost of living to her. Bonds and diamonds of the rich can be hidden or carried away and thus escape taxation, but Mrs. Bigoness can not hide or carry away the forms of her personal property which constitute so material a part of her fortunes, upon which her very livelihood depends.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I will.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman during the course of his remarks has spoken about this report as being a majority report. The gentleman knows that the report is signed by only 8 out of 20 members of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. The majority report is signed by 8 members of the 20 members, and the minority report is signed by 7, but I have conceded, simply followed the usage of the House, and supposed that there are some other members who signed the majority report subsequent to those whose names appear in the printed report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say for the enlightenment of the House on the subject that the majority report is signed only by those who were present when the vote upon this matter was taken. The substitute which the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] has offered, which the committee never had an opportunity to see, is signed by more than were present upon the occasion when final action was taken. It seems from the report that Members who were not present have been polled for the purpose of signing a minority report, when they were not present at the time of voting. A previous vote was taken when those who signed the majority report nearly doubled those who have actually signed it.

Mr. GEORGE. And there were times, Mr. Chairman, when the minority number was very much more than seven and when the majority was only one in excess.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; in one instance when there was a very small attendance, and the condition the gentleman from New York stated is correct, though it is but fair to the majority who signed this report to say that no member of the committee who was not present at the final action has been asked or permitted to sign.

WHO SIGNED THE REPORTS.

Mr. GEORGE. And it is also proper to tell the House that the minority had to withdraw and make a report by themselves; they could not of necessity make their report at this final meeting of the whole committee, of which the gentleman from Kentucky speaks, but did it at another place and at another time, and had to get members together in order to get them to report, just as they could.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Which was not in a meeting of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Not in a meeting of the committee, but it was perfectly obvious that it was on this committee business, and it could not possibly be on any other.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if anybody who signed the majority report had any notice of the meeting of which he speaks?

Mr. GEORGE. I consulted with the chairman of the committee as to the time of making the report and how to make the report, telling him I knew nothing of this kind of business, and if I have broken any of the rules of the House or any of the customs of the House, or in any way have been derelict in this matter, I beg the consideration of the House, and I also beg to inform the House that I was governed as much as I could be by the judgment and advice of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I desire to say that I did not in the slightest intend to reflect upon the gentleman in any way, and he knows full well that I did not. The question which was put to the gentleman from New York by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] was for the purpose of showing that a majority of the committee had not signed the majority report; whereas, as a matter of fact, upon every vote taken at the many meetings that the committee had a majority of those present was as it is now, and nobody who was not present was permitted to sign this report.

Mr. COADY. May I ask the chairman a question? Of course my purpose was not to question whether a majority of those present at the meeting signed the majority report. That is true. Is it not altogether true that the majority of the whole committee signed in favor of this bill as amended?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let me understand you, please.

Mr. COADY. I want to know if it is true that a majority of the committee is opposed to this bill as amended?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Why, no, indeed. Such a thing is beyond reason, because every vote that was ever taken in the committee resulted the same way as when this vote was taken.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman misunderstands me. I said a majority of the whole committee, so far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not entertain the slightest doubt that an overwhelming majority of the committee is for this bill just as it has been reported.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said he was not familiar with the practice. I think the usual practice for a committee which orders a bill reported is for one man to report it in behalf of the committee. It is very unusual for the majority to sign the committee report. Of course, it is done, but it is not required to be done. And then the minority should submit their views, and not a report, and sign them. It is the customary and proper thing to do.

THE CUSTOM OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GEORGE. Therefore the minority followed the custom of the House and a majority did not?

Mr. MANN. They did not follow the custom.

Mr. IGOE. If the gentleman will permit, in order to get myself straight in this RECORD, I will say that at the meeting, when the vote was taken, I reserved the right to sign any minority report that would meet my views. I did not know what the report would be.

A MEMBER. Write it yourself.

Mr. IGOE. I did not have to write one myself. I found one that was satisfactory.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, to get back to taxation, I understood originally that this House wanted information on the subject of taxation in the District, and I undertook, with the help of my associates and the very strong approval of the chairman of the committee, to make an investigation of real estate in the District. I do not profess to know much more than that, except as any Member of this House may know about his district and about things generally in the United States. And I presented a bill embodying the things I have found in the District of Columbia, which I understood this committee to be unanimous about, until the half-and-half question arose.

The committee had approved a half-and-half repeal bill (Crisp bill), and it is on the calendar. But the committee has not taken that bill off the calendar. It is still there. It could be taken up at any time, and we could settle here and now this question of whether or not the Federal Government should make a gift of one-half or other part toward the District of Columbia expenditures. But we are not doing that. We are not venturing to do that. Evidently we are afraid to do that. The majority of the District Committee proposes to hit the thing in another way. That other way is, as I have said, through the so-called George bill, reported by the gentleman from Iowa. I never had any purpose of embodying such an idea in my bill and I repudiate it. I come upon this floor to beat such a bill, and, if I can, to substitute the original idea of the George bill and have that George bill go through this House and go to the Senate embodying the original ideas.

It is deplorable indeed that there should exist such a condition in the District of Columbia that prevents Congress from passing a simple taxation measure without involving this half-and-half question. Every time we come upon this floor we get involved in this question. The last appropriation bill involved it. When the appropriation bill went over to the Senate the half-and-half was involved there. The newspapers took it up, and everybody was confused. The men who really believe that there should be no contribution from the Federal Treasury are regarded as scoundrels by a lot of people in the District of Columbia because the newspapers say they want to rob the District of money that the people of the United States intend through Congress to contribute to the District.

Now I, myself, am clear on this half-and-half question. I should like to bring it up, not in this bill, but in a separate bill. Let us have a vote on it. Let it be decided once and for all. Let us have a half-and-half principle, a three-quarters principle, a quarter principle, or any kind of a principle you please. But this ought to be a distinct and separate matter from the George bill.

PRIVATE PROFITS FROM TAXATION.

There is no doubt that many people have been using taxation powers in the District of Columbia for their own profit. There is no doubt that the poor men in the District who own or who are struggling to get little lots and homes have been taxed too high and that a great number of rich owners in the District have been taxed too low. These are plain things, and every man who is interested in the District of Columbia wants to have them changed. We have plainly stated the case in the George bill. I think so and I think that up to the time of our confusion the whole committee thought so. The District chairman [Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky], for whom I have great respect and with whom in the past I have worked in the greatest possible harmony and who gave me his support up to this time, thought so. All of us would be in harmony to-day if it were not for this half-and-half principle. That has confused the matter.

What I have set out to do, and what I shall propose at the proper time to do, is to offer the substitute in the minority report for the bill reported by the majority and have that pass this House. It does not involve the half-and-half principle. It leaves the half-and-half principle for this House to settle in some other way. The committee can bring it up at some other time.

Then, as to personal property taxation, it is a perfectly simple matter to bring up in the committee for investigation. A bill can be drawn, based upon the findings of that investigation. That would give a logical and proper process to the workings of the committee and to the justice of the case.

If you pass this bill offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] you are in result repealing the half-and-half law without bringing that principle upon this floor. You are doing grave injustice to the small home owners of the District. You are getting taxations matters woefully confused. I will work, and I am not afraid of work. I have made myself sick in this committee by work. But I am willing to work only when there is a definite object in sight, and that object is for the benefit of the District of Columbia. But obviously there can be no hope of such a result when stray questions are permitted to confuse councils. Therefore, I scornfully repudiate the so-called George bill reported by the majority of the District Committee to this House.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Some time in the last year I read a considerable portion of a very interesting report that the gentleman from New York made about taxation in the District, and my recollection is that he divided the city of Washington into four or five different parts, and he showed that the very rich people paid some 40 per cent of actual valuation and that the poor people paid something like 75 or 80 per cent—I have forgotten which. Was that in the report?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; practically that.

Mr. MURDOCK. What caused that? How could that be done?

UNEQUAL ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. GEORGE. By wrong assessments.

Mr. MURDOCK. It was simply faulty assessments?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir. I will explain to the gentleman that the assessor and his assistants coming before the committee complained that they had not adequate help. They were required, under the law, to do other things that consumed their time, and that they could not make a proper assessment, even though these assessments were made only once in three years. The bill I drew met that situation by increasing the number of assessors and giving them powers they never before had.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, if the present bill brought before the House corrects that condition, why should we not support it? I have heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] this morning for a few moments say that this was the child of the gentleman from New York, and now I have just heard the gentleman from New York say he repudiated the child. Why should not this House pass that bill if it will bring about the correction of the evil the gentleman has just stated? I want to be clear on it.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the gentleman will support that part of the bill. The minority want that; but the part of the bill that the minority does not want, the part which it expressly repudiates, relates to the assessment and taxation of all personal property in the District of Columbia, which it does not believe in. There are some kinds of personal property now assessed and taxed, and they are in the George bill. We did not go any further than that, because there has been no examination of this branch of taxation in the District; and it seemed an injustice; it seemed to be a foolish process of taxation to incorporate some things for taxation that had not been expressly examined.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does not the gentleman's remedy lie in a motion to recommit, so that that part which is objectionable may be left out?

Mr. GEORGE. That would be a proper course; yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not see any necessity, then, for the gentleman disclaiming this child.

Mr. GEORGE. At the proper time I will expect the gentleman's support.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say to the gentleman that I am against the half-and-half proposition from the ground up.

TROUBLE WITH SECOND SECTION.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman from Kansas does not understand that the whole objection is in section 2 of the bill. Section 2 of the bill as originally framed by the gentleman from New York has been changed by the majority of the committee so as to provide not only for the assessment of all personal property and real estate, but at a fixed rate of 15 mills for all kinds of property.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. I hope the gentleman understands.

Mr. MURDOCK. I fairly do, except that the gentleman from New York has been talking about the half-and-half system, a system to which I am opposed, and I take it that the gentleman from New York is opposed to it, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is opposed to it. Now, really where is the trouble? I can not find it myself.

Mr. GEORGE. The gentleman did not understand what I said about the half-and-half proposition, and he certainly did not understand what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] said about it. He probably made too long a speech for you to stay and hear it all. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not plead guilty; but go ahead.

Mr. GEORGE. The second section of the George bill was cut out, and a substitute section was put in by the majority, and the bill was then reported to the House. That is the George bill that you see to-day.

Mr. McCOY. That is the one I want to repudiate.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, to make it just a little fuller, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. MURDOCK. Let us hear it.

Mr. GEORGE. There are two features in the substitute that are different from the original George bill. The substitute second section cut out the principle of a budget rate, which is a fluctuating rate, to be fixed by the Commissioners of the District according to the necessities of the case each year. It would be a high rate of taxation one time, and a low rate of taxation another time, according to the revenue needs of the District. It is a perfectly just system. It has been a success elsewhere and ought to be adopted here.

A BUDGET RATE.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. How do you propose a budget system without determining what ratio the Federal Government, as such, shall bear to the total expense? Assuming that the Federal Government was to bear a half or a third or a fourth you would have a different rate of taxation in order to raise the District's portion, according as the Government paid the half, the third, or the fourth. In other words, how can the commission determine the rate on a budget theory unless prior to that the question of what proportion of the total is to be borne by the District and what by the Federal Government is determined?

Mr. GEORGE. The provision was so worded that the commissioners could determine that rate if there was a half-and-half law operating, or if there was some other law operating—so that we could let the half-and-half remain on the statute books or sweep it away. The commissioners, knowing what they had to do, with the help of the haif-and-half or without it, could fix the rate accordingly.

Mr. SHERLEY. In other words, it was predicated upon the idea that prior to fixing the rate the ratio of contribution from the Federal Government would have been determined?

Mr. GEORGE. The gentleman is exactly right

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Different gentlemen have spoken in regard to the comparative tax rates of different cities throughout the country, as indicated on that chart there. Now, does that refer to the municipal taxes of those various cities?

Mr. GEORGE. Do not ask me about that wonderful map. It is not mine.

Mr. TRIBBLE. In the figures that we have given us, in the comparison of the tax rates of Washington, New York, Atlanta, and other cities, are those illustrations given as municipal rates?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the gentleman from Georgia ask the gentleman from Iowa about that?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, I will ask the gentleman.
Mr. GEORGE. I will grant the time.
Mr. PROUTY. The figures given in those tables are supposed to be the actual amount of money that each municipality raises on its property for municipal, State, and county purposes.
Mr. TRIBBLE. This city does not pay any tax except a municipital tax. It is a part of the Government. Now, has the gentleman considered this fact——
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GEORGE. What time has expired?
The CHAIRMAN. One hour.
Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 45 minutes more.
Mr. GEORGE. To get this matter of time straight, is the minority to have as much time as the majority?
Mr. PAYNE. It should have; yes.
Mr. GEORGE. Then, there will be granted, in addition to 1 hour, 45 minutes, then 30 minutes, and then 10 minutes?
Mr. MANN. We will give you all the time you need, I think.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is no positive arrangement about the time, but he is aware of what happened in the other instance.
Mr. PROUTY. So far as I can control it, I will state that I shall be glad to yield to that side all the time they want and will ask that they have it.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York have 45 minutes more time. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve that time, then.
Mr. TRIBBLE. As I understand, county and State taxes are not estimated in this comparison.
Mr. PROUTY. Yes; they are.
Mr. MADDEN. But I understand there is one thing that is not included, and that is special assessments for the improvement of streets and the construction of sidewalks and sewers.
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor?
Mr. GEORGE. I will yield to Judge PROUTY to answer the question relating to his chart.
Mr. PROUTY (to Mr. GEORGE). Under your bill there was no change made in the rate of assessment of personal property, was there?
Mr. GEORGE. In one of my bills——
Mr. PROUTY. The one that came before the committee.
Mr. GEORGE. A bill was introduced with no mention of personal property, and therefore no fixing of the rate in any way.
Mr. PROUTY. It left the rate on personal property as at present?
Mr. GEORGE. Yes.
Mr. PROUTY. Assuming the value of real estate as estimated in your report is correct, $744,000,000, and the Commissioners found it necessary to levy on that for enough to make up what was needed, with the $7,000,000, approximately, that would be collected from the other sources, has the gentleman done any figuring to ascertain what rate of taxation the Commissioners would have to levy on real estate to make up that $7,000,000?
Mr. GEORGE. I have not; there was no necessity of my figuring on that.
Mr. PROUTY. If there were $744,000,000 worth of real estate, and you only had to assess enough to make up the deficit, is not the gentleman from New York mathematician enough to know that it would only take a rate of 6 mills?
Mr. GEORGE. "If ifs and ands were pots and pans"—the gentleman knows the rest of it.
Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman does not mean to cast any reflection on his own figures.
Mr. GEORGE. No, you are naming the figures.
Mr. PROUTY. I am quoting from the gentleman's report.
Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the gentleman I can not answer him. The gentleman has done a lot of speculation as to what would fall on personal property and what would fall on real estate if my version of the bill were to pass. I will tell the gentleman that I would leave to the Commissioners of the District the business of determining what tax rate on real estate and tangible personal property will raise enough revenue to meet the needs of the District.

THE SIMPLE CASE.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. I want to see whether I understand the gentleman's position. Congress makes various appropriations for the District of Columbia, some in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, some in the legislative bill, some in the sundry civil bill, some in some other bills, and in each case specifies how much money shall be paid out of the funds belonging to the District of Columbia in the Treasury. Do I understand the gentleman's bill to mean that when these appropriations are all made, specifying the amount that is to be paid out of the District treasury, then the District of Columbia Commissioners shall fix a tax rate on the property which has been assessed which will raise this sum of money?
Mr. GEORGE. Yes.
Mr. MANN. And they will not fix the rate until after the appropriations have been made?
Mr. GEORGE. After the appropriations are made.
Mr. MANN. The appropriations specify out of what fund they shall be paid, so that there is no difficulty about the half-and-half principle. You would not raise the money in the District if the appropriation said that it was to be paid out of the General Treasury, and if it was to be paid out of District fund, the District Commissioners would ascertain the rate which would raise that sum of money?
Mr. GEORGE. Yes.
Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.
Mr. MAPES. The original George bill did not change in any way the half-and-half principle; it simply provided that in raising the one-half that was to be raised by District taxation the rate should be established by the District Commissioners?
Mr. GEORGE. The first bill brought into the committee and discussed by the committee when the gentleman from Michigan was present contained no reference to the half-and-half principle, but one of the gentlemen on the minority side thought that there should be a provision in the bill which would make it adjustable to whatever should be the agreement of Congress as to the half and half, or as to any other proportion that the Federal Treasury should contribute. And the bill was made adjustable by a provision which I think the gentleman knows about.
Mr. MAPES. But the bill at no time attempted to abolish the half-and-half principle?
Mr. GEORGE. It did not and does not now.
Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GEORGE. Yes.
Mr. GOULDEN. What is the amount of personal property in the District subject to taxation as returned by the assessors?
Mr. GEORGE. I can not answer the gentleman.
Mr. GOULDEN. Approximately?
Mr. GEORGE. I can not tell.
Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] said about $100,000,000.
Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman from New York yield?
Mr. GEORGE. Yes.
Mr. LEVY. I would like to know the difference between these two bills. Your bill is to levy taxes by a budget, with the Government supplying its share. The other bill is to make a rate of 1½ per cent on a full valuation, which may amount to many millions more than would be the needs of the District. Is that it?
Mr. GEORGE. That is, so far as described, correct. But in addition the majority tax various kinds of personal property, while the minority tax only tangible property.
Mr. LEVY. Does the bill reported by the majority do away with what the Government is supposed to pay as its half?
Mr. GEORGE. I think it intends to effect that result.
Mr. LEVY. If the rate was fixed at 1½ per cent on real estate and all kinds of personal property, it might raise millions more than the District needed.
Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it might make unnecessary any contribution from the Government.
Mr. LEVY. And indirectly that might repeal the half-and-half principle?
Mr. GEORGE. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is disappointing to me indeed to have to differ from my good friend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and it is only because of strong conviction that I do so. I think the discussion up to the present time has not taken just the course it should have taken. I would first call the attention of the House to the title of the bill. It says, "A bill relating to the assessment for taxation of real estate in the District of Columbia." That is the purpose of the bill. That is all that this minority bill, either when it was introduced or to-day, proposes to do—provide for the assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia for the purpose of taxation.

Now, we have heard discussed everything under the sun, it seems to me, except this question of assessment of real estate. Lines 3 and 4 in the substitute bill, H. R. 14891, which we have offered, says: "All real estate in the District of Columbia subject to taxation shall hereafter be assessed annually at its true value." The important thing there is that it shall be assessed annually and at its true value. Heretofore real estate has only been assessed at two-thirds of its value, and sometimes a good deal less.

We have had a very illuminating discussion by Judge PROUTY to the effect that heretofore valuable property—real estate of a speculative character—has been on the roll at anywhere from 20 to 30, 35 and 40 per cent of its true value, and that therefore it ought to be assessed at its true value in money. To all of that I agree, and every Member who signs this minority report agrees. There is no dispute about that; but that, my friends, is everything that was attempted by the original George bill. There has been something said in regard to leaving personal property by the terms of the original bill at the old fixed rate of $1.50. That was provided in the second bill introduced by Mr. GEORGE. The only reason for doing so was in order to bring all of the members of the committee together on one proposition, if possible. I suggested at the time the difficulty in which we would find ourselves in leaving the fixed rate on personal property, and accordingly when we found ourselves unable to agree with the majority of the committee we have specifically stated on page 2 of the proposed substitute which we offer that the tax rate hereafter levied upon tangible personal property "now assessable" shall be the same as that fixed by the said commissioners, to be levied upon real estate as hereinafter provided. We make no change in the kinds, classes, or amounts of property to be hereafter assessed. That was necessary if we were to follow our own theory of this matter, and we therefore leave the kinds and classes of personal and real property just as they were and only provide for a full-value assessment and a uniform rate. It was necessary to provide that they should be taxed at the same rate, otherwise we might have, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] has said, a rate upon real estate that is 6 or 7 mills, while we would have 15 mills on personal property.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. PROUTY. In the bill as it was reported to the committee, or as it came to the committee——

Mr. CROSSER. There were two bills which came to the committee.

Mr. PROUTY. In the one we acted upon there was no provision for the assessment of personal property at all.

Mr. CROSSER. No.

Mr. PROUTY. And there was no amendment offered by anyone on the gentleman's side in making that change in that bill.

Mr. CROSSER. I mentioned the fact at the time that personally, except for the desire to bring the committee to an agreement, I thought there ought to be provided that the rate should be the same on both classes of property.

Mr. PROUTY. And this bill you have later reported was drawn up after the majority report was signed?

Mr. CROSSER. Necessarily. We did not know what the majority might report.

Mr. PROUTY. The substitute bill itself.

Mr. CROSSER. But we reintroduced the old bill, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. PROUTY. But that was after the majority of the committee had reported?

Mr. CROSSER. Oh, yes. We were in the position of not knowing what the majority report was going to be, and necessarily could not make the minority report at that time.

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman knew what the bill was going to be.

Mr. CROSSER. I am not sure about that.

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman was present.

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; I knew what was reported at the meeting.

Mr. PROUTY. But the gentleman did not suppose I would report anything that was not agreed to at the meeting.

Mr. CROSSER. Oh, no; but the gentleman made some reference to the fact that we did not make a report at that meeting.

Mr. PROUTY. You never submitted a minority report to the committee.

Mr. CROSSER. No; but our views had been discussed fully before the committee.

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman offered no amendment incorporating it into the bill.

Mr. CROSSER. Oh, yes; I think we did. I would not be certain about that; but I think I offered an amendment myself. I will not be certain about it; but in any event that is neither here nor there. We are not discussing what possible inconsistencies there might have been at one time or another during the deliberations of the committee, what poor skill the minority may have shown in the dispute. That is not the point. But we are trying to ascertain now what is the best thing to do, and we have submitted in the minority report a bill which we think carries into effect the principles we had in mind. That bill provides for a full valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia, and provides further that instead of having a fixed, rigid, definite $1.50 rate, the rate hereafter shall be such as the commissioners may fix in order to procure the amount of revenue the District may be required by law to furnish.

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman's bill even as now proposed does not intend or provide for the assessment at all of moneys and credits.

Mr. CROSSER. Absolutely not.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman give to the House his reasons why moneys and credits and that class of property should escape taxation?

Mr. CROSSER. If the gentleman will consider what I have said, he will see what is my position on that question. It is quite true, as the gentleman's question implies, that he and I would never agree. Perhaps never is a long while, but we would not agree to-day or next week upon the question as to what property ought to be subject to taxation; but we certainly can agree as to how such property as may be subject to taxation shall be valued for that purpose, and that is all this bill undertakes to do. If the gentleman desires to rearrange the system of taxation, a proposition which is not involved in this bill, why not introduce a bill for that purpose? Why not present it as a square issue to the House instead of trying to do it indirectly?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Why is it that all property in the District of Columbia should not be taxed?

Mr. CROSSER. That is exactly the same question as the gentleman from Iowa has just asked me.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman said there might be same difference as to what property should be taxed and what not? Will the gentleman tell us what kind of property he believes should be taxed?

Mr. CROSSER. To answer the gentleman directly—although I think it is not germane to the discussion—I believe that men should be taxed according to the privilege they enjoy, rather than according to the energy they expend and enterprise they display.

Mr. GARNER. Then the gentleman does not believe in a property tax?

Mr. CROSSER. A property tax?

Mr. GARNER. I mean a personal-property tax.

Mr. CROSSER. I am frank to say I do not.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CROSSER. I will.

Mr. GORMAN. This bill is not drawn—the original George bill is not drawn—on the principle of the single tax?

Mr. CROSSER. Not at all.

Mr. GORMAN. And as far as the gentleman knows the principle of drawing it on the lines of the single tax did not enter into the mind of any member of the committee?

Mr. CROSSER. Absolutely not.

Mr. GORMAN. If the gentleman will permit one more suggestion, I rather think that from some statements which were made, both by Mr. PROUTY and Mr. GEORGE, that the Members here might get the impression that Judge PROUTY's amendment wipes out the single-tax theory in the bill and Mr. GEORGE's proposition seeks to inject it into this legislation, and, as far as I am concerned, I know that is not the fact about it.

Mr. CROSSER. Absolutely not.

Mr. GORMAN. I wanted to make that clear.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman let me see if I state the proposition precisely——

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. As originally intended by the bill which Mr. GEORGE originally introduced, the half-and-half principle was to be left undisturbed?

Mr. CROSSER. Absolutely.

Mr. COOPER. And the property was to be valued in full?
Mr. CROSSER. That is right.
Mr. COOPER. And then it was left to the commissioners to fix the rate that would be required under the law for the District to pay.
Mr. CROSSER. I thought I had made that clear.
Mr. COOPER. Of course the gentleman did make it clear, but there was question after question showing that some gentlemen did not seem to know what the gentleman was talking about.
Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield? To make the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin complete ought it not to be said also that the tax was to be levied on real estate alone?
Mr. CROSSER. Oh, no; let me continue for just a minute.
Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CROSSER. Yes.
Mr. MAPES. The rate to be assessed on real estate was to be on full cash value, and the George bill left undisturbed the tax on personal property and exempts everything except tangible personal property and $1.000 worth of household goods and personal apparel and ornaments.
Mr. CROSSER. I think I can answer both questions at the same time. The original George bill and the substitute bill which we have presented for the consideration of the House at the present time says this——
Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain this——
Mr. CROSSER. Let me finish this, please. It says: "The tax rate hereafter levied upon tangible personal property now assessable." "Now assessable." I say we left that absolutely undisturbed. We neither added to the amount of personal property to be taxed nor diminished the amount of personal property to be taxed. We deliberately and purposely left it as it was, in order not to raise this question as to the kinds of property which should be taxed.
Mr. MURDOCK. Was that in the original George bill?
Mr. CROSSER. Yes, sir; that was in the original George bill.
Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield just for a question or a suggestion? I want to see if I understand one proposition. If I understand it, the original George bill and the substitute that you now submit only affect the present law in the District of Columbia in two respects. One is, it provides for a full rendition, and the other is that it makes the commissioners adjust the rate in accordance to the conditions as they then appear.
Mr. CROSSER. Exactly so; the gentleman is exactly right.
Mr. IGOE. I think, in answer to the gentleman from Kansas, the gentleman made a statement he did not intend to make, and that is that the original George bill did include this personal-property assessment.
Mr. CROSSER. Well, I did not intend to say that.
Mr. IGOE. Whereas, as a matter of fact, the original George bill had to do only with the real estate and left personal property as it was under existing law to-day.
Mr. CROSSER. That is right.
Mr. IGOE. And the amended George bill which the minority offers fixes it for both real estate and personal property that is now taxed and provides a rate for both to be fixed by the commissioners passing upon it.
Mr. MURDOCK. And applying that law to personal property and taxing money, bonds, and so forth, of individuals.
Mr. CROSSER. It left it exactly as it was.
Mr. MURDOCK. You did not apply it to moneys, notes, bonds, and so forth?
Mr. CROSSER. We do not know what is included in the present law, and that is one reason we left it undisturbed.
Mr. IGOE. When the bill was up in the committee and the committee discussed the first bill, was not there stricken out of it every reference to personal-property assessment, so we would not get the thing confused?
Mr. CROSSER. Yes, sir.
Mr. IGOE. Has there been any investigation by which to determine what is a fair rate for a tax on money in bank or anything else?
Mr. CROSSER. There has never been any investigation whatever.
Mr. GARNER. The only difference between the bill you propose and that proposed by the majority of the committee is that the majority of the committee proposed to include all taxable property?
Mr. CROSSER. All taxable property?
Mr. GARNER. I mean that on all property they propose to make a specific rate of 15 mills. Now, then, if we would take away the proposition of 15 mills and adopt the adjustable rate, the only difference would be they would take property not now taxable and you would not.
Mr. CROSSER. That would include a lot of things I do not know anything about. I do not know anything about the propriety of taxing certain personal property at all. I know, of course, what property I would tax. I do not know, however, if you undertake to tax all kinds of property, that this rate would be right or that there should be a different rate.
I wish to return to the original proposition, which seems to be somewhat hazy in spite of the able effort of my friend to make it clear, and that is that the purpose of this bill is just as is stated in its title, "the assessment for taxation of real estate in the District of Columbia." It is perfectly apparent from the discussion that we might not be able to agree on any plan or any rule as to what property should be taxed or what should not be taxed, but there are not two men in this House who would disagree on the proposition that all property that is to be taxed should be taxed according to its full value, and that is what we are doing. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] became quite dramatic and indignant as he stamped about and discussed the half-and-half proposition. The gentleman must not forget, however, that I was one of the members of the committee who voted to repeal the half-and-half law. I am with him on that proposition, but what has that to do with this bill? Will he tell me? That bill is now on the calendar, the second on the page, can be reached at any minute that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] is inclined to call it up, and it specifically provides for the repeal of the half-and-half plan. Why should your committee——
Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?
Mr. CROSSER. I will be glad to do so.
Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman knows that the bill was introduced and is in charge of a gentleman who has been away because of sickness from this House, and it would be a discourteous thing for me to call it up in his absence.
Mr. CROSSER. Does the gentleman say that that is the reason he has not brought up the Crisp bill? If so, why are you trying to do indirectly what you are not willing to do directly? Would it not be fully as indelicate to the gentleman from Georgia to accomplish the same thing by an amendment to this bill as it would be to have called the bill up directly? Is it not a finespun sort of propriety—without meaning that in a derogatory sense—to inflict indirectly upon the gentleman from Georgia a discourtesy which you do not wish to commit directly?
Mr. PROUTY. I have not offered any bill.
Mr. CROSSER. I am ready to report any bill of that kind that the gentleman will report.
Mr. PROUTY. I am asking that the property shall be assessed in the District of Columbia the same as it is assesssed elsewhere, honestly, the same as every other kind of property, and then let the chips fall where they will.
Mr. CROSSER. Why, then, do you not introduce a bill for that specific purpose instead of forcing it into a bill providing for assessment?
Mr. PROUTY. I might——
Mr. CROSSER. You might bring into this bill an amendment providing against the intermarriage of the races, too, but I do not see what that would have to do with the assessment of property for taxation. Why do you not bring up the Crisp bill? I would vote for it, and I do not think I would be offering any offense to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] by doing so. The truth is that the merits of this bill as originally drawn, and as proposed in this substitute, are so manifest that you know every Member of the House would vote for it; and you know that they would have some hesitancy about voting against the bill even with your amendment, which, in effect, repeals the half-and-half law. That is the truth about it, is it not?
Mr. PROUTY. If you put that question for an answer, I will say "No." I have not even suggested in my bill the rate of taxation.
Mr. CROSSER. Oh, no. It was not necessary to suggest it.
Mr. PROUTY. I said that all property should be assessed the same.
Mr. CROSSER. It was not necessary to suggest it. If you leave the rate of taxation at $1.50, as definitely and rigidly fixed by law, and double the property value the result will be inevitable. You will get almost revenue enough to operate the government of the District of Columbia without any contribution from the General Government. If that is your purpose, why not come to a straight out-and-out fight on the proposition?
Mr. PROUTY. I thought it was straight enough. Suppose your plan was adopted and you assess real estate on the plan of $744,000,000, have you done any figuring to ascertain how much of a levy the District Commissioners would have to put on the property?

Mr. CROSSER. I have not figured it out exactly.

Mr. PROUTY. You know it would not take more than 7 mills, do you not?

Mr. CROSSER. I think it would take more than that to raise the entire amount necessary.

Mr. PROUTY. The seven millions?

Mr. CROSSER. I do not know. I will ask the gentleman if he has figured it out. I have not figured that for the simple reason that I do not consider that question to be involved in the original purpose of this bill. That is the reason I have not calculated it. If I had introduced the bill, as amended by the majority, I would have figured it out.

Mr. PROUTY. What I am trying to get at is this: You and I on most things agree——

Mr. CROSSER. I think we do.

Mr. PROUTY. But suppose your bill was adopted and there was $744,000,000 of real estate, according to the report of the committee of which Mr. GEORGE is chairman, and there was over $2,000,000 to be raised by other sources, leaving practically less than $5,000,000 to be raised by taxation upon real estate, and there are $744,000,000 to raise it on, what would the levy on it be?

Mr. CROSSER. You simply put the same question in a different way. You want to know if your calculations are correct. I have not figured it so as to know.

Mr. PROUTY. You can figure that on your feet pretty nearly, could you not?

Mr. CROSSER. Not exactly. At any rate, I shall not bother doing so.

Mr. PROUTY. Seven mills would do it.

Mr. CROSSER. If you say so, I will agree that it might.

Mr. PROUTY. Seven and a half would.

Mr. CROSSER. We two differ in opinions, but I do not doubt the gentleman's veracity or motives.

Mr. PROUTY. Here is the question I wanted you to get: Are you willing to vote for a law that would require real estate in the District of Columbia to be assessed at only 7 or 7½ mills on the dollar while the average rate in the United States of similar cities is 19 mills? That is the question before this House.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman is evidently mistaken as to the question before the House. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, that he can not divert me into the discussion of a question which I do not consider pertinent to the issue. If I were considering the question of taxation and determining what the rate should be, we might agree. But this is not a bill providing for a system of taxation at all, and the gentleman knows it. The bill says specifically in the title "A bill relating to the assessment for taxation of real estate in the District of Columbia." You can not find anything in the bill which provides for anything else than the valuation of the property in the District of Columbia. If you ask me what I would do as to establishing a system of taxation I would say that that is entirely outside the range of this discussion. It is not germane.

Mr. PROUTY. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. PROUTY. Is not the bill, as you have it now, subject to the very criticism you make? You have in your amended bill a declaration that the real estate should be assessed the same. The title of the bill indicates that real estate only shall be taxed.

Mr. CROSSER. I will answer that. If we provide that property, real or personal, shall be taxed at its true value in money, it is perfectly evident that we can not leave a fixed rate and not get too much or too little. In other words, it has always seemed to me to be an unsound proposition to have a fixed rate and then according to your needs, if the revenue derived is too great or too little, increase or reduce the assessment accordingly. You have put the cart before the horse. The proper thing to do is to find out the true value of the property and then levy your rate according to your requirements. There is no logic or reason for fixing the rate of taxation and then adjusting your assessment in order to meet the requirements. You know yourself that if you put a true valuation on property and leave this old fixed rate in effect you will have more money than the District government needs. We would not even have used the word "taxation" in the bill except for the fact that you must provide for an adjustable rate if you assess property at its full value. You must provide for a fluctuating rate in order to get the desired amount of revenue to run your District government. Otherwise we would not have said in the bill "repeal the fixed $1.50 rate and substitute a rate provided by the District Commissioners according to their needs."

It will be perfectly manifest to a man who will think twice about it that if you have a full valuation that practically doubles the rate, your $1.50 rate would be too much unless the half-and-half law is repealed.

But to show that we are not at all wedded to the half-and-half principle, to show in addition to our willingness to vote for the repeal of the half-and-half law we have shown our fairness, we have shown that we have only one thing in mind and that is fairness to both the Federal Government and to the people of the District in the matter of taxation. We say in section 2 of the bill—

> That upon the assessed value of all real estate the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall hereafter annually levy a tax of such per centum as shall, with other revenues of said District, be sufficient to pay the portion to be borne by the District—

And so forth.

"The portion to be borne by the District" might be all, it might be half, it might be a quarter, or any other part. We deliberately used that language so as to make it fit any plan which Congress might hereafter decide upon, so that we are not any more solicitous about these people in the District of Columbia than is the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY]; not a bit. But we recognize the fact that there is just one way to legislate successfully. There is just one way to get a great body of men together on propositions, and that is to take up one thing at a time. We know that every fair-minded man in this House or in this Congress would be with us as to a full valuation of the property which is subject to taxation, but when we come to the second question, which was not originally contemplated by this bill, namely, "What property would be subject to taxation?" we know that there would be almost as many different opinions as there are men in the House; and we think it is not fair, we think it is not right to propose a new system of taxation by an amendment to a bill which provides merely for the assessment of property for taxation.

Oh, the gentleman says, in effect, that he is the real hero, that he has stood against the assaults of these gentlemen in the press gallery, representing these vicious newspapers which are published in the District of Columbia, and he shows us the scars on his face and the wounds on his body which he has received in his manful fight for the people of the country at large. O Judge PROUTY, do not try to deceive yourself or us. [Laughter.] You know as well as I that if we wanted to do the easy thing, if we wanted to do the thing which would at first blush please our constituents, we would just shovel what you have offered into this bill. We know that you or I would be able to go out to your constituents in Iowa or mine in Ohio and say, "I have made a noble fight against these blasted fellows in the gallery here and their papers, against this robbery which they have been committing on us for lo! these many years." You know that that is much more easy to argue than to stand up here and say, "Leave that question alone until we come to it"; a great deal simpler. So, Judge, do not make yourself out too much of a martyr. [Laughter.]

Now, I simply want to restate in a few sentences what I deem to be the real purpose of this bill. Take either the bill which Mr. GEORGE originally introduced or take the bill which we offer now as a substitute and you will find that the real and only purpose is to provide a method, first, for a full-value assessment, and then to provide the machinery which will obtain a full assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia. That and that alone is all that is involved in this bill. Anything else is an attempt to repeal the half-and-half law, which I am perfectly willing to do if you will bring it directly to an issue, although I know that there will be many men who will disagree with us. On that question I am with Judge PROUTY, but I do not believe in doing a thing indirectly which I can not do or am afraid to try to do directly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman mean to say that if the half-and-half plan is included in this bill it will put this bill in jeopardy in any way? Will it embarrass this bill?

Mr. CROSSER. I will answer the question put to me by asking another question. Do you not think it is strange that there has been a bill on the calendar here since last December providing specifically for the repeal of the half-and-half plan, and that it has never been called up? Is not that a sufficient answer?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I do not believe it is. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] says it is because of the absence of a member of the committee who is entitled to be heard on it.

Mr. CROSSER. I have never heard him offer that reason until to-day, and I would say that the gentleman referred to as being absent is not a member of the committee at all. I have already discussed the question of discourtesy to the gentleman from Georgia, which was suggested by the gentleman from Iowa as his reason for not calling up the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wish the gentleman would answer my question. Is the bill embarrassed or put in jeopardy by the inclusion of the repeal of the half-and-half principle?

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly it is.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why?

Mr. CROSSER. You know there are men here who believe in the taxation of some kinds of property, but not all. I do not myself believe in taxing all kinds of property. I do not agree exactly with the gentleman from Kansas on the question as to what should be taxed. There are a great many men who do not agree with every one of us, but there is no man who seriously disagrees on the proposition that property which is subject to taxation should be taxed at its full value, is there?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I do not think there is.

Mr. CROSSER. So that this constitutes the difficulty, this attempt to connect a very doubtful proposition—not one that is wrong but one that would be very doubtful of success on its own feet.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman think if the bill is kept on its own feet as it is it will have a better chance of passing the Senate and House than it will with the repeal of the half-and-half plan included?

Mr. CROSSER. Unquestionably.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that the reason the gentleman is opposing the inclusion of the half-and-half plan?

Mr. CROSSER. That is my chief reason. Of course, I would very much like to support another bill afterwards, providing for a new system of taxation; but why should a bill which is introduced for a particular and specific purpose be burdened with other things upon which there are all kinds of opinion? Do you think it is a fair way to legislate? Is it consistent with the theory of the gentleman from Kansas as to the schedule-by-schedule revision of the tariff? Do you think it is the proper way to legislate?

Mr. MURDOCK. If the amendment was not germane, it could not get into the bill under the rules of the House.

Mr. CROSSER. I doubt very much whether or not it is germane; but if we had succeeded in ruling it out it would have been a very simple matter to reintroduce the bill as amended by the committee, so that it would have been useless to raise that question and merely delay the decision of this issue. I do not think, however, that the amendment is germane.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. PROUTY. If the bill as introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] had passed this House and there had been no further legislation, we would have had the anomaly of a rate of 7 or 8 mills on real estate and a rate of 15 mills on personal property.

Mr. CROSSER. I have already answered that. I have already stated that I did not approve of that feature of the original bill. I felt that that difficulty should be corrected before reporting the bill. In other words, I think the tax rate should be the same on both real and such personal property as is subject to taxation.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman let me ask him, since he has spoken of confidential matters——

Mr. CROSSER. There were no confidential matters referred to by me.

Mr. PROUTY. Did not the gentleman propose in committee that if we would allow real estate and personal property to be assessed at the same rate he would yield on other questions?

Mr. CROSSER. I think not. What you wanted to do was to introduce other matters.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, the District appropriation bill passed the House with an amendment in it that did away with the half-and-half principle, as far as that bill was concerned, and proposed that the appropriations be paid out of the District funds.

Mr. CROSSER. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, the gentleman from New York is not quite right about that.

Mr. PAYNE. What was the proposition?

Mr. BORLAND. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, the proposition in the District of Columbia appropriation bill was that if the District raised $7,000,000, and we doubled it and raised another $7,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury, that would be $14,000,000; that if we elected to spend twelve million and a half dollars, as we did, that would leave one million and a half undisposed of. Now, the proposition in the District bill was that that should be a credit to Uncle Sam.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; and the half-and-half principle was amended to that extent.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Has not the Senate passed the bill with that amendment stricken out, restoring it to the old half-and-half system?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman's position is that while he is for the George bill, he is opposed to putting this amendment on it making it a stalking-horse, for fear it will not get through the Senate if it gets through the House?

Mr. CROSSER. That is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. Because there has been some criticism of the way it got through the House, even with that on it. It may satisfy the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. My experience leads me to believe that the time to get a thing is when the opportunity offers.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; the gentleman often goes for that and gets nothing.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman's experience on the District Committee convince him that any attempt to reform the tax laws of the District of Columbia and make private property pay a fair proportion, as it is paying in other cities of the United States, will eventually and inevitably lead to the abolition of the half-and-half principle?

Mr. CROSSER. I think so; and I am anxious to do it.

Mr. BORLAND. Based on the principle that under the half-and-half proposition private property must be underassessed.

Mr. CROSSER. Of course private property is underassessed, and that is the reason for the bill being before the House.

Mr. BORLAND. If private property was to pay a fair assessment or a rate commensurate with that paid in other cities, if the half-and-half principle were continued, would not it raise a great deal more money than we ought to spend?

Mr. CROSSER. Unquestionably so; we would have a great deal more money than we would need.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me to ask a question of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Did I understand the gentleman from New York to say that there was some criticism of how section 8 in the District of Columbia appropriation bill went through the House?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; I have heard some criticism. I was called out at the time the amendment was offered, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was called out, and the amendment was put through during our absence.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Then the criticism is against the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not put it on the gentleman from North Carolina. If there is any criticism for being called out, the criticism is on me.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I wanted to place the criticism where it belonged.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to exonerate the gentleman from North Carolina, but it was put in at the moment when the gentleman from Wyoming and I were out of the House. If we had been here and we had any legislation on the subject, it would not have been in an illegitimate way, but would come from the District Committee, where there would be ample time to get at the merits of the proposition and know what it was, and it would not be on an appropriation bill, as it was against the rules of the House.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. As I say, I simply wanted to place the responsibility.

Mr. PAYNE. And I am going to place some more responsibility. If there is any criticism to be made, it is on the gentleman who had charge of the bill, the gentleman from North Carolina, who, in violation of the rules of the House, offered that amendment here in the House.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The criticism on the gentleman from North Carolina might be made of gentlemen in charge of every appropriation bill reported to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. It is subject to criticism, whether the gentleman from North Carolina does it or a gentleman from any other committee.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I intended to read the law in regard to the tax rate in the District of Columbia. It provides:

That hereafter all real estate in the District of Columbia subject to taxation, including improvements thereon, shall be assessed at not less than two-thirds of the true value, and shall be taxed 1½ per cent on the assessed valuation.

It does not say not less than nor more than, but it is a positive injunction to tax it 1½ per cent. Who in the wide world ever heard of such a ridiculous, illogical plan of raising revenue; fixing definitely the rate of taxation, not taking into consideration what total amount of revenue might be needed, but simply saying that it shall be a certain rate, which necessarily means that they must regulate the assessment value according to the needs of the Government?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. PROUTY. While that law reads not less than two-thirds, it has been construed by the assessment department here as meaning two-thirds.

Mr. CROSSER. But what I had particular reference to was this clause in the law which says that the rate shall be $1.50.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Let me see if I understand the gentleman's objection to the legislation proposed by the majority of the committee. If the valuation is to be full valuation, then, knowing the requirements of the District, which may vary, the rate will vary from year to year, and if you fix the rate at $1.50 arbitrarily, then you may get more than you need or less than you need.

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. But it ought not to be fixed by statute.

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly not.

Mr. COOPER. It is not anywhere else that I ever heard of. You get the full valuation assessed, and then you estimate what is needed, and that determines what your rate is to be. The rate ought not to be fixed by statute.

Mr. CROSSER. The rate ought not to be fixed by statute.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think it any more arbitrary to have the rate fixed for assessment than it is to say that the Government shall pay one-half the expense of running the District?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; I think it is, for this simple reason, that it would require a readjustment, a reassessment, each year. Of course such a system makes impossible a true-value assessment. I have explained that repeatedly, and I have also tried to emphasize the fact that I do not believe in the half-and-half plan; but why do gentlemen try to inject the half-and-half question into a bill that has nothing to do with it, when there is a bill, which was reported on the 17th day of December, specifically providing for a repeal of the half-and-half plan?

Mr. COOPER. Who is the gentleman from Georgia that is referred to as being sick?

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. CRISP. It is said that he may not be back here again this session, but is that any reason why we should delay legislation of this kind?

Mr. BORLAND. I thought the gentleman admitted that any reform in the tax law would necessarily be an attack on the half-and-half principle.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman means assessing the property at its true value?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. Unquestionably it will work to the end of changing the half-and-half principle, and I hope it does.

Mr. BORLAND. And so do I.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman hopes it does, but does the gentleman not think it would be much better to accomplish that purpose independently and directly?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I think it is all right for us to go ahead and pass these laws bringing property up to its true valuation and proper assessment, and let the half-and-half plan be abolished by the natural consequence of that act.

Mr. CROSSER. Would it not have been a very simple matter to go about it directly? I had not heard about this exceeding concern for the feelings of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] until to-day, but if that had been the fact would it not have been a simple matter to introduce a bill and report it out, because we had the votes to do it, providing for a repeal of the half-and-half plan and leave Mr. CRISP's bill on the calendar?

Mr. BORLAND. But something must be put in its place.

Mr. CROSSER. Is the gentleman putting anything in its place?

Mr. BORLAND. The argument has always been made against the Crisp bill that it does not propose any substantive remedy.

Mr. CROSSER. This amendment proposes, in effect, as the gentleman will concede, to repeal the half-and-half principle. That is the real purpose of it, and the gentleman knows that as well as I do.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. But why not do it directly? Why not strike out all this other portion and make it a bill to repeal the half-and-half principle? The gentleman knows and I know that gentlemen would disagree on this half-and-half proposition, whereas they would not disagree about the other proposition.

Mr. BORLAND. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Crisp bill was objected to on the ground that it was a simple repeal of the half-and-half principle, without providing the necessary machinery to carry on the taxes.

Mr. CROSSER. We are not providing it here; that is not the objection.

Mr. BORLAND. That is it.

Mr. CROSSER. We specifically say that hereafter property shall be assessed at its true value. The gentleman from Iowa said during the discussion in the committee that by raising so much revenue through the $1.50 rate on the full value the result would be inevitably to repeal the half-and-half law. I think he is right. I think the substitute bill which we offer procures exactly the same result. Assess the property at its full value and then fix the tax rate so as to procure the District's share of the revenue necessary to operate the District of Columbia government.

If this rate is so low that it seems ridiculous in comparison with the rate in other cities, the inevitable result will be the repeal of the half-and-half law. I think it would be much the stronger argument for the repeal of the half-and-half to show that the District of Columbia will only pay 6 or 7 mills, as the gentleman from Iowa says. Certainly it would be equally as strong at least as the other. If by retaining the $1.50 rate and assessing property at its full value, the District gets a large amount of revenue, much more than it is at present required to contribute toward the expense of its government, such surplus would constitute no more convincing argument for the repeal of the half-and-half law than would the low tax rate which would result from the operation of the plan we propose. I do not think there is any more argument for the repeal of the half and half in the fact that you will have a great deal more money than the District's share by reason of the dollar-and-a-half rate on full valuation; certainly not any more than if the fact appears that it requires a very low rate on a full valuation. If a very low rate prevails, Congress will see the injustice to the Federal Government and repeal it.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not want the gentleman to think by my question I am opposed to his position; I will probably vote for a substitute, but I want to ask the gentleman if the committee, both the majority and the minority, had confined this bill to assessment of property alone, leaving out the question of rate, whether the gentleman's committee would not have reported unanimously a bill?

Mr. CROSSER. No; here is the situation in that respect. If we had reported a bill providing for the full valuation of property for the purpose of assessment and had left the rate just as it is, we would have had much more revenue than the District is required by law to contribute.

Mr. LENROOT. Would not that have forced action in any bill taking care of that phase of the question?

Mr. CROSSER. We offered to do that. I say that I am ready to vote for a bill of that kind. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin can easily see that there will be a great dispute on one question and there will not be on the other. We all agree as to what should be done as to the matter of assessment, and therefore that could be done now. That much can be done, whatever else we can not agree upon. What we can not agree upon can be incorporated in a separate bill and debated, and if it must fail for some reason or another, some of us will regret that fact, but let us not defeat both propositions because some gentlemen insist upon the all-or-nothing policy. The gentleman from Iowa refers to the gentleman from New York as a conservative, scholarly gentleman. That may all be, but I do not think the gentleman from Iowa will claim to be any more radical than I am in regard to the half-and-half idea; but I know that that full-assessment proposition will succeed alone, while it can not succeed if joined with a proposal to repeal the half-and-half.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman know what relation Mr. CRISP has especially to the bill which has been reported? Is he the one who introduced it?

Mr. CROSSER. He simply introduced it. He is not on the committee—has no connection with the committee. I never knew until to-day that there was any concern about Mr. CRISP's possibly feeling offended about the bill being taken up in his absence.

Mr. COOPER. He is not a member of the committee?

Mr. CROSSER. He is not a member of the committee. He made an argument on this bill in the House some time ago.

Mr. COOPER. Some months ago?

Mr. CROSSER. On the 7th day of December, if I remember rightly. The gentleman from Georgia could have no reason to be offended, but the gentleman from Iowa himself has said that he did not think it would pass; that is, the Crisp bill. I think he made that statement.

I am not absolutely certain about his having made the statement, but that is my impression. I may be mistaken. But, in any event, the gentleman, who is so much concerned about the repeal of the half and half, has only to come into the House on any District day and call up the bill introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and settle the question for all time one way or another. I will vote with him. I voted with him in the committee, so that he need not be in the least concerned as to my position on that question.

Mr. COOPER. And, in that event, Mr. CRISP would still have the honor of being the author of the bill?

Mr. CROSSER. Would still have the honor of being the author of the bill and of having advocated its passage. And for myself, I can not see any possible injury to the feelings of Mr. CRISP nor any impropriety in such procedure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will indulge me for a few minutes, I think some gentlemen who have come in and gone out during the progress of this debate may get the whole situation in a nutshell. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] introduced a bill which looked to the taxation of real estate only. Section 2 of his bill was objectionable to those of us who desire to tax other property and to tax it all at the same rate. To accomplish that, section 2 in the original George bill had to be amended. The amendment, in substance, was that real estate should be taxed on its full value and at the same rate that personal property is taxed. Upon that question the committee split. Those whose philosophy it is to advocate the "single tax" left the majority of the committee on that proposition.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield? You do not mean to say that all of them did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman had indulged me just one moment longer, I would have gotten to him.

The majority of the committee, in striking out section 2 of the original George bill and inserting a new section 2 in lieu thereof, also made a provision for the taxation of intangible personal property, such as stocks, bonds, and credits. Two or three of the committee who are opposed to the "single tax" were opposed to the taxing of intangible property. At every meeting of the committee, no matter how many were present, those who were in favor of taxing real estate, tangible personal property, and intangible personal property were always in the majority. Those who favor the substitute which is offered are those who were not in favor of taxing tangible property at all and those who are opposed to taxing intangible property.

Mr. IGOE. I am in a class by myself, I think, Mr. Chairman. I voted with the committee to tax all intangible property, but I opposed the fixed rate. That is where we differed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The trouble that first arose in the committee over the matter was that the original George bill, under section 2, fixed a flexible rate of taxation, a rate to be fixed by the commissioners. While we were debating that and while we had it under consideration in the committee Mr. Siddons, one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made a speech down here before some organization, in which he stated that if the flexible rate was to raise more revenue than is now being raised he would oppose it. Secondly, he advocated such a flexible rate as would keep down the rate upon real estate. As I started to say in the beginning, the main difference first arose between those of us who favored taxing all kinds of property and those who favored taxing real estate only. Then, when section 2 of the original George bill was stricken out and section 2 of the bill as it now stands, or, at least, as it was reported to the House, was inserted, making provision to tax all kinds of personal property, both tangible and intangible, more recruits were gotten for the substitute which has now been reported by a minority of the committee. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] is in favor of a flexible rate, and upon that he has left the majority. But just as I said in a speech upon this question two weeks ago, I, too, would be for a flexible rate if it were in a city paying all of its expenses. Then I illustrated, for example, that if the city of Baltimore or the city of St. Louis, or any other city, had before it the proposition that the mayor of the city, or those who represented the city, or the city council, had the fixing of a rate which they knew would not meet the expenses of the city, and when those expenses were not met the Federal Government would go into its pocket and pay out the difference, it is an absolute, positive certainty that the levy would be insufficient.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. IGOE. I understand the position of the chairman of the committee to be this: He believes that enough money can be raised to run the affairs of the District of Columbia without any contribution from the Federal Government under the bill which is proposed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have never expressed any view on the subject.

Mr. IGOE. Judge PROUTY so expressed himself. Now, is it not unfair to the people of the District not to give them any representation, but to go out and say the rate shall be $1.50 or $1.75? Is that not taxation without representation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think it is perfectly fair to the District of Columbia to have a fixed rate as long as that fixed rate, as shown by the table which now stands here confronting us, is less than the average rate which prevails in cities of the Union of like size.

Mr. IGOE. Well, suppose they wanted to spend more or spend less?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman must remember that the act of 1878 provides that the amount raised from taxation and from the Federal contribution is not to be expended except for such items as Congress approves.

Now, then, when the District of Columbia has been undertaxed, according to the rate which is now fixed and for which no change is contended by us, when the revenues of the District of Columbia and that part contributed by the Federal Government will more than meet the demands of the city, you have a balance left upon your hands. Then what are you going to do with it? That is a question that will arise hereafter. But the fundamental principle is that the District of Columbia shall be taxed $1.50 a hundred, which is less than the average rate for other cities.

The Federal Government contributes only for the purpose of paying for such items as are approved by Congress. The more money you have, I apprehend, the more items Congress will approve. But just as Judge PROUTY expressed it, tax the District of Columbia equitably, and then if that does not quite pay her needs, then I say let the Federal Government, because this is the National Capital, go into its Treasury and pay the difference. I do not believe that the people of the District of Columbia should be deliberately underassessed in order that the people out in the States may have to be additionally taxed in order to meet the deficiency caused by the underassessment of the people here. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] stand here in fear and trembling lest this bill will do what they say they want done—that is, repeal the half-and-half plan. To me that is a most anomalous and peculiar attitude to take. They want it done, and yet they are here in fear and trembling, I say, out of apprehension lest the passage of this bill will accomplish what they want.

I believe that those who have been present throughout the entire discussion of this matter understand the real issues between the majority and the minority of this committee. To make it short again, the question of "single taxation" is what first arose in the committee to split it. Then the additional question of whether intangible property should be taxed was an additional splitting wedge. But for both of these propositions the majority of the committee stand and have reported a bill to this House imposing an equitable and uniform rate of taxation upon real estate, tangible personal property, and intangible property, such as stocks and bonds and other evidences of indebtedness.

THE SINGLE TAX.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, to refer to what the gentleman from Kentucky has just said, I did not think that "single taxation" had any material part in the affairs of the District Committee at any time. There were but two believers in the single-tax idea who were active in these committee taxation matters—Mr. CROSSER, of Ohio, and myself. I twice took occasion to define the meaning of the single tax in order to make clear to the members of the committee who were not prepared to vote on that question that it was not involved in the bill I had drawn or in the position I was taking. And neither then nor later did any question arising in the committee or any vote taken there turn on the single tax. More than one year before the George bill was brought into the committee, and when the committee of the Sixty-second Congress was engaged in the inquiry into assessment and taxation matters, the Chairman of the committee, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, asked me not to introduce that question into the report on which at that time I was working with his knowledge and approval, and with the knowledge and approval of the whole committee. I assured the chairman that since the committee had not included the application of the single tax in the scope of its inquiry I did not think that I as one member had the right to use the report as a place to promote or expound that doctrine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will pardon me just a minute, he is bound to know that my request to him not to inject the single-tax method into any of this controversy was because I believed that no such thing was necessary. The gentleman in the Sixty-second Congress prepared a report that is going to stand here as a valuable piece of work for many years yet to come. He and I both agreed then, and we agree now, that real estate in the District of Columbia is underassessed. Now I am ready to join him any day to help tax real estate in the District of Columbia as it ought to be taxed. But the gentleman knows that section 2 of his bill, as originally introduced, necessarily brings in this question, and the gentleman knows how I regretted that it brought it in. He knows how I have pleaded with him not to bring it in, but at last it is here, and we can not help it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman and I agree on the term "single taxation." To make the matter clear to the House I shall explain that I mean by the term "single tax," one tax, a tax falling upon ground values, excluding improvement values. I mean no personal-property taxation, no income taxation, no kind of taxation of any sort except one, single tax; that tax to fall upon ground values, excluding improvements. That to me is the single tax. Surely the gentleman could not intend to imply that that question was involved when he said that the first question to split the committee was "single taxation." The committee did not take up that subject at all. It was not even mentioned except as I mentioned it to make explicit the fact that my bill was not a single-tax measure, and as Mr. CROSSER and I briefly spoke to explain the single-tax principle.

"SINGLE TAXATION."

I do not know what the gentleman from Kentucky means when he says "the gentleman knows that section 2 of his bill as originally introduced brings in this question, and the gentleman knows how I regret that he brought it in. He knows how I have pleaded with him not to bring it in; but at last it is here, and we can not help it."

The gentleman seems to refer to "single taxation" as the cause that was brought into the committee and split it. Now, the bill as originally introduced—that is, my first printed bill—was dated December 17, 1913, and section 2 read as follows:

SEC. 2. That upon the assessed value of real and personal property the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall hereafter annually levy a tax of such per centum as shall raise sufficient revenue, first, to satisfy any deficit in the account of the District of Columbia with the United States Treasury; and second, to meet the estimates for support of the government of the District submitted to Congress by said commissioners; such tax rate to be reduced by any current surplus in the account of the District of Columbia with the United States Treasury.

It can be seen that "single taxation" did not appear in this section, so that it could not have "split" the committee, as the gentleman from Kentucky has stated. In truth, I think that the gentleman from Kentucky, has become confused about the cause of the "split" in the committee. That cause appeared in section 2, above quoted, and was embodied in the provision that the Commissioners of the District should annually fix the tax rate in accordance with the local needs. It was to that that the gentleman objected, and "pleaded" with me to change to a fixed rate of 1½ per cent, regardless of whether the District needs should require at one or another time much or little revenue. I repeat, it was not the single tax that "split" the committee. It was the advocacy in the early and in the succeeding drafts of my bill of the budget plan of having the Commissioners fix a tax rate dependent upon the needs of the District.

This is not to say that I am not a single taxer. I am a single taxer all the time, and I hope the single tax will come into Congress and be adopted some day, because it means justice for everybody; it means more use of the land, more wealth, more houses, more ease and happiness; will improve the District of Columbia and make it a so much better city to live in as to make it a model for all the cities of the country.

In order to make clear what the single tax really is, I will introduce in my remarks at this point a brief statement of it as prepared by my father:

THE SINGLE TAX—WHAT IT IS AND WHY WE URGE IT.

[By Henry George.]

I shall briefly state the fundamental principles of what we who advocate it call the single tax.

We propose to abolish all taxes save one single tax levied on the value of land, irrespective of the value of the improvements in or on it.

What we propose is not a tax on real estate, for real estate includes improvements. Nor is it a tax on land, for we would not tax all land, but only land having a value irrespective of its improvements, and would tax that in proportion to that value.

Our plan involves the imposition of no new tax since we already tax land values in taxing real estate. To carry it out we have only to abolish all taxes save the tax on real estate, and to abolish all of that which now falls on buildings or improvements, leaving only that part of it which falls on the value of the bare land increasing, so as to take as nearly as may be the whole of economic rent, or what is sometimes styled the "unearned increment of land values."

That the value of the land alone would suffice to provide all needed public revenues—municipal, county, State, and National—there is no doubt.

To show briefly why we urge this change let me treat (1) of its expediency, and (2) of its justice.

From the single tax we may expect these advantages:

1. It would dispense with a whole army of tax gatherers and other officials which present taxes require, and place in the treasury a much larger proportion of what is taken from the people, while by making government simpler and cheaper, it would tend to make it purer. It would get rid of taxes which necessarily promote fraud, perjury, bribery, and corruption, which lead men into temptation, and which tax what the nation can least afford to spare—honesty and conscience. Since land lies out of doors and can not be removed, and its value is the most readily ascertained of all values, the tax to which we would resort can be collected with the minimum of cost and the least strain on public morals.

2. It would enormously increase the production of wealth—

(a) By the removal of the burdens that now weigh upon industry and thrift. If we tax houses there will be fewer and poorer houses; if we tax machinery there will be less machinery; if we tax trade there will be less trade; if we tax capital there will be less capital; if we tax savings there will be less savings. All the taxes therefore that we should abolish are those that repress industry and lessen wealth. But if we tax land values there will be no less land.

(b) On the contrary, the taxation of land values has the effect of making land more easily available by industry, since it makes it more difficult for owners of valuable land which they themselves do not care to use it hold it idle for a larger future price. While the abolition of taxes on labor and the products of labor would free the active element of production, the taking of land values by taxation would free the passive element by destroying speculative land values, and preventing the holding out of use of land needed for use. If anyone will but look around to-day and see the unused or but half-used land, the idle labor, the unemployed or poorly employed capital he will get some idea of how enormous would be the production of wealth were all the forces of production free to engage.

(c) The taxation of the processes and products of labor on one hand and the insufficient taxation of land values on the other produce an unjust distribution of wealth which is building up in the hands of a few fortunes more monstrous than the world has ever before seen, while the masses of our people are steadily becoming relatively poorer. These taxes necessarily fall on the poor more heavily than the rich; by increasing prices they necessitate a larger capital in all businesses and consequently give an advantage to large capitals; and they give, and in some cases are designed to give, special advantages and monopolies to combinations and trusts. On the other hand, the insufficient taxation of land values enables men to make large fortunes by land speculation and the increase in ground values—fortunes which do not represent any addition by them to the general wealth of the community, but merely the appropriation by some of what the labor of others creates.

IDLE CLASSES, RICH AND POOR.

This unjust distribution of wealth develops on the one hand a class idle and wasteful because they are too rich, and on the other hand a class idle and wasteful because they are too poor—it deprives men of capital and opportunities which would make them more efficient producers. It thus greatly diminishes production.

(d) The unjust distribution which is giving us the hundredfold millionaire on the one side and the tramp and pauper on the other generates thieves, gamblers, social parasites of all kinds, and requires large expenditure of money and energy in watchmen, policemen, courts, prisons, and other means of defense and repression. It kindles a greed of gain and a worship of wealth and produces a bitter struggle for existence which fosters drunkenness, increases insanity, and causes men whose energies ought to be devoted to honest production to spend their time and strength in cheating and grabbing from each other. Besides the moral loss, all this involves an enormous economic loss which the single tax would save.

(e) The taxes we would abolish fall most heavily on the poorer agricultural districts and would tend to drive population and wealth from them to the great cities. The tax we would increase would destroy that monopoly of land which is the great cause of that distribution of population which is crowding the people too closely together in some places and scattering them too far apart in other places. Families live on top of one another in cities because of the enormous speculative prices at which vacant lots are held. In the country they are scattered too far apart for social intercourse and convenience, because, instead of each taking what land he can use, everyone who can grabs all he can get, in the hope of profiting by its increase of value, and the next man must pass farther on. Thus we have scores of families living under a single roof and other families living in dugouts on the prairies afar from neighbors—some living too close to each other for moral, mental, or physical health, and others too far separated for the stimulating and refining influences of society. The wastes in health, in mental vigor, and in unnecessary transportation result in great economic losses which the single tax would save.

Let us turn to the moral side and consider the question of justice.

The right of property does not rest on human laws; they have often ignored and violated it. It rests on natural laws—that is to say, the law of God. It is clear and absolute, and every violation of it, whether committed by man or a nation, is a violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal." The man who catches a fish, grows an apple, raises a calf, builds a house, makes a coat, paints a picture, constructs a machine, has, as to any such thing, an exclusive right of ownership, which carries with it the right to give, to sell, or bequeath that thing.

But who made the earth that any man can claim such ownership of it, or any part of it, or the right to give, sell, or bequeath it? Since the earth was not made by us, but it is only a temporary dwelling place on which one generation of men follow another; since we find ourselves here, are manifestly here with equal permission of the Creator, it is manifest that no one can have any exclusive right of ownership in land, and that the rights of all men to land must be equal and inalienable. There must be an exclusive right of possession of land, for the man who uses it must have secure possession of land in order to reap the products of his labor. But his right of possession must be limited by the equal right of all and should therefore be conditioned on the payment to the community by the possessor of an equivalent for any special valuable privilege thus accorded him.

When we tax houses, crops, money, furniture, capital, or wealth in any of its forms we take from individuals what rightfully belong to them. We violate the right of property, and in the name of the State commit robbery. But when we tax ground values we take from individuals what does not belong to them, but belongs to the community, and which can not be left to individuals without the robbery of other individuals.

WHAT THE VALUE OF LAND IS.

Think what the value of land is. It has no reference to the cost of production, as has the value of houses, horses, ships, clothes, or other things produced by labor, for land is not produced by man; it has been created by God. The value of land does not come from the exertion of labor on land, for the value thus produced is a value of improvement. That value attaches to any piece of land means that that piece of land is more desirable than the land which other citizens may obtain, and that they are more willing to pay a premium for permission to use it. Justice therefore requires that this premium of value shall be taken for the benefit of all in order to secure to all their equal rights.

Consider the difference between the value of a building and the value of land. The value of a building, like the value of goods, or of anything properly styled wealth, is produced by individual exertion, and therefore properly belongs to the individual; but the value of land only arises with the growth and improvement of the community, and therefore properly belongs to the community. It is not because of what its owners have done, but because of the presence of the whole great population that land in New York is worth millions an acre. This value therefore is the proper fund for defraying the common expenses of the whole population; and it must be taken for public use, under penalty of generating land speculation and monopoly which will bring about artificial scarcity where the Creator has provided in abundance for all whom His providence has called into existence. It is thus a violation of justice to tax labor, or the things produced by labor, and it is also a violation of justice not to tax land values.

These are the fundamental reasons for which we urge the single tax, believing it to be the greatest and most fundamental of all reforms. We do not think it will change human nature. That, man can never do; but it will bring about conditions in which human nature can develop what is best, instead of, as now in so many cases, what is worst. It will permit such an enormous production as we can now hardly conceive. It will secure an equitable distribution. It will solve the labor problem and dispel the darkening clouds which are now gathering over the horizon of our civilization. It will make undeserved poverty an unknown thing. It will check the soul-destroying greed of gain. It will enable men to be at least as honest, as true, as considerate, and as high-minded as they would like to be. It will remove temptation to lying, false swearing, bribery, and law breaking. It will open to all, even the poorest, the comforts and refinements and opportunities of an advancing civilization. It will thus, so we reverently believe, clear the way for the coming of that kingdom of right and justice, and consequently of abundance and peace and happiness, for which the Master told His disciples to pray and work. It is not that it is a promising invention or cunning device that we look for the single tax to do all this; but it is because it involves a conforming of the most important and fundamental adjustments of society to the supreme law of justice, because it involves the basing of the most important of our laws on the principle that we should do to others as we would be done by.

The readers of this article, I may fairly presume, believe, as I believe, that there is a world for us beyond this. The limits of the space has prevented me from putting before them more than some hints for thought. Let me in conclusion present two more:

1. What would be the result in heaven itself if those who get there first instituted private property in the surface of heaven and parceled it out in absolute ownership among themselves as we parcel out the surface of the earth?

2. Since we can not conceive of a heaven in which the equal rights of God's children to their Father's bounty is denied; as we now deny them on this earth what is the duty enjoined on Christians by the daily prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven"?

STEP TOWARD SINGLE TAX.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Would not the omission of personal property be one step toward the single tax?

Mr. GEORGE. It would. I would omit personal property and improvements if I could have my way. I did introduce a bill in the Sixty-second Congress which eliminated from taxation improvements on land. It did so by stages, just as the western Canadians have been doing, and just as Pittsburgh, Scranton, Houston, Pueblo, and other of our own progressive cities are doing. The Canadians have in local affairs what they are pleased to call the "single tax."

I never attempted to bring my bill of the Sixty-second Congress before the House because all my time became involved in the investigation of real estate assessment and taxation in the District, and the bill I introduced into this present Congress had to be drafted on the findings resulting from that investigation and restricted to that. No city in the world would prove to be a more favorable spot to demonstrate the justice and benefit of the single tax than Washington. Unjust taxation fills Washington in spite of its superb marble Government buildings and its majestic bowered avenues with tumble-down wooden shanties and disease-polluted alleys. Pennsylvania Avenue, with its incomparable vista of the most splendid of all buildings in the world, our great domed Capitol, and which ought to outrival in beauty the Champs-Élysées of Paris and Unter den Linden of Berlin, is, in fact, one of the shabbiest streets of all the avenues of the nations' capitals.

Our system of low land taxation encourages speculation and the holding of land out of its best use. Our taxation of improvements penalizes building. Hence, Pennsylvania Avenue, instead of blooming into the most splendid thoroughfare on the globe, is like a rotten apple, a mixture of peerless public buildings and decaying hovels.

I believe large numbers of people in the District of Columbia realize these things. In proof of this statement I offer the following resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia and introduced by a committee of its members in testifying before the investigation of taxation matters conducted by the House District Committee in the Sixty-second Congress:

CENTRAL LABOR UNION VIEWS.

RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ON MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 20, 1911.

Whereas the law regulating the assessment of land and improvements provides "that hereafter all real estate in the District of Columbia subject to taxation, including improvements thereon, shall be assessed at not less than two-thirds of the true value thereof, and shall be taxed 1½ per cent of the assessed value"; and

Whereas an assessment upon such property and upon tangible personal property has recently been completed by the board of assistant assessors for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914; and

Whereas it has been publicly charged by many owners of small residences that the assessment on such properties has been unjustly increased, and that improvements have been assessed higher in proportion to value than land; and

Whereas it has repeatedly been publicly charged that all prior assessments on real estate in the District of Columbia have been inequitable and unjust, in that improvements were assessed at a very much higher rate in proportion to value than land, the latter in many instances alleged to have been assessed at less than one-fourth of true value, while improvements were assessed at from 40 to 70 per cent of true value, the larger ones assessed lower, in proportion to value, than the smaller ones; and

Whereas under the present system of taxation the enormous increase in land values, due entirely to the growth of the community, is monopolized by a comparatively small number of the people; and

Whereas an assessment of two-thirds of the true value of land in the District would produce more revenue than is now and heretofore produced by the inequitable assessments on both land and improvements; and

Whereas the effect of relieving improvements from taxation and raising the public revenues by a tax on land values would be to encourge the building of more and better homes and business houses, to take from land its speculative and monopoly value, and thereby enable many more of our people to secure homes of their own or lower rents than under the present unjust and unscientific system of taxation: Therefore

Resolved, That the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia is opposed to the present system of taxation and against the tax on personal property, but favors a tax on land values exclusive of improvements, on franchises, on banks, and on such occupations as it may be deemed wise to tax for the public welfare.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Central Labor Union that the law regulating the assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia should be so amended as to authorize and direct the removal of the present assessment on improvements at the rate of not less than 20 per cent each year until the tax thereon is entirely removed; and that the percentage of value deducted from improvements each year be transferred to land values.

Resolved, That the Central Labor Union favors annual rather than triennial assessments, for the reason that many of the glaring inequalities which develop under the latter system could be remedied in one instead of three years.

Resolved, That the House Committee on the District of Columbia, having been authorized to make a thorough investigation of affairs in the District of Columbia, is hereby requested to investigate the method of ascertaining improvement and land values by the board of assistant assessors; to inquire whether there has been in prior assessments or in the assessment recently completed discrimination in favor of any section over others, and to inquire into all alleged inequalities pertaining to the assessment of improvement and land values and of personal property; also to ascertain as nearly as possible the value of the land and improvements owned by the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In regard to the workings of the so-called single tax in western Canada, has the gentleman any information as to its success at Vancouver, British Columbia?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I went there myself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman say that he found that principle of taxation successful?

Mr. GEORGE. As much of it as was applied; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Was not the city suffering from overbuilding which had been forced by that form of taxation and suffering from resultant hard times until the tariff was stricken off from American lumber?

Mr. GEORGE. Removing taxation from improvements stimulated building, which was a good thing, but Vancouver did this without materially increasing taxation on ground values. By the improvement exemption Vancouver was made a better place to build in, and therefore the price of land advanced and advanced very greatly. There was no added taxation on land values to check the speculation, so that there was a tremendous land boom. A land boom tends to discourage the use of land and Vancouver's prosperity suffered a check. To many persons, the city suffered from overbuilding. What it really suffered from was land speculation, which has been the bane of the District of Columbia, and which has and always must work evil wherever it is active.

Several months ago I addressed letters to the proper government officials of western Canada to learn about the workings of the taxation matters pursued there. I herewith offer an answer from Victoria, the capital of the Province of British Columbia.

SINGLE TAX IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA,
SURVEYOR OF TAXES AND INSPECTOR OF REVENUE,
Victoria, October 16, 1913.

Hon. HENRY GEORGE, Jr.,
House of Representatives,
Washington, District of Columbia,
United States of America.

SIR: Your letter of 5th ultimo addressed to the Hon. Sir Richard McBride, premier of British Columbia, has been forwarded to me to answer, owing to his absence in England.

The exemption of improvements from taxation has not yet been the subject of legislation in this Province, but there was a royal commission on taxation appointed by the lieutenant governor in council in September, 1911. After taking evidence in various parts of the Province during 1911 the commissioners prepared a voluminous report, which was submitted to the legislature in January, 1912. A synopsis of the report has been printed, a copy of which I send you. The recommendations in that report have not yet been carried out. The Government, however, has publicly indicated that it intends to carry out during the next four years the following as recommended by the tax commissioner:

The abolition of improvements from taxation.

The abolition of the personal property tax.

The revision and readjustment of the income tax in line with the recommendations.

At last session of the legislature the revenue or poll tax was abolished and a few minor changes made in the taxation act with regard to bank taxes and the taxes on fisheries. The ultimate object of the Government is to derive its revenue from the natural resources of the Province, such as land, timber, mines, fisheries, coal, etc., and as far as practicable to lessen the taxation, if not altogether abolish it, which has been levied on improvements, personal property, etc. I am sending you under separate cover copies of the acts relating to provincial taxation, copies of our public accounts, etc., reports, etc., from which you will be able to understand our provincial system.

There are really two systems of taxation in the Province, namely, provincial and municipal. As a rough and ready explanation of the two systems is given in a printed pamphlet, prepared by me in 1908, I also send a copy of that. There has been no change in the systems since that date, although minor changes have taken place in the rate of taxation, but the present rates are given in the copy of the current taxation act sent herewith. I regret that the pamphlet copies of our municipal act are out of print at present, but as a new municipal act will be passed by the legislature at next session, I may state that a royal commission was appointed in 1911 to inquire generally into the needs of municipalities and to suggest changes in the existing laws. That commission presented a report last year, and I send you a copy of it, together with a draft of the proposed bill. You will see from the bill that a similar power is proposed to be given to councils to exempt improvements as is given in the present municipal act.

Now, as to the results of the change from "no exemption" of improvements to "the exemption" of improvements, as carried out in a few of the urban municipalities, as well as in some of the rural municipalities, I have no statistics or information in my department to guide me, and neither has any other department of the Government. The change has only been in force for a few years, five at most, and perhaps it has not been long enough on trial to decide as to its benefits, or otherwise. From general observation, I rather think it is still on its trial, but in the larger cities, such as Victoria, Vancouver, New Westminster, Nanaimo, Prince Rupert, etc., I consider that it has received general approval of the taxpayers. One noticeable effect has been to encourage the erection of buildings on vacant property, that, but for the exemption from taxation, may have been left as vacant lots for many years to come. If you are really in need of individual opinion, then a letter to the mayor of each of the above-named cities would no doubt bring out more information than the Government is able to give you. Practically each municipality has self-government under the municipal act, and no returns by them are required to be made to the Government, so that when I need municipal statistics for general office use I have to communicate with the officers of all the municipalities.

Two years ago I tried to prepare a few municipal statistics which were published in a provincial yearbook.

The copies of this yearbook are now scarce, so that the Government has been obliged to make a charge of $1.25 for each copy. This yearbook will give a list of the municipalities at that time and will show which municipality adopted the exemption of improvements. If you wish a copy please address the King's Printer, Victoria, with $1.25 and he will send you a copy.

I send you also a copy of a small pamphlet with a list of our assessment districts, etc., and a map showing the boundaries of the districts.

Of course, you are no doubt aware that the exemption of improvements is but the thin end of the wedge of single tax; that is, of "Single tax" as advocated by the late Henry George. I need not repeat to you his platform, as I infer you are familiar with it. The public generally call our municipal system and our proposed system of taxation "Single tax," and I am being deluged with inquiries from all parts of the United States now for information.

I trust from what I have written and the pamphlets, etc., sent you, that you will have a general idea of our present position, and if you need any further information that I can give you I will do so cheerfully.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

JOHN B. MCKILLIGAN,
Surveyor of Taxes and Inspector of Revenue.

PROVINCE OF ALBERTA.

The following letter was received from the Premier of the Province of Alberta:

EDMONTON, September 13, 1913.

DEAR SIR: Yours in reference to single-tax matters has been received. The bills in regard to single tax in this country are not separate, but are clauses in the different municipal acts referring to rural municipalities, villages, and towns. The four cities all have special charters which contain clauses allowing them the option, which has been almost entirely exercised by them

It has been very favorably received by a great bulk of the people unless some anomalies have arisen, particularly in the very small places, where the total valuation of the village has not been large enough to reasonably raise the necessary revenue. In Edmonton, the largest place where it has been used extensively, it is very favorably thought of, and I do not think it would be possible to revert to the old system.

As to the general effect, I should say that possibly the result is the erection of more expensive buildings than would otherwise be built. It appears to encourage the use of the land rather than the leaving of it idle, but has not, as yet at least, interfered very much with speculation in land, although I would think the tendency would be that way, and that gradually, and more particularly in well-settled country, the tendency to avoid the holding of unimproved land in large blocks.

The Hon. Charles Stewart, minister of municipal affairs, or Mr. John Perry, deputy minister of municipal affairs, would have better ideas as to the actual municipal working, and I will ask them to forward you copies of the municipal acts which contain single-tax provisions.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR L. SEFLIN.

HENRY GEORGE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, this information relating to taxation methods and results in western Canada proves, if it proves anything, that the policy suggested by the majority of the District Committee in the amended George bill it reports to the House is a wrong policy for the District of Columbia. Instead of hunting up kinds of personal property to add to the tax list, the committee should look for ways to lessen the personal property now taxed. The committee should follow the example of the great city of Pittsburgh, which successfully advertises itself by means of a little circular which its business men inclose with their business correspondence, and which reads as follows:

PITTSBURGH AND HOUSTON PLANS.

WHY YOU SHOULD MANUFACTURE IN PITTSBURGH.

The city of Pittsburgh does not tax machinery.

The city of Pittsburgh does not tax railroad switches.

The city of Pittsburgh taxes mills, factories, and homes at a lower rate than land. The tax rate on mills, factories, and homes is being reduced to one-half the tax rate on land at the rate of 10 per cent every three years.

The city of Pittsburgh does not tax raw materials, stocks of finished products, book accounts, bank accounts, or personal property.

The State of Pennsylvania exempts from taxation as much of the capital stock of manufacturing corporations as is invested in manufacturing enterprises.

Or the committee might, with benefit, take notice of a circular used by the city of Houston, Tex., for attracting population and business activities. The circular reads:

A perpetual bonus to manufacturers and merchants is offered by the city of Houston, Tex., through its system of exemptions from taxation. Personal property, such as cash, household furniture, and evidences of debt, are totally exempt from taxation. The Houston plan of taxation contemplates that merchandise, machinery of manufactories, and all other improvements upon land shall be assessed at only 25 per cent of their value, land being assessed at its fair value.

Take your money and brains to Houston, Tex., and get the full benefit of all that you create by your industry and enterprise.

For further information, address J. J. Pastoriza, finance and tax commissioner, Houston, Tex.

In addition to the foregoing circular, Commissioner Pastoriza has sent out private letters, one of which I herewith present:

HOUSTON, TEX., February 20, 1914.

Mr. E. R. G.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of February 18 asking for further information in reference to the Houston plan of taxation, it affords me great pleasure to do so as far as I can within the limits of a letter, which I will supplement, however, with printed folders going into detail.

The city of Houston decided that it was going to become the money center of Texas. It therefore announced that it would not receive cash upon its assessment rolls for the purposes of taxation; as a result, the bank deposits have increased $7,000,000 in two years.

The city of Houston decided that it needed more buildings and better buildings, so it announced that it would require the owners of buildings to assess them at only 25 per cent of their reproductive cost; as a result in two years the building industry has increased over 50 per cent per annum

The city decided that it was impossible to assess household furniture equitably, and it also thought that it was a good thing for people to have household furniture, plenty of it, and the finest grade, so it decided to exempt household furniture from taxation entirely.

The city of Houston was desirous of reducing the rate of interest so that those who had money and who loaned it to those who had none would not increase the rate of interest because of a tax upon credits, notes, mortgages, bonds, or stocks; and as a result the man who has no money can borrow it in Houston at a fair rate of interest.

The city decided that it was becoming too difficult for those who wanted homes to secure them, on account of the high price of land, so it announced that it would tax land at its fair value for use; as a result the owners of vacant land have been improving it and thus increasing the number of buildings in our midst. Others who have large tracts of land are getting in the mood to sell it at a fair price, all of which will tend to develop our city and accomplish naturally a more even distribution of wealth, in contradiction to the ideas of certain people who want to distribute the wealth arbitrarily and by force.

One-half dozen cities in Texas have followed our example, with slight modifications, none of them, however, going as far as we have, because of our constitutional prohibitions. We simply saw the benefit, and we proceeded to do it. After two years' experiment no one has seen fit to invoke the law and interfere with our laudable proposition. To do so would mean to at once destroy the progress of our city, deplete our banks of much of their deposits, and enormously reduce the value of our real estate.

It is strange, exceedingly strange, to my mind, that the great mass of people have so long been blind to a method of taxation which will be truly beneficial to the country at large.

If my reply is not sufficiently full, don't hesitate to communicate with me further, and I will take the time to reply,

Yours, very truly,

J. J. PASTORIZA,
Finance and Tax Commissioner.

HOUSTON TAXPAYERS SATISFIED.

I would particularly commend to the gentleman from Iowa the following clipping from the Chicago Public of April 17, 1914:

About 75 property owners of Houston, Tex., held a meeting on April 7 to express dissatisfaction with the Houston system. Resolutions were adopted protesting against increase of assessment, objecting to continuance of the Houston plan, and urging return to old methods. On the other hand, up to April 7, 9,092 property owners had signed the assessment roll, thus expressing approval of Tax Commissioner Pastoriza's assessments, and the approval of about 200 more was expected. The objectors are nearly all large holders of vacant lots. Commenting on the protest, Mayor Ben Campbell was reported by the Houston Press as saying:

"If that bunch of tax dodgers doesn't like the Houston plan of taxation I don't give a hang. This government is being run for the people now and the plan won't be changed. If any man has a just complaint he can make it to the equalization board or the council. If it is found just it will be cheerfully rectified. We invite such complaints. Our patience will never be exhausted attending to them.

"Isn't everybody who has land faring alike? Isn't everybody who has houses faring alike? Isn't everybody who has money faring alike? There is absolutely no discrimination. The fact that everybody has been treated alike is what has caused the overwhelming majority to sign and be satisfied. And it has also caused a very few who want discrimination in their favor to be dissatisfied. Under our present system of taxation Houston has prospered like it has never done before. We have accomplished a great deal under our new form of taxation. One of the best features of the Houston plan is that it is no longer necessary for people to commit perjury when making their assessments. Men can be gentlemen now when they do their assessing. It is no longer necessary for people to send their money to New York the last of December and have it sent here January 15 in order to keep from paying taxes on their money. It is my observation that some of those who are behind this new movement, trying to stir up trouble, have done little for the upbuilding of Houston, although many of them have been in a position to do so. There are some who wish to be parasites on the community and to get rich from the industry of others. These men who have purchased in Houston at extremely low figures in the past, and who are now holding it for purely speculative purposes without improving it, do nothing for the advancement of Houston."

[See current volume, page 341.]

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the District Committee unwittingly fell into an error when he stated a few moments ago that the overwhelming sentiment of the District of Columbia Committee was in favor of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will recall that when we took the sense of the committee as to whether or not all kinds of personal property should be taxed the vote stood 12 to 4.

Mr. COADY. That is very true; I am speaking about the present bill. In the amendment now before the House the gentleman will recall the sentiment of the committee was taken on whether or not intangible personal property should be taxed, and that is as far as it went. This amendment goes further than that, Mr. Chairman, and undertakes to tax intangible personal property at the same rate of taxation now imposed on real estate.

Only eight members of the committee have signed the majority report. Eight members have signed two minority reports. I have not signed either of the reports, although I am opposed to this bill in its present shape. That leaves eight in favor of the bill as amended, nine opposed to it, and three unaccounted for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in so far as this bill undertakes to tax intangible personal property I favor it. I am in favor of taxing both real and personal property, tangible and intangible, but I can not agree with the conclusions of the committee that all kinds of property should be assessed in the same manner and at the same rate of taxation. I differ from them at that point, because I believe the imposition of the full city rate of 1½ per cent on intangible personal property in this District would almost amount to confiscation and would have the effect, as it has in other cities and municipalities, of forcing and causing the people not to turn in intangible property that they own and to make perjurers and liars of them. That has been the effect wherever they have tried to tax intangible personal property at the full city rates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of admiration for the gentlemen whose names are associated with this amendment, the distinguished chairman of the committee and the distinguished chairman from Iowa. There are no two better men in the House, none actuated by higher and better motives, and even in this matter I am sure they are sincerely desirous of doing the right thing. But in their enthusiasm to correct the evils that exist—and there are some evils that exist in the matter of taxation in the District of Columbia—they have gone too far in the other direction. This measure in its present shape is grossly unfair to the people of this District. It is unfair to the poor man and to the man of moderate means as well as to the man who is better off in the possession of this world's goods.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is that because we propose to tax stocks and bonds?

Mr. COADY. You propose not only to tax stocks and bonds, but you propose to tax annuities. In many cases where the annuity amounts to $200 or $300 it is needed and paid to poor people; and you propose to tax also savings bank deposits, which in nearly all cases are held by poor people. I say that the measure in the present shape is grossly unfair on that account. It will impose an unfair burden on the thrifty workman and workwoman who by continued hard work and economy save a few hundred dollars and put it in the savings banks. Under the provision of the Johnson and Prouty amendment the poor working girl and the poor working boy who have deposits in the savings bank, where they get three and a half or four per cent, will pay one and a half per cent to the District government. In other words, if they are getting $3 on every hundred, they will be forced to pay $1.50 to the District government. The poor widow and dependent orphan who receive annuities from some estate will be forced to pay 1½ per cent of whatever income they may receive.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. PETERSON. Why should they not pay just as much on their annuities as the poor widow should pay on her home or the poor man on his horse and cart?

Mr. COADY. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that there is not a State in the Union that has gone so far as to tax annuities; and I will answer that again by saying that when you tax an annuity in many instances you are taxing the same property three and four times. Let me give the gentleman an illustration. An annuity may arise from investment of bonds. A trustee may hold some bonds charged with an annuity.

Mr. PETERSON. That is a species of property.

Mr. COADY. And those bonds represent some real estate. A mortgage on the real estate created those bonds. That property is taxed, and the bonds are taxed, and the annuity is taxed, and if that annuity is large enough to come under the operations of the income-tax law, then it is taxed again, and in that case we have evidence of the taxation of the same property four different times.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How is it any harder on the poor woman of whom the gentleman speaks to pay a tax on an annuity than it is on the other woman to pay a tax on her home?

Mr. COADY. Because that annuity is already taxed. The trustee who holds the bonds pays a tax on those bonds. If it is an annuity charged on real estate, the trustee pays the tax on that real estate.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I do not understand that is true at all.

Mr. COADY. That is true.

Mr. PETERSON. That can be adjusted.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. We all understand the difficulty of a fair taxation on intangible property—that is, without making a duplication of taxation on other property. The question has been discussed frequently as to whether a tax on intangible property was not in effect a duplication of a tax on some other property. But, irrespective of that, I want to call attention to this fact: That the so-called organic law of 1878 specifically requires that there should be levied a tax on all personal property in the District of Columbia not taxable elsewhere. In other words, it makes no distinction between tangible and intangible personal property. That is the organic law under which these people have claimed for so long. That organic law has been violated for 30 years by slipping the word "tangible" into the law providing for the machinery of assessment, and the law providing the machinery of assessment slipped in the word "tangible" and struck out the words "not taxable elsewhere"; and so it says "tangible personal property," which is in violation of the so-called half-and-half law. That so-called fundamental law which they have sworn by here having provided for the equal assessment of tangible and intangible personal property, are we not justified in carrying that out?

Mr. COADY. If we did that, we ought to change it.

Mr. BORLAND. But they want us to stick to it. Now, let us stick to it.

Mr. COADY. We do not want to stick to anything like that, which works a burden on the people of this District.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman realizes that their fundamental law that they do not want changed requires the assessment of both classes of property. To that extent, at least, we can meet it.

Mr. COADY. If it provides for taxation of both classes of property at the same rate, I am in favor of changing it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand the gentleman is not in favor of either the bill or the substitute?

Mr. COADY. I am merely speaking to the amendment called "the Johnson-Prouty amendment" inserted in the bill, which provides for the taxation of intangible personal property at the same rate at which real estate is now taxed in the District. I am not discussing the other features of the bill. I am not opposed to the other features of the bill, although I will be frank enough to say this to the gentleman: That I came into the House only in November last, and I have been a member of that committee for a very short while and have not had an opportunity to give the matter the thorough carefuly study to which it is entitled; and I believe it is a big question, and the only way to solve it is by employing experts; and I am in favor of a commission such as that suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. COADY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. That is why I asked the gentleman the question. If the committee is dissatisfied with the bill before the House, what will a poor fellow like myself who does not know anything about it do when we come to a vote? Why not have a commission that will report after some months of expert investigation?

Mr. COADY. Well, I am giving the gentleman my views. I am in favor of a commission to investigate this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman right here in the history of this question there have been several commissions appointed and Congress has never yet adopted the suggestion of any one of those commissions.

Mr. COADY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that in this country to-day the people who are making a study of the question of taxation are in favor of a classification of personal property. They have done it in Pennsylvania, and the rate there is only 40 cents on the $100, which I think is a fair rate. In Rhode Island it is 40 cents on the $100; in Minnesota it is 30 cents on the $100; in Connecticut it is 40 cents on the $100; and in my own State of Maryland our city rate was 30 cents in addition to our State rate, which was variable. When we changed the law back 20 years ago and made a fixed rate for Baltimore city the State rate at that time was only 15 cents, making a combined charge or rate of 45 cents. Since then, because of some great improvements we have carried on in Maryland, for which we have spent millions of dollars, in the construction of good roads and other public improvements, our State rate has soared until now it is about 32 cents; so at the last session of the legislature we changed the law and fixed the State rate at 15 cents; so hereafter in Maryland, right across the line here, securities will have only to pay a tax of 45 cents on $100.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. BARTON. The gentleman stated as a basis for his argument that he would not favor the 1½ per cent rate for the reason that it would induce people to misrepresent the amount of property they had.

Mr. COADY. That is one of the reasons, and because it is unfair, and my judgment is that it is confiscatory.

Mr. BARTON. That being the case, does the gentleman believe that if we have an inflexible rate, or a condition where the property value would be put to the amount of money we should raise and the rate adjusted by it, that then it will not be so conducive to misrepresentations?

Mr. COADY. I am only speaking, of course, about intangible personal property.

Mr. BARTON. The only question I wanted to ask was, if the gentleman's theory was based on the conditions found by the George investigating committee, that the real estate of this city had not been assessed at its true value?

Mr. COADY. Well, I have no expression on that at this time for reasons I have given before. I have not made a study of it, and I will repeat to the gentleman, if he desires, what I have already said——

Mr. BARTON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the same theory possibly might work without there being an inflexible per cent?

Mr. COADY. I want to add another State, the State of Iowa. The State of Iowa taxes its intangible personal property at 50 cents a hundred, so the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, Judge PROUTY, in his own State only taxes 50 cents a hundred, and yet he wants to impose upon the people of this District a tax rate on intangible property three times as great as that imposed in his own State of Iowa. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COADY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I see by the map which the gentleman from Iowa presented to the committee the tax rate in the city of Des Moines is 22 mills and a fraction on the dollar. I do not know what rate of interest the savings banks there pay, but I presume it is 3 per cent, which is the ordinary rate.

Does the gentleman think they would get a very large tax on savings-bank deposits where the rate of interest paid was 3 per cent and the tax was a little over two-thirds of that?

Mr. COADY. They certainly would not.

Mr. MANN. In the gentleman's opinion, would they get as much as they would on a rate of 50 cents on the hundred as fixed by the Iowa law?

Mr. COADY. I think not, sir. I want to say this: If you impose a tax like this on bank deposits in the city of Washington, you will drive them out of Washington, and we will welcome them in Baltimore, where our rate is only 45 cents. In Virginia, right across the line, they recently passed a law placing a tax of 20 cents on bank deposits, and in Maryland we only tax them where they pay interest. And this bill in its present shape is unfair to the poor people in this District whom you are seeking to protect, for this reason, that national banks and State banks only pay about 2 per cent on balances, and then only on large balances, such balances as only the rich man can have, and yet they would pay $1.50 out of that $2 to the District Government. They would get something in return, but the little business man and the poor man, who has only a small deposit in that bank, that does not pay him a cent of interest, would be taxed on that, and he would be compelled to take out of his principal that he has in the bank the taxes that he would be compelled to pay to the District Government.

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose one of these poor men had $1,000 and invested it in a little home. Suppose his brother had $1,000 that he saw fit to invest in bonds or stocks or some other security, do you believe it right to require the fellow who puts the money in real estate to pay all the burdens and the other fellow none?

Mr. COADY. No; I do not; and that is my position right here.

Mr. PROUTY. Do you believe he ought to pay less?

Mr. COADY. I do not believe that money in bank which produces 2 per cent ought to pay as much as real estate, which produces more.

Mr. PROUTY. As to real estate, a vacant lot——

Mr. COADY. Our single-tax friends come in there.

Mr. PROUTY. Let me put the question in this form: Suppose a man had $1,000 and he invested it in a vacant lot, and his brother had $1,000 that he invested in New York Central stock. Do you believe the fellow that invested his money in a vacant lot should pay all the expenses, and his brother, who had invested his money in the same amount—and both were worth exactly the same amount—in stocks and bonds, should pay nothing?

Mr. COADY. I have not said that.

Mr. PROUTY. Is it not fair to assess it against the fellow who has the stocks and bonds and the fellow who owns the real estate?

Mr. COADY. I think the experts in this country who have made a study of this question have come to the conclusion that the only way to get on the tax books of the various States all the intangible personal property is to place on it a fair tax rate.

Mr. PROUTY. You are talking about oppressing the poor people, and not the question of expediency. You are talking about the poor man.

Mr. COADY. I think this amendment does oppress him in the way I pointed out, because, as I pointed out before, the poor working boy and girl who have savings in the savings bank here will be compelled to pay to the District government one-half of the interest they secure on their deposits.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is it not true that the banks in the city of Washington known as "savings banks" borrow from the poor classes of the people at 1½ to 2 per cent and then let that same money out at a rate of interest ranging from 6 to 10 per cent, whereas if something was done which would bring the attention of the poor classes of people who have these savings that if they would take them out of the savings bank and lend them on real estate here, instead of the banks doing it for them at 6 per cent, they would be infinitely better off?

Mr. COADY. I am not prepared to answer that question. I do not think it is material to this discussion at this time.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes, sir.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. You think that a person who puts $1,000 in a savings bank ought to be exempt from taxation on the $1,000, as I infer from what you said?

Mr. COADY. Yes. I do not believe in taxing savings-bank deposits at the full rate of taxation.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Suppose that instead of putting it in the savings bank he would invest it in a $1,000 mortgage—that same poor person—would you be in favor of taxing the mortgage? You would be in favor of taxing the mortgage, would you?

Mr. COADY. No; I am not in favor of taxing the mortgage, for the reason that in the long run the mortgagor pays it.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Well, instead of that, suppose this poor person buys a house and lot for a thousand dollars. Would you be in favor of taxing that?

Mr. COADY. Taxing the house and lot?

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. COADY. Unquestionably, because I am in favor of taxing real estate.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. The same person has the same money. I think he ought to be taxed if he puts it in a savings bank or in a mortgage, with a great deal more reason and with a stronger reason than when he puts in into a house to keep his wife and children.

Mr. COADY. Then I understand the gentleman stands for this position: That if a poor person in this District had $500 in a savings bank, on which that person received only 4 per cent interest, he would be in favor of forcing that person to yield up to the District government one-half of the interest that he received from that deposit?

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Of course he puts it in the savings bank from choice. I could show him innumerable instances where he can get more interest and where the investment would be just as safe.

A MEMBER. Tell us.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. A real estate mortgage. It draws more than 3 per cent.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman knows that where you tax mortgages the borrower invariably pays it. That is the experience of all the States. Quite a number of States that have had laws of that kind have gradually repealed them.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. COADY. I do.

Mr. QUIN. I have a city in my district in Mississippi where the city tax is 18 mills and the county and State tax 13 mills. That is 31 mills in all. Does the gentleman think it is fair for my constituents to pay 31 mills and then on top of that to pay part of the taxes of people here in Washington, with all their intangible wealth free of tax?

Mr. COADY. I will say to the gentleman that if the people of his district must pay a burdensome tax rate like that on their intangible personal property they are in a bad plight. I would like to know from the gentleman how much intangible property they have in his district. Is it a large city that the gentleman comes from?

Mr. QUIN. No; it is a small city of from ten to fifteen thousand people.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman say that they impose such a tax on bonds and mortgages and stocks?

Mr. QUIN. They do. They tax both intangible and real property.

Mr. COADY. The experience of almost every State in the country that has tried to impose a tax of that kind has been that they have not been able to find the property. It makes liars and perjurers of the people.

Mr. QUIN. We have a revenue collector down there that gets those liars and perjurers. We made a few railroad companies pay up down there.

Mr. COADY. Now, Mr. Chairman, right down in the State of Kentucky, the State from which comes the chairman of this committee, only recently they passed a constitutional amendment for the classification of property, and it received a majority of 33,000, showing the sentiment of the gentleman's own State. It is true that because of the failure to give the proper notice, as provided by the constitution, it was set aside by the court, from whose judgment an appeal has been taken, and I do not know whether the appeal has been disposed of or not; but I know that in the State of the chairman of this committee, out of 90,000 votes there was a majority of 33,000 in favor of the classification of property.

In the State of Maryland in 1906, to show the value of a fair assessment of property, we had on our statute books $6,000,000 of intangible personal property. The legislature of that year fixed the 30-cent rate, and the next year we had $58,000,000, an increase of $52,000,000 in one year—a strong evidence of what the people will do if you treat them fairly and honestly and do not endeavor to impose an excessive rate on them.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I fancy the gentleman does not want to go on record as saying that the people in Maryland would evade that tax? The gentleman would not want that to go on record would he?

Mr. COADY. I will say that it is true in Maryland and in Ohio and in Virginia, and true in Pennsylvania and in every State in this country where they have adopted a rate of that kind.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will convince the gentleman, if he wants me to, that it is not true of my own State of Arkansas, where we have a law of that kind.

Mr. COADY. It may not be true of the gentleman's own State, but I have a report of the commissions of half a dozen different States here in which that statement is made. I will ask the gentleman if he knows whether all the stocks and securities owned by people in his State are returned to the tax assessor?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I think now and then we have a man who will swear to a lie to avoid paying his taxes, but I hope such men are in the minority.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman does not know, and he knows he does not know.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know as much about it as the gentleman does.

Mr. COADY. I am giving you the experience of quite a number of States that have changed from the old system to the new system. One year after the new system was put in we had $58,000,000, and last year $191,000,000. In the State of Pennsylvania they had the same experience. In 1885 the assessment of intangible property was $145,000,000. In that year they changed the rate, and the next year they had on their books $429,000,000 worth of intangible personal property.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I just want to read an extract taken from a special report on taxation issued by the United States Bureau of Corporations only last December. It is with reference to the Minnesota special tax rate on securities. Minnesota recently passed a law imposing a special tax rate of 40 cents on securities in that State. This report says:

> The law imposing a flat 3-mill tax rate on certain intangibles became effective only one week before the assessors began the personal-property assessment of 1911. The report shows that in 1910 the assessed value of moneys and credits amounted to approximately $14,000,000, and that during the first year of the operation of the new law this amount increased 730 per cent. The assessment in 1912 amounts to $135,369,314, being an increase of 17.2 per cent over 1911 and 873 per cent over 1910. It is stated that while no extra data are available for 1910 estimates show that the number of people assessed for this class of property did not exceed 6,200, whereas in 1911 the number was 41,439, which was further increased to 50,564 in 1912. The report shows that the amount of revenue derived under the law of 1911 was nearly as large as that of 1910, when the rate averaged over 28 mills.
> Excluding Minneapolis and St. Paul, the balance of the State in 1911 showed a net gain of over $71,000. For reasons stated in the report, the commission is of the opinion that the loss of revenue in these cities is more apparent than real, and that both cities will probably derive as much from the 1912 assessment as they did under the old law. In conclusion, the tax commission expresses the opinion that the law is a decided improvement over the old method, because it is more equitable and will eventually produce more revenue than the old system. "Above all, it makes for good citizenship, because it reduces the premium on dishonesty and permits men to be truthful in their tax statements without the fear of having their property confiscated in excessive tax rates."

Mr. PETERSON. Then your argument is that a man will be truthful at 30 cents, but will be a liar at 40 cents. Is that your estimate of humanity?

Mr. COADY. I am not making any estimates. I am giving you the facts and figures as I have gathered them from the reports of various tax commissions that have investigated these questions in the various States. I have them here for Massachusetts, Virginia, and other States in the Union, and they have all come to the conclusion that the only way to get this intangible property on the tax books is to impose a fair rate of taxation. That has been the experience of these States that have tried it.

In an address before the fourth annual meeting of the National Taxation Association, held in Milwaukee in September, 1910, Prof. Thomas S. Adams, of the University of Wisconsin, who is quite a tax expert, and who was later a member of the State tax commission of that State, made the following statement:

> The next reform which calls for careful consideration is what Prof. Bullock has aptly called "the graded property tax." Briefly stated, the essential proposal here is to reduce rates upon each class of property in proportion to the difficulty of finding and assessing that class of property until the natural inclination to be honest balances and overcomes the temptation to evade the tax. This plan of reducing rates has been tried with very successful results, so far as the yield of the tax is concerned, in Pennsylvania and Baltimore.
> All students of American taxation must feel deeply grateful to the champions of this reform in Pennsylvania and Maryland. It has taught us the exceedingly important lesson that a tax which is exorbitant can not succeed in an American Commonwealth unless the property upon which it falls is tangible and irremovable. It has taught us also that there are large numbers of American taxpayers who will be honest if the State gives them half a chance. But its principal lesson may be summed up in the axiom that tax rates, like railway rates, must be fair and reasonable if the tax is to succeed. So deeply do I feel that this lesson should be taken to heart that I do not hesitate to say that the success of the income tax or any other reform project is wholly dependent upon its thoroughgoing adherence to this rule that tax rates must be fair and reasonable.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman if these philosophers have offered any method by which you can prevent the owners of land or other tangible property from being overassessed, to make up for the underassessment we are compelled to give these people who own intangible property, to keep them from being dishonest?

Mr. COADY. You do not lose anything. The figures that I give you from Maryland and Pennsylvania prove conclusively that you do not lose anything; that you can not get at intangible personal property in any other way. It is hidden, and the only way to bring it out is to impose a fair rate on it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman is aside from the question I was propounding. In the proportion that you tax people less for intangible property you have got to make it up by exorbitant taxation on tangible property.

Mr. COADY. I did not state that.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman's notion is that people will not pay the tax on intangible property if you assess it at the full value. Now, whatever deficiency arises from your inability to get the full amount on intangible property must be made up by a levy of exorbitant taxation on people who have tangible property.

Mr. COADY. Of course not. They would have to pay that much more.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Whatever reduction you make on the tax of intangible property there will be a corresponding increase made on tangible property.

Mr. COADY. That does not follow at all.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If a man with a thousand dollars real estate pays $1.50 a hundred, and the man with the bond only pays 50 cents, there is an inequality.

Mr. COADY. But the man with the bond is not paying anything at all now, because he does not turn it in under the present tax laws.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. No; but if you tax it low enough to hire him to pay interest he will.

Mr. COADY. Yes; and you have that much more money.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But you have one silk-stocking fellow paying 50 cents on a hundred, while the party who owns something tangible pays $1.50 a hundred. Now, while the gentleman is talking about the widow and her little savings, he is forgetting to talk about the multimillionaire who will also be benefited by the low rate of taxation on intangible property.

Mr. COADY. I am not raising the question of whether a man is rich or not. I believe in being fair and just in all laws. I believe in a scheme of taxation that is fair and reasonable. I would not stand up here or anywhere else and advocate an excessive rate of taxation on a man because he owns more of this world's goods than another. I want to be fair in this thing.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I am sure the gentleman by his speech has convinced the House of that. He has not frequently mentioned the rich, but he has not forgotten them when he is asking that intangible property shall be taxed at a lower rate than tangible property.

Mr. COADY. I am asking only fairness and justice to all classes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. While the gentleman has not said it, he has intended the same reduction for the multimillionaire on the intangible property that he has for the poor widow. Whenever you reduce the taxation from $1.50 a hundred to 50 cents in order to save the little mite that the widow has in the savings bank, you undoubtedly have it in mind to make the same reduction for the millionaire.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman is not stating the thing fairly. I know he intends to, but he does not.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I am stating to the House the position as the gentleman stated it himself.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understand the gentleman is arguing for a principle of classification of taxation rather than a uniform system?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understand the gentleman wants that because if you put the rate on intangible property beyond a certain limit the property goes into hiding, and you can not get it?

Mr. COADY. Exactly.

Mr. FESS. If you put on a lower limit, you have a greater amount to tax and you have a greater amount of money collected by taxation than if you put it at the high rate?

Mr. COADY. Exactly. I am not justifying the hiding of securities. I think a man should turn them in, but I am telling you the effects of this present system.

Mr. FESS. Can the gentleman estimate what the rate should be, so that it will not be too high and force securities into hiding?

Mr. COADY. My judgment, based on what has been done in other States, is that it ought to run from 40 to 50 cents. Under the proposed law the man that would be taxed would be giving to the District of Columbia about one-third of his income.

Mr. FESS. I understand that the gentleman prefers to put a lower rate on intangible property than on tangible?

Mr. COADY. That is my position, because that is the only way to get at it.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman thinks it is fair?

Mr. COADY. I really think it is fair. I say, however, that I believe a man ought to pay his full rate if it is imposed on him. It is dishonest for him to hide it, and he ought to pay it, and I am in favor of it, first, because it brings out property hidden, and secondly, because it is fair. Take the city stock issued by the city of Boston or the city of Philadelphia. It does not pay over 3½ per cent. If the residents of the District of Columbia who own some of that stock would be compelled to pay $1.50 of that every year, they would get only a net of 2 per cent. That is not fair. It is not fair to force a man to give up to the District of Columbia one-half of the income he receives from his securities.

Mr. FESS. What troubles me is that the gentleman would make one rate for one class of property and another rate for another class of property, the lower rate being made because he thinks he can get more results in taxation, which is a confession that we can not bring the property out.

Mr. COADY. That is true. It is a confession.

Mr. FESS. And then the gentleman says that is a fair system of taxation?

Mr. COADY. I think it is a fair system of taxation.

Mr. FESS. That is hard for me to understand.

Mr. COADY. I think a 40 or 50 cent rate is a fair system. I am in favor of that for two reasons: First, because it is fair; and, second, because you can not get out this property unless you impose a rate of that kind.

Mr. FESS. Because it would be workable, therefore, it is fair; and otherwise it would not be workable, and therefore is unfair.

Mr. COADY. I do not think it would be workable if you imposed the full rate.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman believe in the principle of the single tax?

Mr. COADY. No.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman realize that the principle of classification may lead to that?

Mr. COADY. I have never thought of that. I had not that in mind at all.

Mr. FESS. Certainly, if you can make a rate on one class of property higher than another or lower than another, you could take it all off one and put it all on the other.

Mr. COADY. I am not in favor of the single-tax rate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the same request. Is there objection?

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 14, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy name is the hope and inspiration of all men. No man hath seen Thee at any time but Thou hast given us to know Thee very near and to know the great Divine design in human life. All that we have seen, the works of Thy hands, have been to us a revelation of a personal God. All the ministry of nature teaches us the self-determination and self-revelation of the infinite and absolute One. The whole earth is full of Thy glory. We rejoice and exult in our kinship with God, and praise Thy name that Thou hast called us to be coworkers together with Thyself. Let Thy blessing abide with us this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in my address yesterday I used certain tables taken from the Wall Street Journal, instituting a comparison between the market value of industrial stocks and railway stocks. I find upon examining the stenographic report that I did not ask leave to have them printed as a part of my remarks. It was an oversight on my part, and I now ask unanimous consent that the tables may be inserted in my address without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

IMPORTATION OF GOODS IN AMERICAN VESSELS (S. DOC. NO. 464).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 9th instant, the full text of the recent opinion of the Board of United States General Appraisers on the construction of the clause in the tariff act of October 3, 1913, allowing a 5 per cent discount on goods imported in American vessels, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

INCOME-TAX COLLECTIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending the inclusion of an item in the legislative appropriation bill under the heading "Collecting the income tax," providing that no agent paid from this appropriation shall receive compensation at a rate higher than $7 a day and $3 additional in lieu of subsistence, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HARBOR TONNAGE AND CONSTRUCTION OF LOCKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, acknowledging the receipt of the resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant, relative to information in connection with the tonnage of each harbor of the United States, and also the number of locks that the Government of the United States has constructed, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 11, 1914.

Hon. JAMES M. BAKER,
Secretary of the Senate.

SIR: Acknowledgment is made of Senate resolution of April 9, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish certain detailed information in connection with the tonnage of each harbor of the United States, and also the number of locks that the Government of the United States has constructed, their location, cost of their construction, etc. Inasmuch as this department has no information upon the subjects covered by the resolution, I have taken the liberty of transmitting a copy of the resolution to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Commerce, whose departments have jurisdiction over the matters involved.

Respectfully, CHARLES S. HAMLIN,
Acting Secretary.

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have printed as a public document a copy of a certain communication from the Secretary of Agriculture in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 1st of April. I do not know whether this is the proper time to make the request or not. If there is no objection, I should like to make it now.

I ask that the resolution passed by the Senate April 1, 1914, calling upon the Secretary of Agriculture for information relative to the relation of the organization known as the General Educational Board of the Rockefeller Foundation to the work of the Department of Agriculture and a copy of the reply of the Secretary of Agriculture thereto dated April 4, 1914, be made a public document, and, further, that they be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will allow the papers to be referred to the Committee on Printing, they will report upon the printing.

Mr. KENYON. I have no objection, if that is the proper course; but I assume that the portion of the request in reference to printing in the RECORD can be made now.

Mr. SMOOT. That is entirely with the Senate; it is not with the committee at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing the papers in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 3, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the information requested and directed to be furnished to the Senate by resolution adopted April 1, 1914, concerning:

1. The relation, if any, of the organization known as the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation to the work of the Department of Agriculture.

2. The names and positions of all employees, if any, of the department whose salaries are paid in whole or in part with funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation.

3. The names and positions of all administrative officers, if any, of the department who are in any way connected with the work of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation.

4. Salaries, if any, received by them from the said Rockefeller Foundation.

The General Education Board is a corporation created by a special act of the Congress approved by President Roosevelt January 12, 1903, having as its object the promotion of education within the United States of America without distinction of race, sex, or creed.

About the time of the incorporation of the General Education Board a serious emergency was presented in the Southwest by the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil. The Congress, on January 15, 1904, made an appropriation which permitted the expenditure of $250,000 for meeting the ravages of the weevil, including demonstration work. The demonstration work met with immediate success and attracted the attention of the General Education Board. The board expressed its desire to cooperate, and offered to place at the disposal of the department additional funds for extending the work.

On April 20, 1906, after a full discussion, a memorandum of understanding was entered into between the Department of Agriculture and the General Education Board for cooperation in extending the farmers' cooperative cotton-demonstration work. The agreement provided, in brief, that the work financed by the General Education Board should be distinct in territory from that carried on solely by the Department of Agriculture, and that this work should be separately financed. Under the terms of the agreement the General Education Board undertook to pay the expenses directly and indirectly incurred in conducting the demonstration work in the extended territory, and the department agreed to supervise the work and to appoint all special agents for the extended territory. It was also agreed that the agents should be under the control of the department in every respect as fully as any other agents of the department.

It was distinctly understood that the department was to be in no way responsible for the handling of the funds provided by the General Education Board, and that the department would, under no consideration, join with the board in payment of salaries of employees, except to the extent of a nominal collaborator's salary of $1 per annum, which was necessary and essential in order to secure the franking privilege.

The agreement referred to has been the basis of operations since 1906. The arrangement with the General Education Board has been called to the attention of the committees of Congress in the reports of the Secretary or in the reports of the Bureau of Plant Industry or in the public hearings before the committees each year since the work was undertaken. For the last fiscal year the board appropriated approximately $250,000 for this work. The greater part of this appropriation has been used for general demonstration work in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, north Georgia, Virginia, West Virginia, and Kentucky. About $75,000 of the amount has been devoted to girls' canning and poultry club work in all the Southern States.

The plans for the entire work are made by the department. In conducting that work the department, as in other cases wherever practicable, has entered into close relations with the State colleges of agriculture, and part of the salaries of the agents are paid from State or county funds or both and part from the General Education Board funds. In making its appointments the department has in such cases cooperated with the State college.

There is appended hereto a statement giving the names of persons employed in farmers' cooperative demonstration work, whose salaries are paid in whole or in part by the General Education Board. The part of the salary not so paid, with the exception of the collaborator's salary of $1 per annum paid by the department, is paid, as has been indicated, by the State or county or some other local organization. The statement gives, first, the names of the employees; second, the amount per month paid by the General Education Board; third, the amount paid by the State; fourth, amount paid by county or local authorities; fifth, the nominal sum paid by the department; and, sixth, number of months employed each year.

Mr. Bradford Knapp is the administrative officer of the department who handles all the farmers' cooperative demonstration work in the South. As director of all the administrative work he has charge of the force of collaborators who are paid in whole or in part by the General Education Board. He receives no salary from the General Education Board.

In March, 1913, the Congress made an appropriation for the study of marketing, and it also made an appropriation for the study of rural credits in Europe. It appeared desirable that if possible there should be an investigation of the forms of cooperation in the United States, of the problems of rural organization, and especially of the facts relating to farm credits. These problems are interwoven with the marketing problems and with the rural-credit inquiry abroad. It was suggested that it was important that the department institute inquiries concerning these problems while it was investigating marketing in this country and rural credits abroad. The department at the time had no funds available, and the General Education Board, learning of the situation, offered to extend its financial cooperation, and the department entered into an agreement by which funds were placed at its disposal for the study of cooperation, including rural credits and the general organization of rural communities for economic, social, and educational purposes. The department agreed to have a director in charge of this work who should be approved by it and whose work should be directed by it, and Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver, of Harvard, was selected. It was agreed to make him and four other necessary investigators collaborators, paying them a nominal salary of $1 per month or per annum, as indicated below, so as to make it possible for them to use the frank:

	Amount per month paid by General Education Board.	Amount paid by the Department of Agriculture.
Carver, T. N.	$625.00	[1] $1.00
Goddard, L. H.	333.34	[2] 1.00
Thompson, C. W.	333.34	[1] 1.00
Buttrick, P. A.	150.00	[1] 1.00
Moran, J. S.	125.00	[2] 1.00

[1] Per month. [2] Per annum.

The department also selected 12 professors of economics in agricultural colleges or universities in the country and made them collaborators, with the nominal compensation of $1 per annum, so that they might use the Government frank. Their names are:

Prof. C. B Austin, University of Texas, Austin, Tex.; Prof. Charles Lee Raper, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Prof. L. D. H. Weld, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.; Dean Leon S. Merrill, University of Maine, Orono, Me.; Prof. W. O. Hedrick, State College, East Lansing, Mich.; Prof. Samuel D. Gromer, University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo.; Prof. G. O. Virtue, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebr.; Prof. George Thomas, Agricultural College, Logan, Utah; Prof. A. W. Taylor, Washington State College, Pullman, Wash.; Prof. C. B. Williams, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa; Prof. Alexander E. Cance, Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, Mass.; Prof. Morton A. Aldrich, Tulane University, New Orleans, La.

The traveling expenses of these men were paid by the General Education Board.

It made a similar arrangement with Dr. Lillian Johnson, of Memphis, Tenn., and Miss Ernestine Noa, of Lookout Mountain, Tenn.

The following persons are employed as clerks under Dr. Carver, their salaries being wholly paid by the General Education Board. They are not collaborators of the department.

Names and salary per month.

Daisy F. Fridley	$85
Chastina Gardner	85
May F. Murphy	85
Catherine M. Viehmann	85
Myrtle Wells	85
Kenneth Creswell	40
John Donahue	50

The total amount appropriated by the General Education Board for this purpose has been $37,166.66.

On December 31, 1913, it was agreed that this arrangement should terminate on June 30, 1914.

If for any reason the Congress should conclude that this farmers' demonstration work, carried on in cooperation with the General Education Board since 1906, should be discontinued, the work in the South will have to be curtailed accordingly or an appropriation from the general revenues of $250,000 will be required.

Respectfully,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

establishment of a literacy test for immigrants, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF VERMONT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Essex Junction, Vt., April 9, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At the request of W. H. Jeffrey, of East Burke, Vt., I hand you herewith a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution requesting Vermont delegation in Congress to advocate and aid in the passage of an immigration bill containing the illiteracy test," and would respectfully ask that said resolution be made a part of the record.

Respectfully, yours,

GUY W. BAILEY,
Secretary of State.

Joint resolution requesting the Vermont delegation in Congress to advocate and aid in the passage of an immigration bill containing the illiteracy test.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives:

Whereas there were admitted to the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, 1,030,300 persons as immigrants. That prior to 1883, among the immigrants coming to this country, there was only 2.7 per cent of illiteracy. That for the past five years illiteracy has alarmingly increased to more than 36 per cent, and that of the 1,500,000 south Italians who came here from 1899 to 1909 over 800,000, or more than 54 per cent, could not read and write; 54 per cent of the Syrians could neither read nor write; 35 per cent of the Poles could neither read nor write; 68 per cent of the Portuguese, 38 per cent of the Ruthenians, 51 per cent of the Russians, 58 per cent of the Turks, 27 per cent of the Greeks, and 41 per cent of the Bulgarians and Servians and Montenegrins could neither read nor write; and

Whereas Congress by its act of February 20, 1907, created an Immigration Commission, composed of three Senators, three Members of the House of Representatives, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, for the purposes of making a careful and searching investigation into the entire question of immigration, both in this country and abroad, and now, after several years of painstaking investigation, at a cost of more than a million dollars, said commission has rendered its exhaustive report of 40 massive volumes to Congress and urgently recommends the passage of a measure which will greatly restrict the admission of those less likely to become desirable citizens; and

Whereas the commission, with a single dissenting opinion, suggests and recommends that the illiteracy or reading and writing test is the one single measure best calculated to restrict undesirable immigration; and

Whereas the Hon. WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM, senior Senator from Vermont, who was chairman of the Immigration Commission, has introduced into the Senate of the United States a bill containing the illiteracy requirement, and that said bill has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House of Representatives, under the title of the Burnett bill: Therefore

Resolved, That the congressional delegation from Vermont are urgently requested to advocate and aid in the passage of an immigration bill containing the illiteracy requirement; and be it

Further resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to each Member of the Vermont delegation in Congress and a copy to the chairman of the Senate and House Committee on Immigration.

FRANK E. HOWE,
President of the Senate.
CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, December 10, 1912.

ALLEN M. FLETCHER, Governor.

Office of the Secretary of State:

LOCATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

Mr. THORNTON. I present a memorial addressed to the Congress of the United States by the commission council of the city of New Orleans, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL ADDRESSED TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES BY THE COMMISSION COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

The city of New Orleans is incontestably the largest city of one of the most productive sections of the United States. In respect to population, material wealth, industrial development, banking resources, commercial faculty, business consequence, and every element and all elements which singly or in combination constitute a metropolis, New Orleans stands preeminent and unapproached in the vast and prolific section called the South. This status is demonstrated by statistics, and is known and recognized by all informed men, both in this country and abroad.

Not only does New Orleans overshadow all its neighbors in respect to the aforementioned economic considerations which are in varying degree common to its so-called rivals, and therefore subject to comparative estimate, but in addition the said city occupies a commanding position in the trade relations of the Nation with the outside world, which said position its said so-called rivals do not occupy, and to which each and all of these are from the nature of the case forever ineligible.

With one single exception New Orleans is the greatest and most important seaport in all the United States. Situated at the mouth of the great watercourse of the Nation, it is the gravity focus of the Mississippi Valley and supplies the facilities of contact between the tremendous productive resources and energy of this prolific region and the trade marts of the world. Its function is not merely to sell shoes and pots and pans to a limited contiguous territory, and perchance by juggling with freight rates to invade the local territory of some other competitive jobber in shoes and pots and pans, but it is the junction point of world-trade routes whereat is transhipped the outgoing productive surplus of an agricultural and industrial empire, and wherefrom is distributed the incoming material and commodities with which foreign nations supply the domestic trade. Its obligation is not local only, but comprehensive to the extent even of being national; and its mission is not merely to serve the jobbing requirements of a limited territory, but to facilitate those movements of commerce upon which the prosperity of the Nation at large depends. In this important particular, both in respect to the presently established trade routes to Europe and the countries to the southward and in respect to the wider fields to be opened to access through the Panama Canal, New Orleans occupies a position distinctly superior to that of all the cities of the Gulf and South Atlantic seaboards, and wholly beyond the rivalry of any inland city of the South.

These, in general counts, are the claims which New Orleans has made, and with particularity and in detail substantiated, before the reserve bank organization committee. These claims have been by said committee ignored, and instead of designating New Orleans as the locus of one of the Federal reserve banks the said city has been by an achievement of geographical legerdemain crowded off the financial map and the palm awarded to the two small inland cities of Dallas and Atlanta, almost touching elbows with the metropolis on the west and on the east. Both of these cities are thriving and enterprising, and both buy and distribute a considerable amount of goods; but the trade activities of each proceed largely along special lines, and the scope of their commerce is confined within more or less circumscribed limits. Singly each of these two cities is in every essential respect inconsequential as compared with New Orleans. If both might be consolidated into one, the combination would still fall short of equaling New Orleans either in population, wealth, banking resources, industrial productivity, business and commercial consequence, or in any of the essentials which should constitute the qualifications of a Federal reserve center. Furthermore, if these two cities could be amalgamated and then blotted from the map, the result to the business of the Nation would not be nearly so far-reaching and severe as those which would follow the closure of the great trade route through the port and market of New Orleans. It is vain to seek for any reasonable hypothesis to explain why the claims of New Orleans and of the vast territory and the great interests served by said city should have been ignored and the tremendous financial facility for business movement and business expansion should have been bestowed upon two comparatively puny inland cities neither of which can ever become what New Orleans is and long has been—one of the principal capitals in the world-encompassing democracy of commerce and trade. Considerations not only of common justice, but of national welfare, demand that the great national banking system shall be organized and administered along broader lines than those manifested in the initial achievement of the reserve bank committee.

New Orleans' preeminence has not been achieved through favor or fortunate circumstance. Its position as the greatest southern city and one of the important commercial and financial centers in the trade economy of the world has been won and maintained through triumph over disfavor and misfortune. The devastation of war, the demoralization of reconstruction, the burden of taxation created during the carpetbag era, and still enduring, and the desolation of pestilence, now forever overpast, have fallen heavily upon the stanch old city, but in spite of all its supremacy has been maintained and to-day it faces the splendid future with the militant optimism of new unscarred generations, tempered, let us hope, by the lessons of a historic past. It is true that many of the younger communities, untrammeled by the burdens of the old régime, have sprung from nothing, and with shout and bluster and hectic progress have exhibited amazing comparative percentages of growth, but none have approached or will approach the position of commercial and financial importance held by the inevitable outport of the Mississippi Valley. It is true that the comparative growth of the city has not been so rapid or spectacular as that of some of its neighbors, but it is also true that the story of "booms" and quick "bonanzas," which have swallowed millions of unwary capital, hold no place in New Orleans' history. But withal, the city is not without dynamic enterprise and actual achievement and fundamental preparedness which qualify it to respond to the demands of vigorous growth and rapid trade expansion which must inevitably follow the epochal developments of the near future. Within the past few years it has invested in a modern sewerage, drainage, and water system alone approximately the sum of $19,000,000, and has, as a result in this respect, facilities as complete and efficient, if not more complete and efficient than any other city in the Union. Furthermore, the city and State have spent upward of $4,000,000 upon a system of public dock and switching facilities, and has now admittedly the most fundamentally sound system of port administration of any port in the United States. Within the next few weeks work will be begun upon a system of public warehouses which are to be used in conjunction with the dock and switching facilities and which, when completed, will involve the expenditure of $3,000,000 of public money. Thus are the people of the State and city spending their money in providing facilities which will serve not only the business of the city but the commerce of the vast territory behind the same, and thus are these people preparing for the largely increased demands that will be made by the business of the country when the trade map of the world shall have been changed by the opening of the Isthmian Canal, and the city of New Orleans shall have doubled and quadrupled in size and shall have become, perhaps, not the second largest but the greatest port of the Nation. Upon these bases of trade necessity and trade usefulness, both in respect to present actual status and future inevitable development, are grounded the claims of the port and city of New Orleans for a principal part in the great new system of national finance.

The city of New Orleans supplicates no favors from the President, the committee, or from the Congress of the United States. Is asks only for a just and an intelligent application of the Federal reserve law. It believes in solemn earnestness that, through unfamiliarity with the fundamental movements and exigencies of trade, and through susceptibility to superficial and collateral considerations, the distinguished authors of the present bizarre alignment have fallen into an error which, if uncorrected, will not only deny justice to this city and the extensive territory affected, but will vitiate the financial system from which the people of the Nation have been led to expect such momentous beneficial results. The city of New Orleans asks for revision. Wherefore:

The commission council of the city of New Orleans, in behalf of the people it represents, deems it not only justifiable but obligatory that the error herein pointed out shall be brought to the attention of the people of the United States, and to that end directs that copies of this memorial be sent to the congressional representatives of Louisiana, to be by them respectfully presented, in such manner and in such method as may to them seem wise, to the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the commission council of the city of New Orleans April 9, 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator desire to have the report referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. THORNTON. The resolution has already been acted upon by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask that the report of the department be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to accompany the bill which will be introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The report is as follows:

ESTABLISHMENT OF A LINE OF SHIPS BETWEEN NEW YORK AND NEW ORLEANS AND VALPARAISO, CHILE.

Letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, transmitting certain information on Senate resolution 317 relative to a plan for the establishment of a line of ships to run between the cities of New York and New Orleans and the city of Valparaiso, Chile, and intermediate ports, together with a draft of a proposed bill to accomplish the same.

Mr. WEEKS submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

"Whereas it is desirable to develop and extend commercial relations between the United States and the countries of South America by the establishment of direct lines of communication for carrying the United States mail and for the transportation of passengers and freight; and

"Whereas private capital has not engaged in this service to a sufficient extent to furnish facilities comparable to those enjoyed by the people of other countries having trade relations with South America: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be prepared, in detail, a plan for the establishment of a line of ships to run between the cities of New York and New Orleans and the city of Valparaiso, Chile, and intermediate ports, to consist of the cruisers Columbia and Minneapolis and the scout cruisers Salem, Chester, and Birmingham, and that the information requested in this resolution shall include the following:

"First. The time required by these ships to make a round trip between the ports named.

"Second. The number of passengers which could be carried in each ship as now equipped or with any changes that would not impair their usefulness if required in the naval service.

"Third. The amount of freight that each ship could carry under similar conditions; this estimate to include mail as well as freight.

"Fourth. The number of naval officers and seamen required to man the ships engaged in the service which is proposed.

"Fifth. The probable cost of the service, including the pay of the officers and men employed in connection with it and all other necessary elements, such as wharfage in the cities where the ships would touch, fuel, repairs, and maintenance of every description.

"Sixth. The cost of such necessary changes as may be required to put the ships named in condition for such service, in removing unnecessary military equipment and any other changes necessary in order to carry passengers and freight safely and to adequately perform the service proposed in this resolution.

"Seventh. An expression of opinion by the department as to whether the above-named ships can be used for such purposes without impairing their usefulness for naval purposes should their prompt return to the naval service be required."

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 11, 1914.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. Referring to Senate resolution No. 317, Sixty-third Congress, second session, I have the honor to forward to your committee a report embodying the information requested.

2. It is practicable, by the use of naval vessels, to carry out the purpose indicated in the resolution, and the following vessels will be available for the service, viz, St. Louis, Charleston, Milwaukee, Columbia, Minneapolis, Salem, Chester, Buffalo, Rainbow, Ancon, Cristobal, Hector, Mars, Vulcan, Cyclops, and Neptune (or two equally good), and the Nanshan.

3. The St. Louis, Charleston, Milwaukee, Columbia, and Minneapolis are fast cruisers; the Salem and Chester are fast scout cruisers; the Buffalo and Rainbow are transports; the Ancon and Cristobal are steamers employed by the Panama Railroad Co. to be turned over to the Navy Department; and the others are naval colliers.

4. The cruisers are suitable for carrying only a small number of male passengers—15 to 20 each—and could not be fitted for carrying bulky freight without interfering materially with their military value; but they could carry the mails and a limited amount of express freight and parcels, about 150 tons each.

5. The Buffalo, Rainbow, Ancon, and Cristobal are suitable for carrying a limited number of passengers and any kind of freight; Buffalo, 20 first-class passengers and 4,000 tons of freight; Rainbow, 25 passengers and 2,500 to 3,000 tons of freight; Ancon and Cristobal, each 74 first-class and 32 steerage passengers and between 10,000 and 11,000 tons of freight. The naval colliers are not suitable for carrying any passengers, but are well adapted to a freight service; the first three carrying 6,500 to 10,000 tons each; the two of the Cyclops class 10,000 to 12,500 tons of freight and 2,900 tons of fuel oil in bulk each; and the Nanshan about 3,000 tons.

6. The distance from New York to Valparaiso via Panama and Callao is 4,666 miles, and each of the fast cruisers going at 15 knots could cover that distance, allowing 24 hours for delays incident to passage through the canal, in 13 days 23 hours, or make one round trip without stop, except at the canal, in 27 days 22 hours.

The distance from New Orleans to Valparaiso via Panama and Callao is 4,087 miles, and the time for the same vessels to make one round trip without stop, except at the canal, is 24 days 17 hours.

The distance from Panama to Valparaiso via Callao is 2,652 miles, and the same vessels can, at 15 knots, cover the distance in 7 days 9 hours, or make one round trip in 14 days 18 hours.

The other vessels are slower and will sustain a speed of 12 knots, except the Nanshan, which can be counted on for 10 knots.

7. By the use of the Charleston, St. Louis, Columbia, and Minneapolis, a fast but very expensive mail service, with accommodations for a limited number of male passengers, could be easily maintained between Panama, Guayaquil, Mollendo, and Valparaiso, with weekly sailings from Panama. A far less expensive service could be maintained by the use of the Salem, Chester, Columbia, and Minneapolis. These stops would be best for quick deliveries of mails to the South American countries on the west coast, to Argentina, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Paraguay. There is a daily railway express service from Valparaiso to Buenos Aires and Montevideo via the Trans-Andean Railway. The time from Valparaiso to Buenos Aires by rail is about 60 hours, and to Montevideo 72 hours. Allowing 4 days for the delivery of mails from New Orleans to Panama, and 11 days for delivery from Panama to Valparaiso, the mails from the United States would reach Buenos Aires in 17½ days and Montevideo in 18 days. The time from Liverpool to Buenos Aires by mail steamers running in connection with the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co is 22 days and to Montevideo 21 days, on a weekly schedule. From New York to the same ports via existing lines the time is 24 days and 23 days, respectively, with a weekly schedule. There is at the present time a weekly mail and passenger service between New Orleans and Colon. If it should be found desirable to run the mail steamers from New Orleans to Valparaiso, it could be done by the addition of another cruiser, but at very greatly increased cost. The cost of running each vessel is given in the table appended, marked "A."

8. A passenger and freight line can, in addition, be maintained between New Orleans and Valparaiso, and a freight line between New York and Valparaiso, making such ports as may be necessary, or a combination freight and passenger service and a freight service between New York and Valparaiso.

For a service from New Orleans the Buffalo, Rainbow, Ancon, and Cristobal could be used, insuring a sailing every 14 days.

In addition, a freight line can be maintained between New York and Valparaiso, using the five large colliers, which would insure a sailing every 12 days.

If the vessels mentioned above for the New Orleans trade were combined with the freighters, a mixed service could be maintained, which would insure a steamer from New York every 7 days.

The Nanshan might be useful as a freighter between Panama, Buenaventura, and Guayaquil.

9. Due to the engine room, fireroom, and bunker construction of the cruisers, a large number of men is required in the engineering department; in addition, these vessels are great coal consumers, and would have to coal both on the outward and return voyages. Since continuity and regularity of sail service would be essential, it would be necessary to maintain at some point on the west coast, preferably at Callao, either ashore or afloat, a reserve of coal. This need could, however, be easily met.

10. The personnel that would be required for the ships is as follows: Columbia, Minneapolis, Salem, and Chester, 9 commissioned and 6 warrant officers and 202 men each: Buffalo and Rainbow, 9 commissioned and 6 warrant officers and 118 men each; Ancon and Cristobal, 9 commissioned and 6 warrant officers and 135 men each; Hector, Mars, and Vulcan, 7 commissioned and 6 warrant officers and 117 men each; Cyclops and Neptune (or two others of equal capacity), 7 commissioned and 6 warrant officers and 134 men each; and the Nanshan, 7 commissioned and 6 warrant officers and 69 men; a total of 114 commissioned and 84 warrant officers and 2,002 men.

11. The cost of changes necessary to fit the vessels for the proposed service would be small. For the Rainbow, on which it is contemplated installing five additional staterooms at a cost of $2,000, $3,000 would be required; and $1,000 for each of the other vessels would probably cover the cost of changes proper. In addition, each vessel carrying passengers would need an auxiliary radio installation required by law for passenger ships. This would cost $2,000 for each vessel, and the total cost for the above vessels would be about $32,000.

12. The pay and subsistence of officers and men to man the 14 ships would be about $1,862,444, and the maintenance of the ships, other than pay and subsistence, including repairs, docking, and supplies of all kinds, would approximate $1,774,250; total, $3,636,694.

13. The probable cost of the shore establishment for operating the line is difficult to estimate at this time. This would include salaries of officers, agents, clerical force, and other personnel, terminal facilities, wharfage, port dues, rent of offices, furniture, and other expenses, and the department is making an investigation to determine this expense. It is believed, however, that it would be but a small percentage of the total cost, as Government terminal facilities will be used wherever practicable.

14. The expense of such services would, of necessity, be relatively large, due to the character of the vessels to be used and the fact that they must be kept in condition for immediate military service if required. It should be remembered, however, that there would be considerable return to the Government in mail, passenger, and freight receipts.

Retired officers or officers on the reserve list, should one be created, would be employed in the service as soon as practicable, and under such conditions the expense involved in the pay and subsistence of officers, as given in the table, should be reduced by three-fourths.

When it is considered that the men will be enlisted men in the Navy and available for service with the Navy in time of war, the actual total additional expense for personnel for 14 ships would be but $151,244.

15. Should the department be authorized to establish the service as contemplated in the resolution, it is suggested that the question of ships to be used, ports to be made, schedules, etc., be left entirely to the discretion of the department, and the department would make every effort to carry out the plan successfully. In so doing it is considered best to inaugurate the business by establishing a fast line from Panama to Valparaiso, via Callao and Mollendo, and utilize for the purpose the Columbia, Minneapolis, Salem, and Chester. This mail and passenger line, in connection with those now in existence from New York and New Orleans to Colon, would be a rapid-transit route between the United States, Peru, Bolivia, and Chile, and thence via the Trans-Andean Railway to Argentina, Uruguay, and Paraguay

It is not deemed wise to establish at the beginning a schedule that would utilize all the vessels mentioned as available. One sailing a month of freighter or passenger vessel from New York and New Orleans to Valparaiso and intermediate ports would be enough for a beginning. As business developed other vessels would be added, and sailings made more frequent, as the traffic warranted.

The Rainbow or Nanshan, or both, as the traffic might warrant, would be scheduled to ply between Panama and Guayaquil, Ecuador, via Buenaventura, Colombia. These would carry mails, passengers, and freight, and act as feeders for our freighters passing through the canal and connecting with the mail liners from New Orleans and New York

As for docks and terminal facilities, the navy yard at New Orleans is well adapted for the purpose, and the New York yard could be used until the traffic warranted renting another terminal. The cost of wharves in New Orleans would depend upon the freight handled, and would therefore be included in the freight rates. In South American ports practically all cargoes are handled by means of lighters, the cost of which would be included in the freight rates.

Although it might appear that the cost of maintenance of the four cruisers of the fast mail line from Panama to Valparaiso is excessive, this is not so apparent when considered in connection with the freighters. One is necessary to the other for developing the South American trade, and the average cost should be taken. The freighters would begin to pay for themselves at once by taking coal and oil, for which there is great demand, and returning with general freight.

16. The department sees in the plan an opportunity for a twofold advantage:

First. The opportunity for developing a large trade with South America, which is not practicable for private vessels under the United States flag.

Second. The gradual development of a large auxiliary fleet which would be necessary in time of war, and which would be built up and maintained in time of peace without cost to the Government, as it will pay for itself after having once been firmly established.

Should the development of the business warrant, the cruisers used in this service would be gradually replaced by auxiliary vessels vastly more suitable and economical for the service itself as well as for the use of the Navy in time of war.

17. The approximate cost of maintenance of the ships of the lines proposed, for beginning the service, is as follows:

1. Fast mail service from Panama to Valparaiso, using the Columbia, Minneapolis, Salem, and Chester:
Pay and subsistence of officers and men---per annum--	$597,120
Maintenance, including repairs, docking, supplies of all kinds, etc., per annum	790,800
Total	1,387,920
2. Rainbow, plying between Panama, Buenaventura, and Quayaquil:
Pay and subsistence of officers and men	118,840
Maintenance, including repairs, docking, supplies of all kinds, etc	81,300
Total	199,140
3. Monthly sailings from the terminals, New York and New Orleans, for Valparaiso and intermediate ports, would cost, on the average for each vessel engaged in the service, as follows:
Pay and subsistence of officers and men	121,160
Maintenance, including repairs, docking, supplies of all kinds, etc	100,500
Total	221,660

18. Any of the vessels mentioned for this service can be so employed without impairing their usefulness for naval purposes in any way, should their prompt return to the naval service be required.

19. In indorsing the establishment of this service the department takes occasion to state that the personnel of all vessels engaged in it should be naval officers and enlisted men of the Navy, and it will be necessary to increase the number of men at present allowed by law by the number of men required for this service.

20. The draft of a bill which would, in the opinion of the department, meet requirements is inclosed, marked "B."

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

A bill to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines, by employing such vessels of the Navy as in his discretion are available without impairment to the paramount duties of the Navy and as are necessary and appropriate, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining regular communication between the east or west coast, or both coasts, of the United States and either or both coasts of South America. The vessels so employed shall carry United States mail, passengers, and freight under such regulations and at such rate or rates as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. Such civilians, such officers of the naval auxiliary service, and such officers and enlisted men of the Navy, including officers on the retired list, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary shall be employed in the business of the said mail line or lines, and retired officers of the Navy so employed at sea or on shore shall, in all respects, be held and considered to be in an active duty status, and shall receive the pay and allowances of officers of the active list of the same rank and length of service: Provided, That officers placed on the retired list on account of wounds or disability, incident to the service, or on account of age, or after 30 years' service, shall not be ordered to such duty without their consent.

The enlisted strength of the Navy, as now or hereafter authorized by law, is hereby increased by the number of men required to man the vessels so employed, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enlist such number of men in the Navy for such terms of enlistment, not to exceed four years, as may be desirable, and to distribute the number of men so enlisted among the various ratings of the Navy.

SEC. 2. In addition to and as a part of the line of the Navy there is hereby established an active reserve list. Line officers placed on the active reserve list under the provisions of this act shall be held to be in an active duty status in all respects, except that officers on the active reserve list shall not be advanced on the active reserve list except for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle, or extraordinary heroism, when their advancement thereon for these causes shall be governed by the provisions of law governing the advancement of officers on the active list for like causes. All laws now in effect with reference to the retirement of officers from the active list are hereby extended to include officers on the active reserve list.

SEC. 3. Sections 8 and 9 of the act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," as amended by the act approved August 22, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," are so far amended that officers who hereafter volunteer or are selected for retirement as therein provided shall be held and considered to have volunteered for transfer to the active reserve list, or shall be selected for transfer to the active reserve list, respectively; and the transfer of such officers to the active reserve list in lieu of their retirement shall be made subject to the restrictions imposed by the provisions of the said sections as amended.

SEC. 4. In addition to such part of existing appropriations as may be available for the expenses of operating the line or lines herein provided for, the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose of organizing, inaugurating, and carrying on the traffic provided for in this act and in defraying the operating expenses incident thereto: Provided, That all money received for the transportation of mail, passengers, and freight, as provided in section 1 of this act, and for such other services as may be incident to the operation of the said line or lines, is hereby made available, in addition to the aforesaid sum of $100,000 herein appropriated, for expenses incident to the proper conduct of the business contemplated in this act: Provided, further, That any sum of money herein appropriated which remains unexpended at the end of the third fiscal year after the passage of this act, and at the end of each fiscal year thereafter, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

[1] Charleston and Milwaukee same as St. Louis in all respects.

[2] 74 first class; 32 steerage.

Mr. WEEKS. I introduce the bill which is recommended in the report made by the Navy Department in reply to the resolution to which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] has just made reference.

The bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether that report has been printed?

Mr. WEEKS. The report has been printed for the use of the committee.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BRISTOW submitted an amendment providing for the appointment of one clerk of class 1 in the office of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—VICTORIA A. DAVIS.

On motion of Mr. BURTON it was—

Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 3099), Sixty-third Congress, granting a pension to Victoria A. Davis, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADDRESS BY MRS. ANNIE RILEY HALE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some time since I had printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article written by Mrs. Helen Gardener on the subject of woman suffrage. Since then I have received from Mrs. Annie Riley Hale, upon the other side of the controversy, an article upon the same subject, and I have considered it fair to make the same request on her behalf. Mrs. Hale is a very bright little southern woman and has written some very interesting things. Her voice, too, is worth hearing, and I ask that her address may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

Unlike my friend the Senator from Mississippi, I have given careful perusal to this southern suffragette "campaign" document and am more than willing to stake what reputation I may have for accurate headwork upon the criticism that I find it "abounding" in pretty nearly everything else except "good, hard common sense."

Space forbids consideration of all its inanities and inconsistencies. I seize upon one only of its most flagrant offenses against good taste, namely, the appeal to the chivalry of southern men, and the comparison challenged between the southern and the western brand to be found in the 10 equal-suffrage States. The simon-pure "nerve" of this appeal compels wonder, if nothing else. Is not this whole movement for the woman ballot based on the conviction and declaration of its advocates that chivalry has failed? Do we not hear it continually asserted from suffrage platforms that it is because we can no longer trust the fathers, husbands, brothers, and sons of women to give them a square deal in legislation that we must abandon our foundational work for the race and fling ourselves into the legislative breach? Nay, my gentle suffragette; you can not both eat your cake and have it; you can not plant your feet more firmly on the old royal dais built for us by the chivalry of men and at the same time reach forth your frail hands to grasp the reins of masculine empire.

There is not enough chivalry left "to go around" now, thanks to your suffragette hikings and sex-warring activities. There has been a very perceptible diminution of the supply in this country within the past five years, and what there is should be for the women who are not finding so much fault with the "man-made laws," but giving their attention more to the woman-made men while in process of making. I for one do not mean to surrender any claim upon the chivalric consideration of men to serve any suffragette need.

Is not this wheedling talk about chivalry a sharp departure from the suffragette creed, that any attempt to wrest favors from the male creature, save by a stern "stand and deliver or get hit in the eye with the woman ballot," is in its very nature and essence immoral? Shame on you, Mrs. Gardener.

ANNIE RILEY HALE.

NEW YORK, April 7.

LOCATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 332, submitted by Mr. HITCHCOCK on the 8th instant, as modified by him, as follows:

Resolved, That the organization committee of the Federal Reserve Board be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all briefs and written arguments made by each city applying to the organization committee for the location of a Federal reserve bank, together with the poll of the banks and the reasons relied upon by the organization committee in fixing the boundaries of the reserve districts and locating the reserve cities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire whether we should not begin calling the calendar where it was left off when it was last under consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the Senate commences at the beginning each time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that that has been the practice, but to avoid unnecessary delay I ask unanimous consent that we begin calling the calendar now where we left off when it was last under consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it does not seem to me to be fair when the calendar has been called and objection made to measures that they should not be called again. I have measures on the calendar that have been called six or eight times, and I have not been able to get them up yet. It does not seem to me that because some one has objected therefore we should start away beyond those.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the request of the Senator from Nebraska. So we can go on with the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Secretary will state the bill now reached on the calendar.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 156 limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that that resolution ought to come up, but I presume the Chair would not entertain a motion at this time to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be considered only by unanimous consent prior to 1 o'clock.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to withdraw my objection to the bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the bill may go over. My colleague [Mr. THOMAS] has been very much interested in this proposition, and I do not know what action he wishes to take in relation to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution 84 providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as the next business on the calendar.

CHANGE OF INAUGURAL DATE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to be heard just a moment on that question. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection just for a few minutes.

I wish to say that this Senate joint resolution, in my judgment, is one of the most important measures before the Congress of the United States, and unless we act upon it soon it will be futile to attempt to get it through during this session. It is a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment, which provides that there shall be a meeting of the Congress on the first Monday of January following the election. There was some excuse when we had no railroad communication for fixing the time of the meeting of Congress at a late date. Congress fixed it on the first Monday of December of the year following the election, and thus, under the regular procedure, Congress does not convene in regular session until 13 months after the election of Representatives, and now of Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator from Utah will allow me a moment. I have been endeavoring for the last three months to get this measure before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not get it passed this morning.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be. I am not asking that. After the Senator hears me, if he desires, he may object. I want to ask unanimous consent that this measure may be set for a time certain, that it be made the special order for the 20th of April or the 27th of April or the 2d of May; but it does seem to me, upon a measure that is so important and so filled with the proper provisions to make good legislation, that consideration, at least, ought to be conceded.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be made a special order for April 27 of this year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for. The Secretary will state the next business on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1986) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry Fuller was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let that go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to state briefly that this a matter which has been before Congress for some years, and if there is to be legislation on the subject it is of the highest importance that it should be speedily enacted. It was presented by a committee of the volunteer officers a few weeks ago—less than two months ago—and since that time three of that committee have died. I desire to give notice now that at the very earliest opportunity I shall move to take up this bill, and I hope for its consideration. I have not objected to the consideration of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, although I knew that most of the bills would be objected to, and that they would go over without consideration, because I have not desired to hinder or prevent the passage of bills against which there are no objections, but here is a measure which ought to be considered speedily, if it is to be considered at all. I regard it as of the greatest and most urgent importance. I therefore repeat that at the very earliest opportunity I shall move to take the bill up and shall exhaust my every parliamentary right to secure its consideration and passage.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the present consideration of the bill, because it involves an expenditure of about $8,000,000. It will take time to consider it, and I do not think it ought to be considered between now and 2 o'clock.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivaties, or preparations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is not in the Chamber. He has a number of amendments to offer to the bill which the Committee on Finance have agreed to accept, and for that reason I ask that the bill go over at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (H. R. 6827) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] who reported the bill is not in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 2223) to create the Crater Lake National Park revenue fund was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter the proceeds of all leases, licenses, franchises, and permits of every kind in the Crater Lake National Park, and all other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with the park, shall be deposited in the Treasury and expended on requisitions approved by the Secretary of the Interior and under his direction in the management of the park and the construction, repairs, and improvements of the roads, trails, and bridges in the park.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. REED. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist on his request. This bill is in line with the policy which has been pursued in reference to other national parks, and the Secretary of the Interior recommends its passage.

Mr. REED. I might not object to the bill if I knew anything about it, but I decidedly object to having bills passed in this way by mere reading, without a word of explanation. If the Senator from Oregon can tell us what the bill is about, I might not object to its consideration at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It simply proposes that the small amount of money collected from privileges in the park be paid into a fund to be expended in the park. That is the substance of the bill. There is a printed report with the bill. It is the same policy which has been adopted with respect to all of the national parks.

Mr. REED. How much does this fund amount to?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In this case it amounts to very little, because there are no privileges granted, except possibly one little hotel on top of the mountain.

Mr. REED. I withdraw my objection to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the use of the revenues in the Crater Lake National Park in the management of the same, and the construction, repair, and improvement of roads, trails, and bridges in the park."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4552) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7138) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as next in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think that bill can be considered under the five-minute rule. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 11269) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On March 28 this bill was under consideration, and the first two amendments reported by the committee were agreed to. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$30," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Samuel W. McLean, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of this bill. It will take up a good deal of time, and I think we ought to run through the calendar and dispose of the unobjected bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if it is the policy to object to the pension bills on the calendar, we will not do much business by unanimous consent to-day. They have been obstructed week after week.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only want to say that so far as I am concerned I was anxious to-day that we run through the calendar and dispose of the bills on which there is no fight at all. I am not going to object to the bill after we run through the calendar once in that way. This is the first time I have made any objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; it is not the first time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bill has been once read; there are only a very few amendments, and I ask the Senator from Georgia to withdraw his objection to this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw it if the bill is not going to take any considerable time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn. The next amendment will be stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not ask to have the bill go over. I should like to make a statement about it. I have no interest in the world in it except as a matter of public business.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not, either, but I want to say that it is a case that really ought to be passed upon. It is a House bill. The bill has passed the House, and there is really a demand for its passage here at once.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw the objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather the bill would come up at some time when it can be understood.

Mr. SWANSON. I can have it understood in two minutes. It is important because the building is much needed there.

In 1910 $75,000 was appropriated for the erection of a public building for this purpose at Milwaukee. There is urgent necessity for it. The present buildings there are crowded. The department advertised for bids, and the bids were submitted. They reduced it to the smallest possible dimensions and the most economical method of construction, and the amount appropriated lacked $25,000 of being sufficient to erect the building needed according to the bids offered. The department have not been able to ask for bids again. They say it will take $40,000 to construct the building according to the space needed on the most economical lines.

If the Senator knew the condition of the public buildings in Milwaukee as disclosed by the committee, I am satisfied he would consent to this bill being passed. There is very urgent need for it. It has already been authorized. It is impossible to construct the building unless this additional sum is granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this bill is to increase the appropriation for buildings at Milwaukee in order to house goods and merchandise imported into Milwaukee from foreign countries. I would rather it would go over until we can understand it. I do not think Milwaukee is a very large importing port.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. BURTON. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DEPOSIT OF POSTAL FUNDS.

The bill (H. R. 7967) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah not to object to the consideration of that bill. He did so once before, and said he would not object to it again.

The bill simply does this: Under the postal savings bank law as it now is, the greatest amount that can be received from any one individual is $500; the greatest amount that can be received during any month from any one individual is $100. The amendment proposed is in effect that the greatest amount that can be received from any individual shall be $2,000, and that he can deposit that all at one time or from time to time. That is the only change proposed. The department asked that the limit be taken off altogether, but the committee, as shown by the report, were rather of the opinion that we had better go into the thing gradually. To allow a deposit of $2,000 certainly can not injure any bank or other legitimate industry.

The present limit of $500 has this effect. Of course the history of this legislation shows that it was enacted for the purpose of getting deposits of laboring men, foreigners who were not accustomed to our system of banking, and were not acquainted with the standing or financial responsibility of the banks. Without some bank operated by the Government, they would send their earnings abroad; they would send them back home. The department has found that unless they can deposit as much as they choose to deposit they are unwilling to deposit a part and return the balance, so the result is that they return it all. It is thought by the committee, however, that if the amount be limited to $2,000, that will accommodate and take care of all such deposits.

I hope the Senator will allow the bill to be considered, and if there is objection to it let it be argued out. The provision is a very plain one. There is nothing involved in it except what I have stated, and it can not require very much or very long discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a Senator out of the Chamber at present who is interested in this question and wanted to discuss it when it came before the Senate, as I told the Senator from Florida. I have not had a chance to speak to him in relation to the bill since talking with the Senator from Florida.

I wish to say, as to the deposits in the western banks, that they are not made by foreigners. They are made generally by American citizens. I have not heard any complaint as to the present limit of $500. It may be that in some parts of this country men desire to deposit money in the postal savings bank because of the rate of interest paid in their locality by the savings banks; but that is not the case in the West.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that, Mr. President. Of course, there are many sections or portions of the country where it might not be of much benefit. That would be true, I think, in my State and in the Senator's State. On the other hand, there are great communities where the laboring men are made up very largely of foreign-born population, and it is to reach those classes that it is proposed to amend the existing law.

I will say to the Senator that this bill has been upon the calendar since the 9th of March. I have been sitting here anxiously waiting for an opportunity to get it up. Two or three requests have been made to take it up by unanimous consent, and objection has been made. Mr. President, is it 1 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is 1 o'clock, and——

Mr. BRYAN. I move——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 4405, the special order. It will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is not in order to lay the so-called radium bill before the Senate at this time. I desire, if the Chair pleases to hear me, to be heard very briefly upon the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that some other duties so engross my attention to-day that I will not be able to remain even to hear him discuss the point of order which he has now raised. I was going to ask, in view of that situation of affairs, that the matter be continued over until to-morrow at the same hour, without prejudice, if that course will be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to its going over until to-morrow.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to Senate bill 4405 going over until to-morrow, without prejudice, and the question then being settled?

Mr. SMOOT. With the point of order pending.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the point of order be pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the Chair wants it settled as well as everybody.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall not object to the bill going over. I am just as anxious to have it thoroughly thrashed out as is the Senator from Montana, who has charge of the bill. I will be glad to proceed to-morrow or at any other time and to afford him every opportunity for a vote on it, as far as I am concerned, and I am satisfied that others will. But the point of order, of course, should be decided. I have no objection to the bill going over, with the point of order pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, then, until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Florida permit me a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In regard to the bill on the calendar which is now under consideration, I will say to the Senator from Florida that I have received several letters, which I have not now at hand, from officials of the savings banks of my State making a very earnest protest against this proposed legislation. I want a little time to look at the matter before the bill is finally acted upon. I have no disposition to obstruct it at all, but I did not think it would come up to-day. In fact, I have been so busy of late that I have not attended to some matters that I ordinarily would, and this is one of them. If the Senator will permit the bill to go over, I think it would be wise to do so. I am very sure the bill could not be passed under the five-minute rule to-day.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am anxious to accommodate the Senator from New Hampshire, but the truth is that the Post Office Department has been insistent for a month that this bill should be called up. It has said that the necessity for it exists from the fact that at present, because of the small amount allowed to be deposited at any one time, the act is hampering the administration of the postal laws.

I want to be agreeable to the Senator from New Hampshire, but it does seem to me that all the objections which could be urged can be stated to-day as well as at any other time. I understand that the savings banks officials objected to the bill as passed by the House. The bill as passed by the House placed no limit upon the deposits.
